

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

COURT RULES

SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS OF WEST VIRGINIA*

Amendments in Force February 1, 1910

RULE IV.

Argument Docket.

1. How Arranged. Thirty days before the first day of each regular term, the clerk shall prepare a list of the cases then ready to be heard in the grand division in which the next regular term is to be held, and distribute the printed lists as provided in section 20 of chapter 157 of the Acts of 1882, and in arranging the argument docket he shall allow for each circuit not less than as many days as one-fifth of the number of open cases on the docket of such circuit, but when there are not more than three cases on the argument docket from any one circuit, cases from another circuit may be set for hearing on the same day.

2. When Notice is Necessary. In all cases (except those of felony) when the record has been printed since the last preceding regular term of court, the party desiring a hearing must give notice to the opposite party of his intention to insist upon a hearing at the next regular term, at least thirty days before the first day of such term, and no case will be placed on the argument list and deemed ready for hearing until the second term after the record has been printed unless the notice above mentioned has been given and returned to the clerk's office thirty days before the term.

RULE V.

Briefs.

1. Time of Filing. In any case on appeal or writ of error, the counsel for the appellant or plaintiff in error at least twenty days, and counsel for the appellee or defendant in error at least ten days, before a case is called for hearing, shall file with the clerk of this court not less than ten copies of a printed brief, one of which copies shall, upon request, be furnished to each of the counsel engaged upon the opposite side. All reply and supplemental briefs shall be filed at least five days before a case is called for hearing, and not later, unless by consent of counsel.

It is also desired by the court that counsel upon each side will furnish promptly to counsel on the opposing side their respective briefs as soon as printed, but their doing so will not obviate the requirement of this rule as to filing copies in the office of the clerk, and it is recommended that the printed brief shall correspond in size of page with the printed record and bear the same docket number.

RULE XII.

Rehearing.

1. How Obtained. No petition for a rehearing will be entertained unless presented within the term at which the decision is announced, nor in any case later than thirty days after the date of the decision of the case in which it is presented (unless as otherwise authorized by law), and no rehearing will be allowed unless one of the judges who concurred in the decision shall be dissatisfied with the conclusion reached, and no petition for a rehearing will be entertained by the court in any case unless the reasons therefor are printed and filed with the petition; but if the decision complained of is announced within fifteen days of the close of the term, the printing may be dispensed with. When a rehearing is allowed, the court may fix the time and place for reargument and resubmission, notice of which shall be given by the clerk to the attorneys of record, but, in case it fails to fix such time and place, the clerk shall enter the case upon the docket as if it had never been heard.

RULE XIII.

Index to Records.

1. Must be Indexed. In making transcripts of records for appeal and writs of error, the clerks of any court making such transcript shall annex thereto a complete index, giving pages of the record on which its chief component parts are to be found, including the pages where the deposition of each witness appears in such record.

*For rules as previously amended, see 57 S. E. xvii.

THE SOUTHEASTERN REPORTER

(153 N. C. 608)

MILLER et ux. v. CAROLINA MONAZITE CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1910.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 153*)—PLEADING.

In an action on a contract for the sale of a mineral interest in land, a denial in the answer of the execution of the contract is sufficient to protect the defendant from liability under the statute of frauds, and he is not required to plead the statute specially.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 367; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 662*)—RECORD—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A statement by the court in the record that there was no evidence of the execution of the contract sued on must be accepted as true by the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2851; Dec. Dig. § 662.*]

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 115*)—MEMORANDUM OF SALE—SIGNATURES—"PARTY TO BE CHARGED."

The vendee in a contract of sale is the "party to be charged" thereon, within the meaning of the statute of frauds, and he can plead such statute to defeat an action by the vendor on such contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-246; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6513.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; M. H. Justice, Judge.

Action by Jesse Miller and wife against the Carolina Monazite Company and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

S. J. Ervin and J. M. Mull, for appellants.
Avery & Ervin, for appellees.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover of the defendant the purchase money for certain mineral interests in the land which is described in the pleadings, and which the plaintiff alleges he contracted to sell to the defendant. It was contended by the latter that what the plaintiff alleges was the contract to sell the mineral interests was merely an option or a unilateral contract, which was never signed nor executed by the defendant, and that the time limited in the option for the payment of the purchase money had expired. Whether it was an option or a contract to sell is not material to the decision of the question which was argued before us and which is presented by the record, as it appears in the statement of the case on appeal that no proof of the execution of the contract by the defendant was shown, nor attempted to be shown. As the defendant denied the execution of the contract, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to introduce evidence to the effect that the contract had been signed by the defendant, as a denial of the execution of the contract in the answer was sufficient to protect the defendant from liability under the statute of frauds, and it was not necessary to plead the statute specially. Morrison v. Baker, 81 N. C. 76; Browning v. Berry, 107 N. C. 231, 12 S. E. 195, 10 L. R. A. 728; Haun v. Burrell, 119 N. C. 544, 26 S. E. 111; Winders v. Hill, 144 N. C. 614, 57 S. E. 456. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the court, on motion of the defendant, ordered a judgment of nonsuit to be entered under the statute, upon the ground that the execution of the contract by the defendant had not been shown. In the case of Winders v. Hill, supra, we held that as the defendant had taken issue with the plaintiff, concerning the execution of the contract, by denying the allegation to that effect in the complaint, he could avail himself of the statute of frauds without specially pleading it, as it had been settled by numerous adjudications of this court, which are cited in the opinion, that if a contract is denied, or a contract different from that alleged is set up, or if the contract is admitted and the statute of frauds is specially relied on by plea, or now by answer, parol evidence of the contract is incompetent, and, as the contract cannot be proved, it cannot be enforced.

The court states as a fact in the record that there was no evidence of the execution of the contract by the defendant, and we must accept this as true. An examination of the testimony which is set out in the case will show that there was, in effect, no sufficient evidence that the defendant had executed the instrument which had been lost, even if it contained a contract between the parties and was not a mere option to buy the mineral interests in the land.

It has been settled by this court that in a suit against the vendee to recover the purchase money agreed to be paid for land, or any interest therein, he is the party to be charged within the meaning of the statute of frauds, and can plead the same in order to defeat the plaintiff's recovery; the party to be charged within the meaning of the statute being the person against whom it is sought to enforce the obligation of the contract. Hall v. Misenheimer, 137 N. C. 183, 49 S. E. 104, 107 Am. St. Rep. 474.

There was no error in the ruling of the court, and we affirm the judgment.

Affirmed.

(152 N. C. 608)

BOWMAN v. WARD et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1910.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 119*)—JUDGMENT—INVALIDITY.

Where neither the summons by which an action in justice's court was begun, nor the attachment subsequently issued, was served personally or by publication, a judgment rendered several months after the return day of the summons and attachment was void; the proceeding having been discontinued before the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 375; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 128*)—INJUNCTION—ATTACK ON JUDGMENT.

Where a judgment of a justice of the peace is void, the court will restrain a sale of land under execution on the judgment, at the suit of one acquiring the land before the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 402; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Henderson County; M. H. Justice, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Bowman against W. C. Ward and another. From a judgment dissolving a temporary restraining order, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Brown Shepherd, Geo. A. Shuford. and C. F. Toms, for appellant.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff sues to restrain the selling of her land under execution, upon a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace and docketed in the superior court of Henderson county, in a cause entitled W. C. Ward v. A. C. Peacock. Plaintiff claims under a deed from said Peacock dated September 2, 1909. It appears that on March 29, 1909, the aforesaid action before the justice of the peace was commenced by issuing a summons returnable March 30th. This summons was not served, as appears by the return on it. A warrant of attachment was issued, returnable March 30th, and on April 2d it was levied on the land by defendant Blackwell, sheriff. No service of the summons or of the attachment has ever been made, either personally or by publication, and no publication made. On September 30, 1909, after plaintiff had purchased the land and had her deed recorded, the justice rendered final judgment against Peacock, although it appears of record that no publication or service of any kind has been made either of the summons or attachment. The judgment was docketed, execution issued and levied upon the land conveyed to plaintiff, and the same advertised for sale. His honor denied the injunction upon the ground that the proceeding was void on its face. We agree with him that the judgment is void, because it appears affirmatively upon the face of the record that no service personally or by publication has ever been made, either of the summons or attachment. The proceeding was discontinued before the judgment was rendered. Etheridge v. Woodley, 83 N. C. 11; Best v. British & American Co., 128 N. C. 352, 38 S. E. 923; Penniman v. Daniel, 91 N. C. 431, 20 S. E. 336; Finch v. Slater (this term) 67 S. E. 264. To same effect are decisions in other states having statutes similar to ours. Taylor v. Troncoso, 76 N. Y. 599; Dist. Co. v. Ruser, 61 Hun, 625, 16 N. Y. Supp. 50, 51; Mojarietta v. Saenz, 58 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 505; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 2 S. D. 379, 50 N. W. 834; Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526. We think, however, his honor should have restrained the sale, as the plaintiff is entitled to have the question finally determined as to the liability of her land for the judgment, and not be made to take the chance of losing it by forced sale under execution. If her land is liable for the judgment, she should have the opportunity to pay it after a judicial determination. This question is fully and lucidly discussed by Mr. Justice Manning in the recent case of Crockett v. Bray, 151 N. C. 617, 66 S. E. 666, and need not be further discussed now.

Let the injunction issue from the superior court of Henderson county enjoining the sale. Reversed.

(152 N. C. 537)

WILSON LUMBER CO. v. HUTTON et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1910.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—COURSES AND DISTANCES—NATURAL BOUNDARY.

Courses and distances must, as a general rule, give way to a call for a natural boundary, because a natural boundary, if fixed, is unchangeable, and more likely to be the true call than courses and distances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—COURSES AND DISTANCES—"NATURAL BOUNDARY."

A well known and established line of an adjacent tract is a "natural boundary" within the rule that courses and distances give way to a natural boundary, because the line is more certain than course and distance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4664, 4665.]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—COURSES AND DISTANCES—"NATURAL BOUNDARY."

Where the call in a grant was for 100 poles to a stake in a boundary line not known to the surveyor or grantee, the call for distance would not yield to the call for the stake, where to do so would make the distance 274 poles, especially where, as a matter of fact, the line had never been run to the stake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 38; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—COURSES AND DISTANCES—ACREAGE.

Under Revisal 1905, §§ 1716, 1734, requiring the surveyor to make two plots and record thereon the courses and distances, and providing that one shall be attached to the grant and the other filed in the office of the Secretary of State, the plots are evidence; and, where the plots, the courses, and distances and the acreage correspond, they control, and there will be no attempt to give a preference to a call for a line not known by the surveyor or the grantee.

5. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—ACREAGE—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

The rule that acreage is usually postponed to other descriptions in a grant is subject to the exception that quantity becomes important where the location or boundary is doubtful, and in doubtful cases quantity may have weight to aid the description, and in some cases may even have a controlling effect.

6. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—ACREAGE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where the courses and distances in a grant not actually surveyed agree with the quantity described as conveyed, and with the plot attached to the grant, the quantity will be given weight, and will not be discarded where to do so the quantity would be increased 14 times by giving effect to calls for lines.

7. BOUNDARIES (§ 36*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where on an issue as to a boundary the grantee in a state grant testified that he entered only 50 acres, and had never claimed any more, a tax list was competent to show that he gave in the tract for taxation 50 acres to corroborate his testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 160-162, 164, 166-176; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

8. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—COURSES AND DISTANCES.

Where there is more than one description in a deed, and they turn out on the evidence not to agree, the description which is the most certain must be adopted, and course and distance from a given point is certain in itself, and will not be departed from, unless there is something else which proves that the course and distance given was stated by mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

9. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—COURSES AND DISTANCES.

Where a grantee in a state grant did not know, at the time of taking out the grant, where a line called for in the grant was, and there was no general reputation at the time of its location, the call for the line would not displace course and distance, though it can be ascertained mathematically.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 38-40; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Hoke and Walker, JJ., dissenting:

Appeal from Superior Court, Caldwell County; Council, Judge.

Action by the Wilson Lumber Company against one Hutton and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jones & Whisnant and Finley & Hendren, for appellant. Mark Squires, W. O. Newland, M. N. Harshaw, E. B. Cline, and J. T. Perkins, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. On June 30, 1868, the state issued to John Crisp a grant for "50 acres of land" in Caldwell county, described as follows: "On dividing ridge between John's river and Mulberry creek, adjoining his own land. Beginning on a black pine near the flatrock, and runs N. 35 degrees W. 100 poles to a stake in Daniel Moore's line; then W. 80 poles to a stake in Jesse Gragg's line, then S. 35 degrees E. 100 poles to stake in his own line; then E. with said line to the beginning." The beginning corner of said grant is not in dispute, but is admitted to be at the black pine "A," as shown on the map. The line of said grant, if run according to the contention of the plaintiff—that is, by course and distance—would embrace 50 acres. If run according to the contention of the defendants, the grant would cover about 700 acres, or 14 times as much as was granted. The grantee, John Crisp, testifies that he took out a grant for only 50 acres, with the view of adding a flat cove to his adjoining land. He stated that he never claimed more than 50 acres; that he had listed the land and paid taxes for only 50 acres; that he paid the state for only 50 acres, and in conveying it he only conveyed it for 50 acres. At the time the survey was made for the grant, no lines were in fact run, and the land was plotted merely from the courses and distances recited in the entry and grant. The defendants contend that course and distance should be disregarded, and the acreage also, and all the above facts, and that the first line should be extended to Daniel Moore's line, though this would be 274 poles instead of 100 poles, as stated in the grant; that instead of the second call in the grant, 80 poles W. to a stake in Jesse Gragg's line, "the second line should be run S. 35 degrees W. 319½ poles to a corner of Jesse Gragg's line," though the evidence is that this corner was in dispute at the time that the grant was taken out, and therefore not established. In running this second line as contended by the defendants, it would cross through two older tracts of lands which belonged at the time of the survey to Daniel Moore, showing that the surveyor did not know where either Moore's or Gragg's line was. Indeed, John Crisp expressly so testified. The third line according to the grant is S. 35° E. 100 poles to a stake in Crisp's own line. Running by this course and distance, it would strike a point in Crisp's line which would run thence east to the beginning. But run as contended by the defendants, it would cut in half another tract of Daniel Moore's, and run 338 poles instead of 100 poles, as called for in the grant. The fourth line according to the grant would be with Crisp's line east to the beginning. But if run according to the defendants' contention, instead of running east 80 poles to the beginning (as called for in the grant), the line would run five different courses with Crisp's line, and in all about 400 poles, to get back to the beginning. Instead of the 50 acres granted Crisp, the defendants would get 700 acres, 650 of which the plaintiffs have paid the state for, and for only 50 of which the grantor of the defendants paid the state.

It is true that the general rule is that course and distance must give way to a call for a natural boundary, and that the line of an adjacent tract, if well known and established, is a natural boundary. But this is because such natural boundary is usually considered more certain, being at a fixed and definite place, if "established and known," and therefore unchangeable and more likely to be the true call in the deed than course and distance which may, by inadvertence, be incorrectly written down. The reason of the law is the life thereof. "Ratione cessante, cessat et lex." The rule of construction which ordinarily prefers the call for the boundary of another tract to course and distance is based upon the reason that the former is usually more certain than the latter, and applies only when the boundary of the other tract is established and well known.

It will be noted that the first call in this grant is for 100 poles, whereas to go to the Daniel Moore line would be 274 poles. In Brown v. House, 116 N. C. 859, 21 S. E. 938, and s. c., 118 N. C. 870, 24 S. E. 786, the court refused to extend a 20-mile line $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles beyond the distance called for, because of a call for a stake "in Stokely Donelson's line" (an extension of one-thirtieth of the distance). Here the defendants asked to extend the distance from 100 poles to 274 poles, and there is not the further provision which there was in Brown v. House, "and thence with Daniel Moore's line." Then, in this case, there is the evidence that as a matter of fact the line was never run to Daniel Moore's line, and that neither the grantee nor the surveyor knew where it was. The call is not even for a monument or a marked tree in Daniel Moore's line, but only for a stake.

If Daniel Moore's line was established at that time, it was not known to the surveyor and grantee where it was, and hence it was not established so far as they were concerned.

The second call of the grant, "80 poles W. to a stake in Jesse Gragg's line," cannot possibly be filled by running from a stake, an unknown point, "S. W. $319\frac{1}{2}$ poles to Gragg's corner" (a point which was in dispute and unsettled at the time of the survey), and cutting in half a tract of Daniel Moore's to do so. The third call in the grant, "S. 35 degrees E. 100 poles to a stake in John Crisp's line," cannot be filled by running from a disputed point of Gragg's line "338 poles to a stake in John Crisp's line." Nor can the last call, "then E. with Crisp line to the beginning" (which by the course and distance in the grant would be 80 poles, for the grant by the plot attached thereto and the acreage is a parallelogram), be filled by running five different courses 400 poles to the beginning, as the defendants contend.

The plot which is attached to the grant shows a parallelogram 80 poles by 100 poles, with boundaries and acreage exactly corresponding to those set out in the grant. The statute (Revisal 1905, § 1716) requires the surveyor to make two plots, and record thereon the courses, distances, and water courses crossed, and section 1734 requires that one of these plots shall be attached to the grant, and the other filed in the Secretary of State's office. This makes the plots evidence. Redmond v. Mullenax, 113 N. C. 512, 18 S. E. 708; Higdon v. Rice, 119 N. C. 631, 26 S. E. 256. When these plots, the courses, and distances and the acreage all correspond, as they do in this case, they are more certain than the wild result which would be obtained by departing from them in attempting to give a preference to the call for Daniel Moore's line, when there was no actual survey, and the surveyor and grantee did not know where it was.

While acreage is usually postponed to other descriptions, there are cases in which the court has held that it was a potent, if not a conclusive, factor. It was so held in Cox v. Cox, 91 N. C. 256. In Baxter v. Wilson, 95 N. C. 137, it was held that the number of acres in some cases may have a controlling effect. In Peebles v. Graham, 128 N. C. 227, 39 S. E. 27, the court says: "The general rule is that the quantity of land stated to be conveyed will not be considered in determining locations or boundaries. But there is a well-known exception to this rule that is as firmly established as the rule itself. And that is this: Where the location or boundary is doubtful, quantity becomes important. Brown v. House, 116 N. C. 866 [21 S. E. 938]; Cox v. Cox, 91 N. C. 256." The court further said, quoting from Mayo v. Blount, 23 N. C. 283, "a perfect description, which fully ascertains the corpus, is not to be defeated by the addition of further and false descriptions." Certainly no stronger case for the application of this principle can be found than in this, where the courses and distances given in the grant of the tract which was not actually surveyed are found to agree exactly with the quantity of 50 acres described as conveyed, and with the plot attached to the grant, and where to discard them would increase the quantity of land to 14 times that for which the state was paid.

In Brown v. House, 116 N. C. 866, 21 S. E. 938, where to extend the line to a stake in the boundary of another tract which was called for would have increased two to three times the acreage stated in the grant (which also corresponded with the acreage obtained by following the courses and distances), the court refused to discard course and distance and follow the call for a stake in the boundary of another tract "and thence with such boundary." In the same case on rehearing (118 N. C. 870, 24 S. E. 786) the court reaffirmed its ruling, and cited Harry v. Graham, 18 N. C. 76, 27 Am. Dec. 226, "where the distance called for gave out 30 poles short of the line of the other tract, the court refused to extend the line 30 poles, and held that it must terminate at the end of the distance called for." It also cited Carson v. Burnett, 18 N. C. 546, 30 Am. Dec. 143, which held that "the course and distance called for must control unless there is another call more definite and certain than course and distance," and cited Kissam v. Gaylord, 44 N. C. 116, Spruill v. Davenport, 44 N. C. 134, Cansler v. Fite, 50 N. C. 424, and Mizell v. Simmons, 79 N. C. 182, all to the same effect. The facts of this case are entirely different from those in Whitaker v. Cover, 140 N. C. 280, 52 S. E. 581, which recognizes merely the general rule, which is not denied, but to which the facts make this case an exception. The tax list for the year 1873 was competent to show that John Crisp gave in the tract of land for taxation for 50 acres, and to corroborate his testimony that he entered only 50 acres, and had never claimed any more.

The plaintiff asked the court to charge:

"(1) If there be more than one description in the deed or grant, and they turn out upon evidence not to agree, that is to be adopted which is the most certain. Course and distance from a given point is certain description in itself, and therefore not to be departed from, unless there be something else which proves the course and distance stated in the deed or grant was thus stated by mistake. Harry v. Graham, 18 N. C. 80 [27 Am. Dec. 226].

"(2) If the jury shall find from the evidence that the grantee at the time of taking out the grant did not know where the Moore line was, and there was no general reputation at the time of its location, the call for such line would not displace course and distance, although it can now be ascertained mathematically, because it does not furnish as probable and rational evidence as course and distance; it would be appealing from evidence, certain to a common intent, to a thing altogether unknown to the parties at the time. Carson v. Burnett, 18 N. C. 558 [30 Am. Dec. 143].

"(3) If the jury shall find from the evidence that at the time of making the survey and taking out the grant, the location of the Daniel Moore line was unknown to the grantee, John Crisp, and there was no general reputation of such location, although John Crisp may have known that Daniel Moore had land somewhere in that direction, and may have supposed the line of the same to be at the end of 100 poles from the black pine, whereas, as has been since ascertained, it is 274 poles to Daniel Moore's line, then the court charges you that the course and distance is more certain than the call for Daniel Moore's line, and the termination of the first line would be at the end of 100 poles marked 'Chestnut Oak' on the map."

"(8) In doubtful cases, quantity may have weight over circumstances in aid of the description, and in some cases may have a controlling effect.

"(9) The first call in defendants' grant being N. 35° W. 100 poles to stake in Daniel Moore's line, and the distance from the point of beginning being nearly three times as far, or 274 poles, coupled with the testimony of John Crisp that at the time of the survey no line was actually run, except for the distance of a few poles, and that he did not know where the Daniel Moore line was, the jury are instructed that this call is too vague and uncertain to vary the distance called for in the grant, and the first line should terminate where the 100 poles give out.

"(10) The second call in defendants' grant being west 80 poles to a stake in Jesse Gragg's line, and Jesse Gragg's line being unknown at the time, and it being necessary, in order to reach any line of Jesse Gragg's from a point where defendants claim their first line should run, to change this course and distance from due W. to S. 35° W., or almost run at right angles, and to run 319½ poles instead of 80 poles, or nearly four times as far, and so doing to cross the lines of older grants twice, the jury are instructed that this call is too vague and uncertain to vary the course and distance called for in defendants' grant, and that defendants' second line should run 80 poles W. as called for in the grant.

"(11) The third call in defendants' grant being S. 35° E. 100 poles to stake in his own line, and it being necessary, in order to reach the nearest point in his own line, to run 338 poles instead of 100 poles, or more than three times as far, and in so doing again cross the line of an older tract, providing the line is run from a point in Jesse Gragg's line where defendants claim their second line terminates, the jury are instructed that this call is too vague and uncertain, to vary the course and distance called for in the defendants' grant, and the defendants' third line should run S. 33° E. 100 poles as called for in the grant from a point 80 poles W. of the point marked 'Chestnut Oak' on the map.

"(12) To vary the course and distance as called for in defendants' grant, so as to increase the distance of the first line from 100 poles to 274 poles, to change the course of the second line from due west to S. 28° W., or nearly turn at right angles, and to increase the distance of said line from 80 poles to 319½ poles, or nearly four times as far, to increase the distance of the third line from 100 poles to 338 poles, with the result that the lineal measurement of defendants' fourth line, or southern boundary thereof, is practically 354 poles instead of 80 poles, said southern boundary being changed from a line 80 poles long running due east to an irregular line, and with the further result that the quantity of land embraced in defendants' grant would be increased from 50 acres to 700 acres, or practically 14 times the amount called for in the grant, such a variation from course and distance is so great as to shock probability, to sacrifice the certain for the uncertain; and the jury are instructed that the boundaries of defendants' grant are to be located with reference to the courses and distances named therein."

In failing or refusing to give above prayers, there was error.

HOKE, J. (dissenting). As I understand and interpret the testimony it shows that both the lines of the Daniel Moore tract and of the Jesse Gragg tract called for as indicating the termini of two of the lines of defendants' grant were fixed and established; and, where this is true, our decisions have been well-nigh uniform to the effect that such calls as a rule will control course and distance, and applying this generally accepted principle, I am of opinion that according to our precedents, the case was correctly tried below, and the judgment should be affirmed.

WALKER, J., concurs in dissenting opinion.

FOY v. BLADES LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1910.)

1. ESTOPPEL (§ 77*)—CLAIMS UNDER DEED.

Where defendant obtained possession of certain land, or cut timber therefrom by virtue of deeds from plaintiff, which defendant had fraudulently procured, defendant was bound in good faith to surrender possession to plaintiff on the deeds being declared fraudulent, and, not having done so, could not contest plaintiff's title, even if defendant was not estopped by merely receiving the deeds from plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 198-208; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 161*)—FRAUD OF AGENT.

Where defendant's agent obtained deeds to certain land from plaintiff by fraud for defendant's benefit, defendant, while retaining the benefit of the agent's fraud, could not assail plaintiff's title to the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 617; Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

3. TRESPASS (§ 67*)—CUTTING TIMBER—FRAUD—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for wrongfully cutting timber from land which plaintiff alleged he had been induced by the fraud of defendant's agent to convey to defendant, whether defendant obtained the deeds fraudulently held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

4. ESTOPPEL (§ 29*)—DEEDS—GRANTEES.

Where plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of certain land, sold to the defendant a restricted interest therein, to wit, the standing timber of a given dimension, and defendant bought the timber in recognition of plaintiff's ownership of the land, both claimed under a common source, which precluded defendant from denying plaintiff's title.

Appeal from Superior Court, Jones County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by W. F. Foy against the Blades Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

T. D. Warren and Simmons, Ward & Allen, for appellant. W. W. Clark and Moore & Dunn, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover $25,000, as damages for unlawfully and wrongfully cutting and removing from his land a large quantity of trees, wood, and lightwood. The plaintiff alleges that on May 27, 1904, he executed to the defendant a deed for a part of said lands, and on October 21, 1904, he executed a contract, in the form of a deed, to the defendant, by which, for the nominal consideration of $1 and the further consideration of $1 per 1,000 feet for all timber cut and delivered by the defendant, he sold to the defendant all the timber on the other tract of land described in the pleadings, above the size of 12 inches at the base when cut, and which was then, or which may be during the next 10 years, standing and growing on said land. The timber was to be cut within 10 years unless the time was extended. Rights of way over and through said land and all other lands of the plaintiff were granted, with the right to build any structure, railroad, or tramways for the purpose of cutting and removing the timber.

In 1907 the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant, and in his complaint alleged that the said deeds were obtained from him under false and fraudulent representations of the defendant's agent, to the effect that the lands which the plaintiff claimed to own did not contain the number of acres set forth in said deeds, to wit, 437½ acres, but only 125 acres; that the plaintiff was ignorant as to the number of acres in the said tracts of land, and the defendant, by its agent, taking advantage of the plaintiff's said ignorance, by the said false and fraudulent representations, and by other false and fraudulent representations then and there made, induced the plaintiff to execute the said deeds to the defendant; that the said agent also falsely and fraudulently represented, in the manner aforesaid, that the defendant did not own but 125 acres of the said land, and that taking advantage of the ignorance of the plaintiff, as to the extent of his ownership, and well knowing that the representations made by him as to the ownership and the acreage, and the other representations then and there made, were false, and the plaintiff really owned about 437½ acres, unlawfully and wrongfully induced the plaintiff to execute the said deeds to the defendant. The plaintiff, in his said complaint, prayed that the deeds be declared fraudulent and void and that they be adjudged to be canceled. The defendants denied the material allegations of the complaint, and the issues raised by the pleadings were submitted to the jury, as follows: (1) Was the deed from the plaintiff to the defendant, dated May 27, 1904, procured by misrepresentation and fraud, as alleged in the complaint? (2) Was the deed from the plaintiff to the defendant, dated October 21, 1904, procured by misrepresentation and fraud, as alleged in the complaint? The jury, for their verdict, answered the first issue, "Yes," and the second issue, "Yes," and thereupon the court adjudged the said deeds to be null and void, and that they be canceled. There was evidence in the case tending to show that the said deeds covered the land described in the complaint in this action, and that the defendant cut the timber on the said land and removed the same therefrom after the said deeds were executed.

At the close of the plaintiff's evidence, the court entered a judgment of nonsuit, on the motion of the defendant, upon the ground that the plaintiff did not show any title or right of possession to the land, or any ownership of the timber thereon, by estoppel or otherwise, and this was the question presented and argued before us. We think that there was some evidence upon which the plaintiff might have recovered, and that he was entitled to have the same submitted to the jury, in order that they might find the facts. Let it be conceded, for the sake of argument and for the present, that the defendant was not estopped by merely receiving the deeds from the plaintiff. Averill v.

Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 180. It sufficiently appears in the case, we think, that it obtained the possession, or cut the trees from the land, by virtue of the deeds which it had fraudulently procured from the plaintiff, and good faith requires that the defendant should surrender the possession of the land to the plaintiff and not be permitted to contest his title until he has done so, as the deeds through which he obtained possession of the land have been set aside and canceled, because of the false and fraudulent representations of defendant's agent that the plaintiff was not the owner of the land claimed by him, and the jury found, and the court has adjudged in the former suit between the same parties, that the said representations were false and fraudulent, and that the plaintiff was, in fact, as between him and the defendant, the owner of the land described in his complaint. It would be inequitable for the defendant to obtain possession of land or the permission or right to cut trees thereon and remove the same for the purpose of profit, upon the false and fraudulent representation of its agent, and then be allowed to contest the title of the plaintiff to the land or the trees, and continue to hold the possession or right thus fraudulently acquired. Assuming even that no estoppel is created, as against the grantee, by the mere execution of the deeds, even if thereunder the defendant entered upon the land and cut the trees, it appears that the deeds were procured by a false and fraudulent representation. The question of the plaintiff's ownership of the trees cut by the defendant was directly involved in the issues submitted to the jury in the former suit in this way. If the plaintiff was not the owner, then the representation was not false and fraudulent, but true; but, if he was the owner, then the verdict was right, and the representation was false and fraudulent. As the deeds have been canceled, it would be permitting the defendant to take advantage of its own fraud and wrongful act to permit it to assail the plaintiff's title until it had surrendered the possession which it had obtained by the same fraud of its agent, for which it is responsible. Whether the verdict and judgment in the former suit constitute an estoppel of record as to the ownership of the land, we need not decide; but we think there was some evidence in this case that the possession of the land was wrongfully obtained by the defendant through its agent's acts, and that it is under a duty to surrender the possession to the plaintiff, and is liable for any damages which the plaintiff may show he sustained by the cutting of the timber. Whether the defendant may show, in reduction of the damages, that the plaintiff is not the owner of the land or the trees, is a question which may arise at the next trial; but it is not presented now. It will depend somewhat upon the nature of the findings in the other suit and the conclusiveness of the verdict and judgment therein upon the plaintiff.

There is some evidence in this case, fit to be considered by the jury, that the plaintiff was induced by the representations of the defendant's agent to execute the deeds, surrender the possession of the land, and permit the defendant to cut the timber. To allow the defendant now to dispute the plaintiff's right to the possession and to damages, when he gained possession in such a way, would be as inequitable as to permit a tenant to deny his landlord's title. Dills v. Hampton, 92 N. C. 566. It may be true that the two cases are not strictly analogous in law, as, in the case of landlord and tenant, there is the relation of tenure, and the tenant owes fealty to his landlord; but he acquires his possession by means of the lease, and the same principle of morality is common to both cases. As we are reviewing a judgment of nonsuit, we leave open and undecided the question whether the defendant can show in diminution of damages, or for any other purpose, that the plaintiff did not have the title, either by showing title in another or in itself. We do not think the defendant has succeeded in its attempt to show title in itself. The evidence is too vague and uncertain and lacks the probative force which entitles it to be considered by the jury. Byrd v. Express Co., 139 N. C. 273, 51 S. E. 851. It has not shown an adverse and continuous possession of seven years by Rebecca Oldfield under color of title.

It may be that the jury will find, upon the evidence introduced at the next trial, that the defendant did not acquire possession by fraudulently obtaining the deeds from the plaintiff. As the case now stands, there is some evidence of that fact.

As to the second tract of land, we do not see why the principle stated in Sample v. Lumber Co., 150 N. C., at page 164, 63 S. E. at page 732, does not apply. The court there says: "In McCoy v. Lumber Co., 149 N. C. 1 [62 S. E. 699], this court held, in effect, that where one having a deed for real property, or being in possession, claiming to own the same in fee, conveys or grants to another a lesser estate in the property or a restricted interest therein, and there is evidence tending to show that the grantee took in recognition of the grantor's right as the true owner, the parties to such a transaction, in any litigation between them involving the title, come within the principle very generally recognized that, when it appears that both parties to a suit claim under the same title, neither, as a general rule, shall be heard to deny or question the validity of the common source of their respective claims. In the present case there is, on the face of the instrument, evidence which tends to show that the plaintiffs, claiming to be the owners of the property, sold to the defendant a restricted interest therein, to wit, the standing timber of a given dimension, and that defendant bought the timber in recognition at the time of plaintiffs' claim as owner of the land, and there was no error, therefore, in denying the motion for nonsuit, made by defendant on the ground that there was no evidence tending to sustain plaintiffs' claim of title."

In any view of the case, the court erred in adjudging, at the close of the evidence, that a nonsuit be entered against the plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by L. W. Pegram against G. W. Hester. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Grogan, for appellant. Lindsay Patterson, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. There are no assignments of error in the record as required by rule 27 of this court (66 S. E. viii). The appellant moves to affirm the judgment on that ground, and the motion must be allowed; there being no errors apparent on the face of the record proper. At the last term, in Smith v. Manufacturing Company, 151 N. C. 261, 65 S. E. 1009, Walker, J., said: "We must insist upon a strict compliance with the rule, which requires an assignment of errors relied on in this court." Then, after giving the reason for the rule, he adds that without such assignments of error the court would not enter upon a consideration of the case on its merits, but would examine the record proper only, and if no errors appeared thereon, would affirm the judgment, as the court had heretofore done, citing Davis v. Wall, 142 N. C. 450, 55 S. E. 350; Marable v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 564, 55 S. E. 355; Lee v. Baird, 146 N. C. 361, 59 S. E. 876; Thompson v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 412, 61 S. E. 286; Ullery v. Guthrie, 148 N. C. 417, 62 S. E. 552.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

DOWNING v. STONE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1910.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 27*)—ELEMENTS—"MALICE."

"Malice," as an element of malicious prosecution, does not necessarily mean anger, wrath, or vindictiveness, but, while any such ill feeling may constitute malice, it need be no more than the antithesis of bona fides, and hence particular malice or malicious or wrongful purpose, in the sense of personal ill will or malevolence existing toward the person prosecuted, by the prosecutor is not required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 60; Dec. Dig. § 27.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4298-4304; vol. 8, pp. 7712-7716.]

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 21*)—DEFENSES—ADVICE OF COUNSEL.

Advice of counsel on a statement of facts, however full, does not as a matter of law afford protection to one who has instituted an unsuccessful prosecution against another; such advice being only evidence for the jury on the issue as to malice and probable cause.

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 24*)—PROBABLE CAUSE—DISCHARGE BY COMMITTING MAGISTRATE.

When a committing magistrate examines a criminal complaint and discharges accused, his action establishes a prima facie case of want of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution, but such is not the effect of a verdict and judgment of acquittal by a court having jurisdiction to try and determine the guilt or innocence of accused, so that, where accused was tried and acquitted by a justice of the peace having final jurisdiction, the justice's docket in an action for malicious prosecution was admissible only to show that the prosecution had terminated, and was not relevant to the question of probable cause.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67*)—ABANDONMENT OF WORK—ADVANCES—OFFENSES.

Under the statute providing that if any person, with intent to cheat and defraud another, shall obtain advances under promise to begin work or labor, etc., and shall then unlawfully and willfully fail to commence or complete the work, he shall be guilty, etc., an instruction that, accused having commenced the work and labor according to the contract of employment, he was not indictable for failure to complete it was erroneous; mere commencement of the work not being an absolute defense.

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by T. L. Downing against Scott Stone. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed; venire de novo.

There was evidence tending to show that on or about April 25, 1908, the defendant had caused the arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff, on a charge of having obtained from said defendant as landlord, with intent to cheat and defraud, advances and supplies to plaintiff as tenant. The prosecution having been instituted under section 3481, Revisal 1905, which gives a justice final jurisdiction, the evidence further showed that the plaintiff had been acquitted by the justice who tried the case. There was evidence on the part of plaintiff tending to show that he had acted throughout in good faith, that he had left defendant's premises for good cause, and that, as a matter of fact, he did not owe defendant anything for advancements or supplies at the time he moved away. There was evidence on the part of defendant that plaintiff, having agreed to become tenant of defendant, obtained goods and money by way of advancements, and had shortly thereafter abandoned the place without cause or excuse, and defendant, having consulted counsel, placing the facts truthfully and fully before him, and being advised that on the facts as stated a prosecution would be under the statute, had instituted the same, etc.

The jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Did the defendant Scott Stone cause the arrest and prosecution of the plaintiff T. L. Downing as alleged? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Was the same done without probable cause? Answer: Yes.

"(3) Was the same done with malice? Answer: Yes.

"(4) Has the criminal action terminated? Answer: Yes.

"(5) What damages, if any, has plaintiff sustained thereby? Answer: Twelve hundred and fifty dollars."

Wishart, Britt & Britt and McIntyre, Lawrence & Proctor, for appellant. McLean, McLean & Snow and W. H. Kinlaw, for appellee.

HOKE, J. The defendant excepted for that the court refused to charge the jury as requested that, in order to answer the issue as to malice for the plaintiff, it was required that plaintiff should establish particular malice against the defendant, insisting that the term "particular malice" in this connection should be understood in the sense of personal ill will or grudge towards the defendant, and charged instead: "Particular malice means ill will, grudge, a desire to be revenged. Malice within the meaning of this issue does not necessarily mean ill will, but a wrongful act, knowingly and intentionally done the plaintiff without just cause or excuse, will constitute malice, and should you find from the evidence, and by the greater weight thereof, the burden being on the plaintiff, that the defendant, Stone, was actuated by malice towards the plaintiff in taking out the warrant and causing the plaintiff's arrest, you will answer the third issue, Yes. If you do not so find, you will answer the third issue, No." The rulings of the court below on both of these questions find support in an express decision of this court (Stanford v. Grocery Co., 143 N. C. 419, 426, 427, 55 S. E. 815), and the position is supported by the better reason, and is in substantial accord with the great weight of authority (Wills v. Noyes, 29 Mass. 324; Vinal v. Core & Compton, 18 W. Va. 1; Burhans v. Sanford & Bram, 19 Wend. [N. Y.] 417; Frowman v. Smith, Litt. Sel. Cas. 7, 12 Am. Dec. 265, note 1; Gee v. Culver, 13 Or. 598, 11 Pac. 302; Pullen v. Glidden, 66 Me. 202; Harpham v. Whitney, 77 Ill. 32; Hadrick v. Hestop, 64 E. C. L. 266; Johnson v. Ebberts [C. C.] 11 Fed. 129; 19 A. & E. 675; 26 Cyc. 48, 49; Hale on Torts, 354; Cooley on Torts, 338).

In Hale on Torts, supra, treating of malicious prosecution, it is said: "'Malice,' as here used, is not necessarily synonymous with 'anger,' 'wrath,' or 'vindictiveness.' Any such ill feeling may constitute malice. But it may be no more than the opposite of bona fides. Any prosecution carried on knowingly, wantonly, or obstinately, or merely for the vexation of the person prosecuted, is malicious. Every improper or sinister motive constitutes malice in this sense. The plaintiff is not required to prove 'express malice' in the popular sense. The test is: Was the defendant actuated by any indirect motive, in preferring the charge or commencing the action against the plaintiff?" In Cooley, supra, the author says: "Legal malice is made out by showing that the proceeding was instituted from any improper or wrongful motive, and it is not essential that actual malevolence or concept design be shown." In Vinal v. Core & Compton, supra, the court, on this question, held: "(6) By the last requisite, malice, is meant, not what this word imports, when used in common conversation, nor yet its classical meaning, but its legal and technical meaning, that is, some motive other than a desire to secure the punishment of a person believed by the prosecutor to be guilty of the crime charged, such as malignity, or a desire to get possession by such means of the goods alleged to be stolen, when the charge is larceny, or any other sinister or improper motive." In Gee v. Culver, supra, it was held: "(1) Malice, in the enlarged sense of the law, is not restricted to anger, hatred, and revenge, but includes every unlawful and unjustified motive. And in an action for malicious prosecution any motive, other than that of simply instituting a prosecution for the purpose of bringing a party to justice, is a malicious motive. (2) In actions for malicious prosecution, there is no such thing as implied malice, but malice in fact must be proved, and its existence is purely a question of fact for the jury, but such malice may be inferred from any improper or unjustifiable motives which the facts disclose influenced the conduct of the defendant in instituting the prosecution.

And the act itself, with all the surrounding facts and circumstances, may be inquired into for the purpose of ascertaining such motive." And Lord, J., delivering the opinion, said further: "But the term 'malicious' has in law a twofold signification. There is what is known as malice in law, or implied malice, and malice in fact, or actual malice. Malice in law denotes a legal inference of malice from certain facts proved. It is a presumption of malice which the law raises from an act unlawful in itself which is injurious to another, and is declared by the court. Malice in fact, or actual malice, relates to the actual state or condition of the mind of the person who did the act, and is a question of fact upon the circumstances of each particular case to be found by the jury. In actions for malicious prosecution, there is no such thing as malice in law, but malice in fact must be proved, and its existence is purely a question of fact for the jury. Ritchey v. Davis, 11 Iowa, 124. But in this form of action, malice is not considered in the sense of spite or hatred against an individual, but of malus animus, and as denoting that the party is actuated by improper and indirect motives. Mitchell v. Jenkins, 5 Barn. & Adol. 594. To prove actual malice, it is not necessary, therefore, that the prosecution complained of should proceed from hatred or ill will to the plaintiff; but it may be inferred from any improper and unjustifiable motives which the facts disclose influenced the conduct of the defendant in instituting the prosecution. 'But it is well established,' said Libby, J., 'that the plaintiff is not required to prove express malice in the popular signification of the term, as, that defendant was prompted by malevolence, or acted from motives of ill will, resentment, or hatred towards the plaintiff. It is sufficient if he prove it in its enlarged sense. In a legal sense, any act done willfully and purposely to the prejudice and injury of another, which is unlawful, is as against that person malicious.' Commonwealth v. Snelling, 15 Pick. [Mass.] 327. 'The malice necessary to be shown in order to maintain this action is not necessarily revenge, or other base or malignant passion. Whatever is done willfully and purposely, if it be at the same time wrong and unlawful, and that known to the party is in legal contemplation malicious.' Wills v. Noyes, 12 Pick. [Mass.] 324."

We were referred by counsel to the cases of Savage v. Davis, 131 N. C. 162, 42 S. E. 571, and Brooks v. Jones, 33 N. C. 260, as authorities in support of their position, and in which it is said that "particular malice" must be established in cases of this character. In so far as these cases hold that a malicious or wrongful purpose must exist prompting the particular prosecution, which is the subject of inquiry, the decisions may be upheld, but, to the extent that they countenance the position that on an issue of this character it is necessary to show there was personal ill will or malevolence existing with the plaintiff towards the original defendant, the cases are not well considered.

Nor was there any error in refusing to give another instruction prayed for by defendant, as follows: "If the jury find from the evidence that the defendant, Scott Stone, before causing the warrant to be issued for the arrest of the plaintiff, Downing, consulted a reputable practicing attorney, making to him a full and fair disclosure of the facts, and was advised by said attorney to procure a warrant for Downing's arrest, and that the defendant acted in pursuance of said attorney's advice in causing the warrant to be issued, this would constitute probable cause for issuing the warrant, and you will answer the second issue, No." The decisions of this state have uniformly held that advice of counsel, however learned, on a statement of facts, however full, does not of itself, and as a matter of law, afford protection to one who has instituted an unsuccessful prosecution against another; but such advice is only evidence to be submitted to the jury on the issue as to malice. Smith v. Bldg. & Loan, 116 N. C. 74, 20 S. E. 963; Davenport v. Lynch, 51 N. C. 545; Beal v. Robeson, 30 N. C. 276. And where it is proven that legal advice was taken by a prosecutor, this, too, is a relevant circumstance in connection with other facts, admitted or established, to be considered by the court in determining the question of probable cause. Morgan v. Stewart, 144 N. C. 424, 57 S. E. 149; Railroad v. Hardware Co., 143 N. C. 58, 55 S. E. 422. This restriction as to the advice of counsel learned in the law on facts fully and fairly stated does not seem to be in accord with the weight of authority as it obtains in other jurisdictions (Cooley on Torts, 328; Hale on Torts, 357), but it has been too long accepted and acted on here to be now questioned, and we are of opinion, too, that ours is the safer position. The exception, therefore, is overruled.

Again it was objected that the court, having admitted the docket and judgment of the justice who tried and disposed of the case, refused on request to confine such evidence to its proper effect as testimony for the purpose only of showing that the action had terminated, but allowed it to be used on the issue as to probable cause. We think this objection must be sustained. It is well established with us that when a committing magistrate, as such, examines a criminal case and discharges the accused, his action makes out a prima facie case of want of probable cause—that is the issue directly made in the investigation—but no such effect is allowed to a verdict and judgment of acquittal by a court having jurisdiction to try and determine the question of defendant's guilt or innocence, and the weight of authority is to the effect that such action of the trial court should not be considered as evidence on the issue as to probable cause or malice. In this case the justice had final jurisdiction to try and determine the question. The judgment is necessarily admitted, because the plaintiff is required to show that the action has terminated, but it should be restricted to that purpose, and the failure to do this constituted reversible error. Morgan v. Stewart, 144 N. C. 424, 57 S. E. 149; Bell v. Percy, 33 N. C. 233; Bekkeland v. Lyons, 96 Tex. 255, 72 S. W. 56, 64 L. R. A. 474; Philpot v. Lucas, 101 Iowa, 478, 40 N. W. 625; Anderson v. Friend, 85 Ill. 135; Taylor on Evidence, § 1667; 19 A. & E. 685.

There was further error in charging the jury as follows: "It being admitted in this case that plaintiff, Downing, commenced the work and labor according to the contract of employment, the court charges you that he was not indictable for failure to complete the work." The language of the statute is: "If any person with intent to cheat and defraud another shall obtain advances under a promise to begin work or labor," etc., "and shall then unlawfully and willfully fail to commence or complete said work, shall be guilty," etc. To allow the commencement of work by plaintiff to operate as an absolute protection to him is thus in direct contravention of the express provision of the statute, and must be held erroneous. It is no doubt, an inadvertence on the part of the court, but the objection is distinctly and explicitly made.

These are the principal questions presented and argued on the appeal. Most of the other exceptions are to rulings of the court on questions of evidence. They do not seem to be in any way controlling or determinative, and, as they may not arise in another hearing, it is not considered necessary or desirable that they be now passed upon.

For the errors indicated, defendant is entitled to a new trial of the cause, and it is so ordered.

Venire de novo.

BAILEY v. MEADOWS CO. et al.

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 177*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—FELLOW SERVANTS.

Plaintiff when injured was working for a railroad construction company, and with his fellow servants was loading rails on a car under orders of a foreman. Plaintiff testified that he and his fellow workmen had their hands under a rail, and that they were so close that they dropped a rail on plaintiff's hand before he could get it out. Held, that plaintiff's injury resulted from the negligence of his fellow servants, for which he could not recover.

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Webb, Judge.

Action by W. D. Bailey against the Meadows Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Hudgins, Watson & Johnston, for appellants. Pless & Winborne, for appellee.

BROWN, J. Taking the plaintiff's evidence in the most favorable view for him, we are of opinion that the motion to nonsuit should have been sustained. The plaintiff was working on the construction force engaged in building a railroad. The railroad was not in operation, as the rails were then being laid. Plaintiff and two fellow servants were engaged in loading rails on a car by order of a foreman. Plaintiff states that "we had our hands under the rail, and they were so close that they dropped the rail on my hand before I could get it out." It is plain from plaintiff's own evidence that his injury was caused by the negligence of his fellow servants, or else that it was the result of an unavoidable accident. In neither event would defendants be liable. As the road was being constructed and not operated, the principles laid down in Nicholson v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 516, 51 S. E. 40, and reiterated at this term in O'Neal v. Railroad, 67 S. E. 1022, bar a recovery.

The motion to nonsuit is sustained.

Reversed.

1. RAILROADS (§ 75*)—RIGHT OF WAY—RIGHT TO EXTEND.

A railroad company cannot extend its tracks beyond its right of way into a street in absence of legislative authority, even for public purposes.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 680, 681*)—OBSTRUCTION OF STREETS—POWER TO AUTHORIZE.

Since a town holds its streets in trust for the public convenience, it cannot, in absence of statutory authority, permit the obstruction of a street so as to inconvenience the public, for either public or private purposes, and hence cannot authorize a railroad company to construct its tracks in a street to a manufacturing plant in order to facilitate its operation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Long, Judge.

Suit by James L. Butler against the F. R. Penn Tobacco Company and another to enjoin the construction of a railroad in a street. From a judgment dissolving a temporary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. P. Bynum and R. C. Strudwick, for appellant. Manly & Hendren, for appellee Railway Co. A. L. Brooks, H. P. Lane, and C. A. Hall, for Town of Reidsville. Justice & Glidewell, for appellee Tobacco Co.

CLARK, C. J. The plaintiff since 1903 has been the owner, and in possession, of a house and lot on West Market street in Reidsville, whereon he has continuously resided since that year; said street with its sidewalks is and has been for more than 30 years one of the principal thoroughfares of said town, and has been continuously used by the plaintiff as his only convenient and practical route from the said residence to the post office and other public places in said town; the defendant tobacco company applied to the board of commissioners of said town for permission to construct upon West Market street, outside of the right of way of the defendant railroad company, and for a part of the distance upon the sidewalk of said street, a private side track running from the line of the railroad to the door of the factory of said tobacco company and making no other connection whatever. On October 9, 1909, the said board of commissioners undertook to grant such license to said tobacco company, and thereafter on December 1, 1909, the said tobacco company entered into a written agreement with said town, whereby it undertook to construct said side track at its own expense, and it further contracted with the defendant railroad company to build said track in consideration of $1,062 to be paid to it by said tobacco company. Acting under said alleged license said tobacco company and the railroad were at the beginning of this action proceeding to construct said side track between the main business portion of the town and the warehouse of the said tobacco company, about 600 feet distant from the plaintiff's residence on the same street. It further appeared, according to affidavits filed for the plaintiff, that the said side track, if built and operated as proposed, would impair the value of plaintiff's lot, would greatly injure and partially destroy the right or easement of plaintiff to pass and repass along the said street, and would entirely destroy the right of plaintiff to use said sidewalk. The relative positions of the line of the railroad company, West Market street, and the sidewalk, the factory of the tobacco company, and the property of the plaintiff will appear from the map herein.

RIGHT OF WAY LINE

the defendant the town of Reidsville has the power to grant license to the defendant the Penn Tobacco Company to build on the public street and upon the sidewalk thereof a private side track from the railroad track to the warehouse of the said tobacco company, for its use and benefit, whereby the plaintiff, a resident upon said street, is deprived of his right of easement to freely pass and re-pass along said street and sidewalk, and the value of his house and lot impaired. Nearly all of the 670 feet of the proposed side track is off of the right of way of the defendant railroad company, whose track, right of way, and depot in Reidsville have been located for nearly 50 years. It has no power to exceed its right of way, in the absence of legislative authority, even for public purposes. In Griffin v. R. R., 150 N. C. 312, 64 S. E. 16, the defendant was authorized to lay its track along a street to make connection at a union depot, which had been ordered by the Corporation Commission under the authority of the statute, and the board of aldermen were empowered to grant such permission by the terms of the charter of the city. Dewey v. R. R., 142 N. C. 392, 55 S. E. 292. Besides it was a public purpose. Here it does not appear that the charter of Reidsville confers such authority on its board of commissioners. Certainly no authority is shown by statute or order of Corporation Commission empowering the defendant railroad company either to lay or operate a side track, not upon its right of way, for the purpose of reaching the tobacco company's warehouse.

In White v. R. R., 113 N. C. 610, 18 S. E. 330, 22 L. R. A. 627, 37 Am. St. Rep. 639, cited with approval in Staton v. R. R., 147 N. C. 437, 61 S. E. 458, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 949, it was held established that "the use of a street by steam railroads is not a legitimate use for public purposes, and it must of course follow that the city has no right in the exercise of its usual and ordinary powers relating to highways to authorize the entry and occupation of the street by the defendant, and the bare license of the city can afford no justification."

The town authorities hold the streets in trust for the purposes of public traffic, and cannot, in the absence of statutory power, grant to any one the right to obstruct the street to the inconvenience of the public, even for public purposes, and not for private purposes at all. Moose v. Carson, 104 N. C. 435, 10 S. E. 689, 7 L. R. A. 548, 17 Am. St. Rep. 681; Feld v. Barling, 149 Ill. 556, 37 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. 406, 41 Am. St. Rep. 311; Service Co. v. Murphy, 134 Mo. 548, 31 S. W. 784, 34 S. W. 51, 35 S. W. 1132, 34 L. R. A. 374. The city cannot (in the absence of statutory power) authorize the use of the streets by a private railroad. Gustafson v. Hamm, 56 Minn. 334, 57 N. W. 1054, 22 L. R. A. 565; Mikesell v. Durkee, 36 Kan. 97, 12 Pac. 351. Permission by a city to a private individual to occupy a public street with a railroad switch, to be used for his private business, is void. Swift v. R. R., 66 N. J. Eq. 34, 57 Atl. 456. Such power may be granted to a municipality by legislative authority, but in the absence of legislation the town authorities cannot grant any use of the streets for private purposes (Elliott, Roads and Streets [2d Ed.] § 653), for the entire street, "from side to side and from end to end, belongs to the public" (Id. § 645). The use of the street for a street railroad is in aid of, and facilitates its use for, public traffic and travel. Hester v. Traction Co., 133 N. C. 291, 50 S. E. 711, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981; Merrick v. R. R., 118 N. C. 1081, 24 S. E. 667.

The Industrial Siding Case, 140 N. C. 239, 52 S. E. 941, is not in point. There the Corporation Commission, under statutory authority, ordered the railroad company to establish such siding, having, after investigation, found this to be to the public interest. But it does not follow that because a public agency is empowered to order the establishment of such sidings on a railroad's right of way, or on land acquired by it for that purpose, that a railroad company may lay down its track in the streets of a city, under contract with any individual or manufacturing company, to facilitate the operation of such private business, by the permission of the town authorities, who have no legislative power to that end conferred upon them. 28 Cyc. 873, and numerous cases there cited; 27 A. & E. Enc. 176.

No reason is shown why the defendant railroad company cannot lay the side track upon its right of way to a point abreast the warehouse of the tobacco company. This would necessitate that company carrying its goods a few feet from its door to the side track; but there are facilities for that. Certainly the defendants cannot take the public street and sidewalk, which would greatly inconvenience the public, because it would serve their own convenience. Though the plaintiff is not an abutting proprietor, the use of this street and its sidewalk for a siding for the tobacco company and filling it up, at times, with cars, shifting about or standing, will impede the use of the street, and he is entitled to an injunction to prevent it. McManus v. R. R., 150 N. C. 661, 64 S. E. 766; Tise v. Whittaker Co., 144 N. C. 511, 57 S. E. 210; Corby v. R. R., 150 Mo. 457, 52 S. W. 282; Longworth v. Sedevic, 165 Mo. 221, 65 S. W. 260; Fleld v. Barling, 149 Ill. 569, 37 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. 400, 41 Am. St. Rep. 311; Elliott R. & S. (2d Ed.) §§ 664, 665. This is especially true, as no action for damages lies against the city for an unauthorized grant or license. 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) 710.

The owner of a lot, whose use of a street is interfered with by an obstruction therein, is entitled to an injunction, although his lot is not immediately adjacent. Conrad v.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 308, 552*)—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Every one is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and where there is any reasonable hypothesis, under which the circumstances established by circumstantial evidence are consistent with the innocence of accused, he should be acquitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 731, 1261; Dec. Dig. §§ 308, 552.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 552*)—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

To justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the jury must be satisfied that the facts shown and their relations and combinations are reasonably clear and satisfactory, and the testimony must be clear, convincing, and conclusive, so as to exclude all rational doubt of accused's guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1261; Dec. Dig. § 552.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICATION TO EVIDENCE.

An instruction, the refusal of which is assigned as error, must contain not only a correct statement of law, but must be sustained by and be applicable to some view of the evidence.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY.

Where the state relied on the confession of accused and on circumstances showing an opportunity to commit the crime charged, and accused relied on an alibi, instructions on circumstantial evidence, though correct as abstract propositions, were properly refused.

5. HOMICIDE (§ 310*)—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY.

Where, on trial for secret assault with intent to kill, the state showed that accused in the nighttime followed prosecutor and a third person, slipped through the woods, hid himself, and fired his gun loaded with shot directly at prosecutor and the third person and at close range, hitting the prosecutor in the eye, a charge that it is not common sense or law to infer the worst intent which the facts admit of was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 660; Dec. Dig. § 310.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 89*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

Where one intending to shoot one person secretly, shot another and destroyed an eye, he was guilty of assault with intent to kill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; Council, Judge.

Will West was convicted of secret assault with intent to kill, and he appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant was indicted, tried, and convicted of a secret assault upon one J. D. Morgan, with intent to kill, on the night of the 24th of January, 1910, in Burke county. The prosecuting witness, Morgan, testified that he, in company with several other men, was walking along a road, he and one Fisher in front; that a gun fired; his eye was shot out, leaving him totally blind, as he had previously lost the sight of one eye; that it was between 9 and 10 o'clock at night; there were bushes on the side of the road which concealed the presence of the person who shot; that he did not know of the presence of the man who shot him, or see or hear him until he was shot. Blackwood Warlick testified for the state that he saw the defendant the morning after the shooting, and heard him say that he had shot at Wyatt Fisher and could not shoot Fisher without hitting Morgan, and described how he slipped along through the woods and bushes until he got opposite Fisher and Morgan, when he shot. There were other witnesses offered by the state, who testified to similar statements of the defendant, and who detailed other circumstances connecting the defendant with the shooting. The only witnesses for the defendant were himself and his wife. This evidence tended to prove an alibi. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and from the judgment, the defendant appealed.

R. L. Huffman, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett and Geo. L. Jones, for the State.

MANNING, J. The assignments of error insisted upon by the defendant are to the refusal of his honor to give three special instructions. There were no exceptions taken to the evidence, and two of the errors assigned to the charge are abandoned in the brief of the learned counsel for the defendant. The defendant requested the judge to charge the jury: "That every man is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proven, and it is a well-established rule in criminal cases that if there is any reasonable hypothesis upon which the circumstances are consistent with the innocence of the accused, the jury should render a verdict of not guilty." The particular part of the instruction which defendant insists should have been given by his honor is that "if there is any reasonable hypothesis," etc. The prayer correctly states the rule of law which has been approved by this court in State v. Mussey, 86 N. C. 653, 41 Am. Rep. 478; State v. Smith, 136 N. C. 686, 49 S. E. 336. The third rejected prayer was as follows: "That before you can convict the defendant upon the circumstantial evidence relied upon by the state you must be satisfied that such circumstantial testimony, the facts, their relations, connections, and combinations are reasonable, clear and satisfactory, and the court further charges you that, when circumstantial evidence is relied upon to convict, it should be clear, convincing, and conclusive in its connections and combinations, and such as to exclude all rational doubt as to defendant's guilt." This instruction embodies substantially the language of Chief Justice Merrimon in State v. Goodson, 107 N. C. 798, 12 S. E. 329; State v. Wilcox, 132 N. C. 1120, 44 S. E. 625. It is essential, however, that an instruction, the refusal to give which is assigned as error, should contain not only a correct statement of law, but that it should be sustained by and be applicable to some view of the evidence. State v. McDuffie, 107 N. C. 885, 12 S. E. 83; State v. Hicks, 130 N. C. 705, 41 S. E. 803. The state relied upon the confessions of the defendant, as well as evidence of threats, declarations, and opportunity to commit the crime; the defendant relied upon an alibi. The state said to the defendant: "You had the opportunity, and you confessed that you committed the crime." The defendant said: "I did not have the opportunity and did not commit the crime, because I was in another place when the crime was committed." In this conflict of the evidence, unless the evidence of the state carried to the minds of the jury conviction of its truth, and satisfied them beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt. It was their duty to acquit. We do not, therefore, think it was error to refuse the instructions prayed in this case, as the state relied upon direct evidence—the defendant's confessions—supported by circumstances showing opportunity to commit the crime. State v. Flemming, 130 N. C. 688, 41 S. E. 549; State v. Crane, 110 N. C. 536, 15 S. E. 231; State v. Shines, 125 N. C. 730, 34 S. E. 552. Another rejected instruction of which defendant complains is taken from State v. Neely, 74 N. C. 423, 21 Am. Rep. 496, that "it is neither charity nor common sense, nor law, to infer the worst intent which the facts admit of." This doctrine was applied in that case to a state of facts very different from the present case. How can but one intent be inferred when the defendant, in the darkness of the night, followed Morgan and Fisher, slipping through the woods, hiding himself, and when the favorable moment came, fired his gun, loaded with shot, directly at them and at close range? If the jury believed the defendant was the man who fired the shot, charity should not be invoked to acquit him, but the law, so grossly violated, demanded his conviction. The correctness of the judge's charge that, if the defendant, intending to shoot Fisher, shot Morgan, he would be guilty as charged, was not questioned in this court, and we think it could not be successfully challenged. The jury have convicted the defendant, and, as we find no error, the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

PAYNE v. FLACK.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1910.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 73*)—PROPERTY OF WIFE—CONTRACT TO SUPPORT.

Revisal, § 2016, providing that the provisions of the mechanic's lien law shall apply to the property of a married woman when it shall appear that a building was erected or repaired on her land with her consent or procurement, and that in such case she shall be deemed to have contracted for such improvement, a formal contract by the wife is not essential to support a mechanic's lien; it being sufficient if she consented to the act of another in contracting for such improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 88; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 99*)—SUBCONTRACTORS—NOTICE OF LIEN.

Where a wife contracted with her husband to make repairs on a building on the wife's land, and paid the husband the full amount due on such contract, and the husband employed another to make the repairs, the person so employed was a subcontractor, and not an original contractor with the wife; and, where he failed to give notice to the wife before settlement as required by Revisal, § 2020, in the case of subcontractors, no mechanic's lien attached to the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 131, 132; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; Webb, Judge.

Action by one Payne against one Flack. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. C. Bird and J. T. Perkins, for appellant. Pless & Winborne and D. F. Morrow, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. In Weir v. Page, 109 N. C. 220, 13 S. E. 773, the court felt constrained to hold, as the law then stood, that, where a party under contract with the husband did work and furnished material in the construction of a building on the wife's property, he could file no valid lien against the house, though the wife, knowing that the work was being done and material furnished, had made no objection. This was because of the fact that "the work and labor had not been done and the material furnished under a contract allowed by law." But the court, speaking through Judge Davis, in order to prevent further frauds of this kind being perpetrated, suggested in the opinion to the consideration of the Legislature whether a married woman's liabilities might not be "made commensurate with her rights, and whether such alterations in the law (in this particular) would not prevent much injustice and many frauds." The result was the enactment of a statute (which is now the last paragraph in Revisal, § 2016), which is as follows: "This section shall apply to the property of a married woman when it shall appear that such building was built or repaired on her land with her consent or procurement and in such cases she shall be deemed to have contracted for such improvements." This statute does not make her house liable to lien only upon a contract by her, but provides that, when she "consents or procures" the building to be erected or material furnished, she shall be deemed to have contracted for such improvement, and that her property thereupon becomes subject to lien, if filed. In Finger v. Hunter, 130 N. C. 529, 41 S. E. 890, this statute was held constitutional and was enforced, and that case has been approved in Ball v. Paquin, 140 N. C. 96, 52 S. E. 410, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307, and other cases.

In the present case, however, the plaintiff put in evidence the feme defendant's testimony, in another trial, that she made a contract with her husband to put these repairs upon the building, and had paid him the full amount due on such contract before the plaintiff gave her notice of his claim. This evidence was furnished by the plaintiff, and was not contradicted, and therefore must be taken as true. It was also in evidence without contradiction that the plaintiff sold the material to the husband. Therefore the plaintiff was a subcontractor, and, having failed to "give notice before settlement" (Revisal, § 2020), the defendant contends, in his brief, that the wife is not liable any more than any one else would be.

This is not a case of a married woman standing silent when improvements are being placed upon her house, receiving the benefit, and then defying the contractor because she had made no valid express contract. In such case the statute now makes her property subject to lien, upon the implied contract arising upon her conduct, as it would in regard to any one else under the same circumstances. But here she paid the contractor in full before receiving notice from the subcontractor, the materialman, and is freed from liability to him as any one else would be upon the same state of facts. Pinkston v. Young, 104 N. C. 102, 10 S. E. 133.

Upon the plaintiff's evidence, the judgment of the nonsuit was proper.

Affirmed.

STATE v. GREENE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1910.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 179*)—TEMPORARY INSANITY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the defense to a prosecution for murder was temporary insanity, induced by defendant's wife informing him of decedent's raping her, it was competent for defendant to prove the communication made to him by the wife shortly before the homicide to show an adequate cause for his state of mind at the time, together with his appearance and acts immediately thereafter, and up to the time of the homicide, but the truth of the wife's statements as an independent fact could not be shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 380; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 169*)—TEMPORARY INSANITY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where accused relied on temporary insanity induced by his wife informing him of decedent's raping her the night before the homicide, and the wife testified that she saw accused early in the morning of the day of the homicide, and before she had informed him of the assault, walking with decedent to the latter's house, and that she went after accused and called him, and walked with him to their home, evidence of her reason for going to the home of decedent for accused was properly excluded.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 377*)—EVIDENCE OF GOOD CHARACTER—ADMISSIBILITY.

Accused may offer testimony of his good character though he does not testify.

4. HOMICIDE (§ 179*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where accused relied on temporary insanity, induced by his wife informing him a few hours before the homicide of decedent's raping her, evidence that accused was drunk on the morning of the homicide, and that when drunk he was violent in speech and conduct, was competent to contradict his defense.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 696*)—EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS.

Where the answers of a state's witness are not responsive or are not in themselves competent, accused must move to strike the answers and request the court to direct the jury not to consider them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Council, Judge.

Woodfin Greene was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Indictment for murder tried before Council, J., and a jury at November term, 1909, of the superior court of Mitchell county. The prisoner was convicted of murder in the second degree, and from the judgment of the court appealed. The evidence tended to prove that the prisoner shot and killed Ed. L. Young on September 9, 1909, about 12 o'clock in the day; that prisoner entered the house of the deceased while he was asleep, shot twice in the ceiling of the room, presumably to awaken the deceased, and then shot him four times. Death resulted in a few minutes. As prisoner walked out of the house he was asked what was the matter, and he replied that "there was a man hurt and hurt bad, and that I had better come and take care of him." The prisoner, not having offered himself as a witness, rested his defense upon the plea of insanity—transitory insanity; that this condition of irresponsibility was occasioned by a statement to the prisoner by his wife a few hours before the homicide. The prisoner was engaged in working at night at, in, or about the Cranberry mine, and on the morning of the 9th of September, about 6 o'clock, he came to his home, met the deceased at his gate, and walked with him to his home, a distance of about 300 yards; in a short time prisoner's wife came for him; they went to their house, ate breakfast, and, as was his custom, prisoner went to his bedroom to sleep. In a short time prisoner's wife came in the room, lay down on another bed, and, thinking the prisoner asleep, began to cry. The prisoner was not asleep, but upon his inquiry as to what was the matter the wife narrated this occurrence: "Fin, Ed. Young made me drunk last night and overpowered me, and threw me back on the bed and in spite of my efforts and my telling him to leave, he accomplished his purpose." "Young said to me, 'God damn you, I have fixed you.'" That the prisoner jumped up in the floor, wringing his hands and saying, "I want my pistol, I want my pistol! My life is wrecked! My home is ruined." That she refused to give him the pistol, having hidden it; that prisoner demanded it and struck her; that she ran to her sister's, and then to her father's; that prisoner followed her demanding his pistol; that she had a difficulty with him, and threw an ax at him; that finally she told him where his pistol was, when he left her, and the next thing she heard was that he had killed deceased. There was much evidence of prisoner's excited condition, and his wild looks and his open threats to kill Young. There was evidence on the part of the state tending to prove that prisoner had been drinking that morning; that he said he was two-thirds drunk, and that when drunk he was very rowdy. The testimony of prisoner's unusual condition came from nonexpert witnesses—his kinpeople who saw him that day before the homicide. Immediately after the homicide the insanity seems to have passed away as he was apparently as rational as ever, and escaped to the woods where he remained for a day when he surrendered himself. There was evidence of previous threats made by prisoner against deceased; and there was also evidence of very friendly relations between them. Both men drank whisky to excess. The contest between the state and the prisoner was over the defense of insanity, and both state and prisoner offered much evidence tending to support the one theory or the other.

Chas. E. Greene and S. J. Ervin, for appellant. The Attorney General, Geo. L. Jones, and W. C. Newland, for the State

MANNING, J. The record contains no exception to the refusal of the trial judge to give special instructions, and no exception to his honor's charge to the jury. The entire charge is included in the record, and it contains an able and elaborate presentation of the law of the case as applicable to facts as the jury should find them to be. The contentions of both state and the prisoner are stated fully and impartially. We have, therefore, a verdict resting upon a charge so clear and just and able that the learned counsel of the prisoner have not complained to us of any error in it prejudicial to the prisoner's rights. The errors assigned by the prisoner are directed solely to the admission of incompetent, and the rejection of competent, testimony. The trial judge permitted the prisoner's wife to rehearse to the jury, in minute detail, everything she told the prisoner about the conduct of the deceased the night before. The prisoner offered to prove as a substantive and independent fact the truth of the narrative by the wife, but this was excluded by his honor. His honor's ruling is, we think, clearly sustained by the decision of this court in State v. Banner, 149 N. C. 519, 63 S. E. 84, in which this court held: "When the defense is a plea of insanity and not self-defense, a witness may not testify, as tending to show self-defense, that he had seen deceased armed, on a dark night, at a place where the prisoner would likely pass, some two weeks before the occurrence, though he may testify that he had told the prisoner concerning it, and what the prisoner said and did in consequence, only so far as it may affect the question of insanity, and for that purpose alone." In People v. Wood, 128 N. Y. 249, 27 N. E. 362, Judge Peckham, in a learned and elaborate opinion, held that it was competent for a defendant to offer evidence of communication made to him (in that case the communications offered were of a similar character to those in this case), "for the purpose of showing an adequate cause for the state of mind existing subsequent to the communication. The subsequent conduct, appearance, and conversation of the person to whom the communication is made are the proper subjects of proof, for the one purpose of showing what effect upon him such communications had, and that it rendered him insane within the legal definition of the term at the very time of the commission of the deed." The evidence was held competent "for the reason that all the facts are material for the purpose of enabling the jury to say what was the condition of mind of defendant when the deed was perpetrated." This being the sole purpose of the evidence, the truth or falsity of the communication is not material, and it is not competent to inquire into it. It is, of course, competent to challenge the fact of communication, but not its truth or falsity. In the present case, his honor permitted the prisoner to show in minute detail the communication to him by his wife, and his conduct, appearance, utterances, and acts immediately thereafter and to the time of the homicide. This was, in our opinion, as far as it was permissible to go. There was no evidence of any disorder of the brain prior to the morning of September 9th, the day of the homicide; the evidence tended to show the prisoner to be a man possessed of an ordinarily normal mind, except occasional outbursts when intoxicated. In a few hours after the homicide, the prisoner's mind seemed to recover its balance and to resume its normal condition. It was the contention of the prisoner that the sudden "brain storm," which was so violent as to dethrone reason and make him irresponsible for his acts, was caused by his wife's communication. Of its truth or falsity he could know nothing, and could not have been influenced by such knowledge. The theory of the defense and its plea is that he believed it so strongly and so absolutely that the prisoner was made insane. If the purpose was to show the character of the deceased for violence, it was inadmissible because it did not fall within one of the exceptions to the rule settled in this state for admitting such evidence. State v. Banner, supra; State v. Turpin, 77 N. C. 473, 24 Am. Rep. 455; State v. Byrd, 121 N. C. 683, 28 S. E. 353; State v. McIver, 125 N. C. 646, 34 S. E. 439. In our opinion, therefore, the offered testimony of the wife that the occurrence communicated by her to the prisoner, her husband, was true as an independent and substantive fact was properly excluded. Nor do we think there was error in refusing to permit the prisoner's wife to give her reason for going to the house of deceased for her husband, whom she had seen, early in the morning of the homicide, go there with the deceased, and before she had communicated to him the occurrences of the night before. She testified that she saw her husband walk with the deceased to his house, that she went after him, called him out of the house, and they walked together to their home. The prisoner objected to certain testimony offered by the state that when drinking he was violent in speech and conduct. The state offered evidence tending to show that prisoner was "two-thirds" drunk on the morning of the homicide. The prisoner, not having been at the trial examined as a witness, offered testimony of his good character. It was competent for him to do so. State v. Hice, 117 N. C. 782, 23 S. E. 357. This evidence offered by the state as to the effect produced upon prisoner by whisky was directed to his plea of "transitory insanity." We cannot see that its admission was prejudicial to the prisoner or that it was incompetent for the purpose it was offered. If the answers of some of the witnesses were not responsive, or not, in themselves, competent, the prisoner's right was to move to strike out such answers, and to request his honor to direct the jury not to consider such answers in reaching their verdict. We have carefully read the entire record and examined all the cases cited by the learned counsel of the prisoner, and we find no error committed at the trial prejudicial to the prisoner's rights. The jury of his county, who saw the witnesses and their demeanor, who heard the entire testimony, have, by their verdict, given to the sudden "brain storm" of the prisoner, created by his wife's communication, such weight and influence as to acquit the prisoner of the capital felony, but not to acquit him of all responsibility for his act. We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Council, Judge.

Action by V. B. Bowers against the Bryan Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hudgins, Watson & Johnston, for appellant. L. D. Love and C. E. Greene, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This was a civil action, prosecuted by the plaintiff against the defendant for a debt of $1,650. A warrant of attachment was levied upon 125,000 feet of lumber which belonged to the defendant, and while the property so levied upon was in the custody of the sheriff, the defendant filed with the clerk of the superior court a bond in the sum of $3,700, executed by the defendant as principal, and the Title Guaranty & Surety Company, by D. H. Willard and D. A. Vines, who professed to be its agents. This bond was approved by the clerk of the superior court, and filed as a part of the record, and thereupon the attachment was dissolved, and the lumber was released and shipped out of the state by the defendant. At July term, 1909, of the superior court, when the case was called, it appeared that the plaintiff had filed a verified complaint, and the defendant had filed no answer. The court rendered judgment by default in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant, for the amount of the debt and the costs of the action, and also against the Title Guaranty & Surety Company for the amount of its bond, to be discharged upon the payment of the judgment; that is, the debt and costs. At November term, 1909, the Title Guaranty & Surety Company moved to strike out or set aside the said judgment, so far as the same affected the said company, and assigned as the ground for its motion that D. H. Willard and D. A. Vines were the agents of the said company in Tennessee, and did not reside in this state, but at Johnson City in the said state of Tennessee, and that Willard and Vines acted without authority in executing the said bond. Affidavits were filed by the parties, and an order was granted staying the execution until the motion of the Guaranty & Surety Company could be heard. At the hearing of this motion, Judge Council rendered a judgment denying the same, and dissolving the restraining order, but in his judgment there are no findings of fact, nor does it appear anywhere in the record that the appellant requested the judge to find and state the facts. In what is termed a case on appeal, there appears to have been some colloquy between the court and counsel, as to the ground of the motion, and as to the reasons why the Guaranty & Surety Company was entitled to have the judgment against it vacated, but there are no findings of fact which relate to the authority of Willard and Vines to act in behalf of the said company in the execution of the bond by it as surety. This court ordered the original bond to be sent up, in order that it might ascertain, from an inspection of it, whether the corporate seal of the company had been affixed thereto, and we find, upon an examination of the bond, that the corporate seal of the company had been affixed.

In the present state of the case, we are of the opinion that the Guaranty & Surety Company is bound by the act of Willard and Vines, because the corporate seal was affixed to the bond; and, in the absence of any statement of facts, we must presume that his honor found such facts as would support his judgment, and therefore found that Willard and Vines were invested with the necessary authority to execute the bond. We do not presume that error was committed in the court below, and the burden is on the appellant to show error. The Guaranty & Surety Company intrusted Willard and Vines with a bond, to which its corporate seal had been affixed and it was licensed to do business—that is, to execute an indemnity bond—in this state. When this was done, the Guaranty & Surety Company put it in the power of Willard and Vines to induce others to believe that they had the power and authority to execute a bond in its behalf as surety, even if the signatures of the said agents were necessary to make it a valid bond as against the company after it had thus affixed its corporate seal, and its corporate name had been signed to the bond. This case is not in principle, unlike Havens v. Bank, 132 N. C. 214, 43 S. E. 639, 95 Am. St. Rep. 627, in which it appeared that spurious bank certificates had been issued by the cashier of the defendant bank; they having been left with him after having been signed in blank by the president and secretary. In that case, and with reference to its facts, we held that the bank was legally responsible for the fraudulent acts of its cashier, and that the mere fact that he was not in the performance of his master's business, but was acting outside of the scope of his agency, did not alter the case nor change the result, for "this would be true as to all fraudulent acts, and as to all acts done not strictly within the line of duty. The correct principle is that it will be quite sufficient to charge the employer with liability, if all the acts of the employé are done within the apparent, though not real, scope of his agency." We further said that as the certificates had been signed by the president and delivered to the cashier, the bank had given to the latter the power to commit the fraud, and must answer for its negligent act, upon the principle that "whenever one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it." Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 70.

It was said by Lord Holt in Hearn v. Nichols, 1 Salk. 239: "For as somebody must be a loser by this deceit, it is more reason that he who employs and puts a trust and confidence in the deceiver should be the loser than a stranger." In Railroad v. Kitchin, 91 N. C. 39, we held that "where one of two persons must suffer loss by the fraud or misconduct of a third person, he who first reposed a confidence, or by his negligent act made it possible for the loss to occur, must bear the loss." The principle is well stated in the case of Railroad v. Bank, 60 Md. 36, as follows: "It may be conceded, and was doubtless the case, that the agent had no authority in fact to issue such certificate; he had no real authority as between himself and his principal, or other parties conusant of the facts, for doing the particular acts complained of, but the company by its own act and, as it turned out, misplaced confidence, placed the agent in the position to do, and procure to be done, that class of acts to which the particular act in question belongs; and in such case, where the particular act in question is done in the name of, and apparently in behalf of, the principal, the latter must be answerable to innocent parties for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business confided to him. Upon no other principle could the public venture to deal with an agent. In such case the apparent authority must stand as and for real authority." And again: "Where he issued such a certificate and delivered it to a third party, who acted without knowledge and in good faith, paying value for it, such party had the right to act upon the presumption that the representations of such certificates were truthful, and not false and fraudulent. Having confided to him the said trust of executing the business, the agent was held out to the public as competent, faithful, and worthy of confidence; and, though he deceived both his principal and the public by forging and issuing false certificates, it is but reasonable that the principal, who placed him in the position to perpetrate the wrong, should bear the loss." We think the principle is also well supported by the reasoning of the court in McNeil v. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341. Willard and Vines, who professed to act as agents of the corporation in executing the bond for it as surety, must be taken, under the facts and circumstances of this case, so far as they appear, to have had full authority to do and perform the act which the Guaranty & Surety Company now attempts to repudiate, for they were acting apparently within the scope of their authority; the company having placed in their possession evidence which would indicate to an innocent person dealing with them that they had the necessary power to act as they did. It is sufficient to charge the principal, if his agent is acting within the apparent scope of his authority. Bank v. Hay, 143 N. C. 326, 55 S. E. 811.

We cannot examine the affidavits with a view to finding the real facts in this case, as it has been well settled that the facts upon a motion to set aside a judgment must be found by the court below. We said, in Oldham v. Sneed, 80 N. C. 15, that: "In the absence of any facts found, we only see from the case sent up that the judge refused to vacate the judgment, but why he did so, or whether with or without any mistake or misapplication of the law, cannot be seen."

The Guaranty & Surety Company received the premium or consideration for this indemnity bond; and, having done so, it was put on inquiry as to whether Willard and Vines had acted within the scope of their authority, and in such a case it must be held to have ratified what they had done. It is not permissible, nor is it sound morality, for the company to accept the benefit of what they did in executing the bond for it as surety, and, when a liability is incurred on the bond, to repudiate what their alleged agents had done in their behalf.

We find no error in the record.

Ex parte PHOENIX INS. CO.

MAYFIELD et al. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.,
CAROLINA DIVISION.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. May 11, 1910.)

INSURANCE (§ 606*)—SUBROGATION—ENFORCEMENT.

Insured, having instituted suit in her own behalf against a railroad company to recover damages for fire in so far as such damages exceeded the amount of insurance collected by her on the property destroyed, the insurer being entitled to subrogation to her claim against the railroad to the extent of the insurance paid, was bound to assert such claim by motion to be made a party to the suit, and to compel the amendment of the complaint so as to plead the facts on which its equity of subrogation depended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1516; Dec. Dig. § 606.*]

On rehearing. Rehearing granted. Judgment reversed.

For former opinion, see 67 S. E. 134.

WOODS, J. In this case an original complaint appears at the beginning of the record under the title "Ex parte Ins. Co., In re Mrs. Leda K. Mayfield v. Southern Ry. Co., Carolina Division." The complaint sets out the destruction of property of Mrs. Mayfield by fire, the liability of the Southern Railway Company for the resulting loss, the payment of insurance by the Phoenix Insurance Company, and its right of subrogation to the extent of the payment. The court received the impression from the caption that this complaint was filed on behalf of the insurance company, and this impression was confirmed by the appearance in the record of another complaint under the same caption, called "Supplemental Complaint." With this understanding of the pleadings this court affirmed the judgment of the circuit court. A petition for rehearing has been filed, and we are now convinced that the first complaint printed in the record was in fact a complaint filed by Mrs. Leda K. Mayfield, and that the only pleading filed by the Phoenix Insurance Company was the complaint improperly designated "Supplemental Complaint." This state of the pleadings is vital, and requires a change in the judgment of the court.

Mrs. Leda K. Mayfield brought her action against the Southern Railway Company, Carolina Division, for the loss of certain property which she alleged was destroyed by fire communicated by sparks from the defendant company's locomotives. Her complaint set out that part of the loss had been paid by the Phoenix Insurance Company under its policy, and her demand was for judgment for the difference between the alleged value of the property lost and the insurance received. Afterwards the Phoenix Insurance Company filed what is termed in the record a "supplemental complaint," setting out more fully the facts upon which it claimed the right of subrogation. In the complaint judgment was demanded for $7,250, the entire alleged value of the property. The defendant answered this complaint by a general denial, and by the allegation that there was another action pending for the same cause of action. This complaint was entitled, "Ex parte Phoenix Ins. Co., In re Mrs. L. K. Mayfield and Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Southern Railway Co., Carolina Division. Supplemental Complaint." In this state of the pleadings Judge Wilson refused a motion made on behalf of the Phoenix Insurance Company to join that company as a party plaintiff in the action of Mrs. Mayfield, and to allow the supplemental complaint to be made a part of the pleadings in that case. The ground upon which the motion was refused does not appear in the record. While a simpler method might have been found, we think the procedure adopted by the Phoenix Insurance Company is in substantial compliance with the views expressed in Mobile Insurance Company v. Columbia, etc., Ry. Co., 41 S. C. 408, 19 S. E. 858, 44 Am. St. Rep. 725. It was there held that, where the equity of subrogation exists in favor of the insurance company, the insured after receiving payment from the insurer becomes a trustee of the insurer to that extent, and to that extent is bound to assign to the insurance company the claim against the railroad company; and, if the insured fails to make the assignment, the insurer as cestui que trust may sue in the name of the insured as trustee. The court indicated further that the cause of action in such a case is not divisible, and that the rights of all parties interested in the loss should be adjudicated in one action. From this it follows that, when the insured has instituted an action in his own behalf to recover only the difference between the loss and the insurance paid, the insurer should assert its claim to subrogation by a motion to be made a party, and to require the complaint amended so as to set out the facts upon which it claims the equity of subrogation. It is, of course, understood that this opinion does not bear at all on the question whether Mrs. Mayfield or the Phoenix Insurance Company have any cause of action against the Southern Railway Company.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

MORRIS v. DUTCHESS INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
April 26, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 559*) — PROOFS OF LOSS — WAIVER—DENIAL OF LIABILITY.

Denial by a fire insurance company, within the sixty days given the insured to furnish preliminary proofs of loss, of its liability on other grounds, is in legal effect a waiver of the conditions of the policy requiring such proofs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1391; Dec. Dig. § 559.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 559*) — PROOFS OF LOSS — WAIVER—AUTHORITY TO MAKE.

But such denial and notice thereof to the insured to bind the insurance company must be by some officer, or agent having authority, express or implied. Neither the declaration of a local soliciting agent nor of an adjuster not shown to have authority to make such denial will bind the insurance company, or excuse the insured from compliance with the conditions of the policy to furnish such preliminary proofs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1391, 1392; Dec. Dig. § 559.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 612*)—ACTION ON POLICY—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—PROOFS OF LOSS.

Furnishing of the preliminary proofs of loss as required by the conditions of a policy of fire insurance is a condition precedent to any right of action thereon, and unless waived an action on the policy does not accrue to the insured until such proofs have been furnished.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1521; Dec. Dig. § 612.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Action by Mary L. Morris against the Dutchess Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

E. D. Lewis and D. J. Carter, for plaintiff in error. Davis & Davis and E. B. Templeman, for defendant in error.

MILLER, J. In an action on a policy of fire insurance defendant, in addition to the general issue, filed a statement, as provided by section 64, c. 125, Code 1906, that it would also rely, by way of defense, first, on the fact that the insured had not given immediate notice in writing to defendant of the loss, and had not within sixty days after the fire nor at any time furnished proofs of the loss, as required by the provisions of the policy, wherefore no right of action thereon had ever accrued to plaintiff; second, on the fact that the building covered by the policy sued on had been allowed to be and become vacant and unoccupied and to so remain for a period of more than ten days, in violation of the conditions of the policy, rendering the same void.

Plaintiff did not claim or prove on the trial that she had ever furnished defendant with proofs of loss required by the terms of the policy, but on the trial, without having filed any statement in writing specifying the same, as required by section 65 of said chapter 125, Code 1906, insisted that defendant had waived such proofs of loss by denying, within the sixty days given by the policy for furnishing such proofs, any and all liability under the policy for the loss incurred.

Issues being joined on the pleadings filed the jury on the trial returned a verdict for plaintiff for $1,145, which upon the defendant's motion was set aside and a new trial awarded.

To test the correctness of the judgment below, plaintiff has brought the case here upon a writ of error.

Said section 65, c. 125, Code 1906, provides that "if plaintiff intends to rely upon any matter in waiver, estoppel or in confession or avoidance of any matter which may have been stated by the defendant, * * * he "must file a statement in writing, specifying in general terms the matter on which he intends so to rely" verified by affidavit. The point is not made that plaintiff did not give notice of waiver by defendant of her promissory warranty to furnish proofs of loss, but it is doubtful whether under the provision of the statute, she should now be permitted to rely on such alleged waiver. We need not decide this question, however, for in our judgment the facts proven do not amount to a waiver by defendant.

This proposition, many times decided, that "denial by an insurance company of its liability on other grounds, within the time allowed for furnishing preliminary proofs of loss, is in law a waiver of the conditions of the policy requiring such proofs," is not controverted. Medley v. Insurance Co., 55 W. Va. 342, 47 S. E. 101 (Syl., point 11); Deitz v. Insurance Co., 33 W. Va. 526, 11 S. E. 50, 25 Am. St. Rep. 908 (Syl., point 4); Sheppard v. Insurance Co., 21 W. Va. 368 (Syl., point 14);

Cleavenger v. Insurance Co., 47 W. Va. 595, 610, 35 S. E. 998. Defendant, however, denies that within the sixty days given for furnishing preliminary proofs of loss it or any one authorized by it denied its liability on other grounds. It is not claimed by plaintiff that any such denial is contained in any letter or notice in writing received from defendant company. The evidence relied on is that on the day following the fire plaintiff's husband, for her, verbally notified a local agent of defendant of the loss; that this agent notified the general agents at Charleston of the loss by letter, acknowledged by them, and that a few days afterwards they sent their adjuster, a special agent, to the place of the fire, who after viewing the premises, did not see or communicate with the insured or her husband, but stated to the local agent on his return from the place of the fire, that he had learned that the property was vacant, and that defendant would deny liability under the policy for that reason. The local agent on the stand as a witness for plaintiff would not say that he was authorized by defendant or the adjuster to notify plaintiff that the defendant denied its liability. Failing to show authority of the local agent to act in the relation to the loss, objections were properly sustained by the court below to questions propounded to D. M. Morris, plaintiff's husband and agent, as to whether the local agent had at any time advised him that defendant would not pay the loss, and the evidence fails to show any notice by defendant to plaintiff at any time within the sixty days, through any local or special agent or otherwise of any denial by defendant of its liability. On the contrary the evidence shows that when written to by plaintiff on April 13, 1905, within the sixty days, the special agent and adjuster who had been sent to see the property, wrote her April 17, 1905, saying: "In reply would say, the contract in your possession will give you the information necessary as to what steps to take." Her answer, April 19, accused the adjuster of evasion, threatening suit, and saying "I suppose you intend to try to beat us out of our money on some technicality."

This was practically all that occurred showing or tending to show denial of liability by defendant until in June, 1905, long after the expiration of the sixty days, when the matter was again taken up by counsel directly with defendant company, and being by it referred to its general agents at Charleston, correspondence between counsel and agents ensued resulting then in a denial by its agents of any liability on the part of defendant. In the meantime no proofs of loss were furnished.

The policy specifically provides that "no officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions and conditions no officer, agent or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto, nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under the policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached." Another provision of this policy says: "No suit or action on this policy, for the recovery of any claim, shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the assured with all the foregoing requirements, nor unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire." This includes the furnishing of preliminary proofs of loss. It has been held that under such a provision an adjuster could not waive any of the conditions of a policy. Weed v. London, etc., Co., 116 N. Y. 106, 22 N. E. 229. Nor can a local soliciting agent do so. May on Ins. § 129. In Medley v. Ins. Co., 55 W. Va. 342, 47 S. E. 101, this court said: "As to promissory warranties, conditions for the violation of which the policy is rendered non-effective after it has become effective and operative, such limitation clause is not only notice to the insured of want of authority in the agent to waive them, but also a stipulation between the parties that the agent has not, and shall not have, any such power." Failure to make proof of loss required by the terms of the policy as a condition precedent to right of action thereon is not excused by a claimed waiver, not in writing, by an agent of the company not shown to have any express authority to make it and whose action was not ratified by the company. Insurance Co. v. Encampment Smelting Co., 166 Fed. 231, 92 C. C. A. 139; Ruffner Bros. Co. v. Insurance Co., 59 W. Va. 432, 53 S. E. 943, 115 Am. St. Rep. 924.

These authorities make it clear that no act or declaration of either the adjuster or the local agent of the defendant relied on but not shown to have been authorized or ratified by it bound the defendant or excused the plaintiff from furnishing the required proofs of loss, and hence no cause of action has as yet accrued, for the furnishing of such proofs is a condition precedent to action or recovery. Adkins v. Globe Fire Ins. Co., 45 W. Va. 834, 32 S. E. 194 (Syl., point 5); Peninsular Land Co. v. Franklin Ins. Co., 35 W. Va. 666, 14 S. E. 237 (Syl., point 9).

No right of action on the policy having accrued to plaintiff at the time of the suit brought it will be wholly unnecessary for us to consider the question, elaborately argued, whether the policy sued on was rendered void for violation by the assured of the provision of the policy against allowing the property to become vacant and unoccupied and to so remain for a period of more than ten days.

Finding no error in the judgment below it must be affirmed.

PRICE et al. v. LAING.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
April 26, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 429*)—RIGHTS OF GENERAL CREDITOR — BILL AGAINST EXECUTOR.

A general creditor of a deceased person cannot maintain a bill in equity against the personal representative to charge in his hands the personal estate only, without showing some ground of equity jurisdiction, such as inadequacy of the legal remedies, inability to obtain satisfaction of his debt by pursuit thereof to judgment and execution, or necessity for discovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1677; Dec. Dig. § 429.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 65*)—FAILURE TO FILE INVENTORY — BILL FOR DISCOVERY.

Mere failure of a personal representative to return an inventory of the personal estate within the time in which the law requires him to do so will not sustain a bill for discovery and relief in such case. Such a bill must comply with the rule requiring a showing of necessity for the discovery due to indispensability of the evidence sought and inability to obtain it otherwise than by discovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 314; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greenbrier County.

Bill by S. L. Price and others against Thomas K. Laing, administrator. Decree for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Henry Glimmer and J. A. Preston, for appellants. T. K. Laing and File & File, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. S. Lewis Price and others filed their bill in the circuit court of Greenbrier county, against Thomas K. Laing, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of James Laing, deceased, to recover a minimum royalty or rental accruing to them under a lease of coal lands made to the said James Laing in his lifetime and dated January 10, 1906. The amounts claimed are $750, with interest from January 1, 1908, $1,000, with interest from April 1, 1908, and $1,000, with interest from July 1, 1908. Liability to rentals to accrue in the future under the lease is also set up. The only fact alleged as a special ground for jurisdiction in equity is the failure of the administrator to return any appraisement or inventory of the estate of his testator within the time in which he is required by law to do so with the additional charge that the plaintiffs do not know what assets came or should have come to his hands applicable to the payment of the testator's debts. The court having sustained a demurrer to the bill and dismissed it, an appeal has been taken.

It is earnestly insisted upon the authority of Poling v. Huffman, 39 W. Va. 320, 19 S. E. 421, and Hale v. White, 47 W. Va. 700, 35 S. E. 884, that the failure of an administrator to file an inventory, render an account of sales or make the settlements required by law, or any other omission of duty on his part, gives a creditor a right to sue him in equity on the theory of a trust, disregarded or abused, for satisfaction of his debt out of the personal estate. The first of said cases was brought by a creditor within six months from the date of the appointment of the administrator, and the question for actual decision was whether the right of the administrator given by statute to institute a suit to subject the real estate of his decedent to the payment of his debts in the event of a deficiency of personal estate to pay them is exclusive during that period of six months. In discussing that question, Judge Dent undertook to state briefly the ancient remedies of a creditor of a decedent's estate. In this connection he said such a creditor might maintain a separate bill in chancery to compel payment of his individual debt out of the funds in the hands of the personal representative, a bill on behalf of himself and other creditors to ascertain and distribute both the real and personal estate, or a bill of discovery against the personal or real representatives of the estate to discover the assets liable to the payment of his debts. For the first proposition he cited no Virginia or West Virginia authority. For the last one he cited Virginia decisions. None of this was matter of actual decision, except the second proposition above stated. That is settled doctrine, for which no authority need be cited. The real estate can be proceeded against only in equity. In Hale v. White the effort was to charge the administrator by a bill in equity in respect to personal property only. There Judge Dent had occasion to review and accurately define what he meant by the statement made in Poling v. Huffman; and his conclusion was that equity has no jurisdiction of such a case, unless some special ground therefor, such as necessity for discovery or the existence of an equitable demand, is shown. Point 1 of the syllabus emphatically declares this, saying: "A general creditor of a deceased person cannot sustain a bill in equity on a purely legal demand, unless he shows that he has exhausted his legal remedy, or that such remedy, for some good cause, would be inadequate or unavailing."

It is suggested in the opinion in that case that failure to return an inventory may confer such jurisdiction on the ground of discovery, but this is necessarily an obiter dictum, as such failure of duty was not disclosed by the bill. To lack of necessity for decision of such a question we may attribute the indefiniteness of the terms in which the suggestion is couched. It is not tested by, nor analyzed in the light of, the rules applicable to bills for discovery and relief, and there is added the significant qualification, "and the creditor is thus prevented from knowing the true condition of the estate." Taken all together, we think the opinion, as well as the syllabus, declares the bill must make out a case for discovery as ground for relief, or set up some other equity. Lack of an inventory does not necessarily deprive the creditor of information, enabling him to determine whether there are sufficient assets in the hands of the personal representative to satisfy his debt. He may know all about the condition of the estate, notwithstanding such omission of duty, or enough to make certain his ability to obtain satisfaction of his debt by pursuit of the legal remedies, and that is all the interest he has in the estate. Such knowledge suffices his purposes and demands fully. The exact condition of the estate is a matter of no importance to him if he has sufficient knowledge to enable him to collect his debt; that being the full extent of his interest in the estate. Moreover, if it were, he may be abundantly able to prove the exact condition of the estate by competent witnesses other than the defendant. A bill for discovery and relief must show indispensability of the information sought from the defendant and inability to obtain it otherwise than by discovery. Prewett v. Bank, 66 S. E. 231; Dudley v. Niswander & Co., 65 W. Va. 461, 64 S. E. 745; Thompson v. Whitaker Iron Co., 41 W. Va. 574, 23 S. E. 795.

Some authority from other jurisdictions for the position that a single creditor may sue the personal representative in equity for satisfaction of his debt without showing any special ground of equity jurisdiction upon the theory of right to an accounting from the personal representative as a trustee, or right to go into equity to enforce the due administration of a trust, is cited and insisted upon as being founded upon reason and sound principle. There are many instances, no doubt, in which the trust relation suffices to give jurisdiction in equity, but we are unable to see that the application of this principle is broad enough to cover a case of this kind. In law the personal representative is not the agent of the creditor. There is no relation of express or direct contract between them upon which a special duty to render an account can stand. Their relation is that of debtor and creditor, which makes the legal remedies applicable and available. While the personal representative is in a sense a trustee, his trust is created, not by contract, but by law. It is not a simple ordinary trust, such as falls exclusively within the equity jurisdiction. Moreover, practically all the authorities relied upon found the jurisdiction upon a right to a discovery of assets or to subject the real estate of the decedent in the hands of the heirs. The leading case in this country is Thompson v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 619. The bill in that case averred the necessity of discovery. The same is true of the bill in Kennedy v. Creswell, 101 U. S. 641, 25 L. Ed. 1075. Most of the Virginia cases relied upon were bills to charge the real estate, as well as to administer the personal estate, on the theory of a deficiency of personal property. Rice v. Hartman, 84 Va. 251, 4 S. E. 621; Hurn v. Keller, 79 Va. 415; Carter v. Hampton's Adm'rs, 77 Va. 631; Duerson's Adm'r v. Alsop, 27 Grat. (Va.) 229. An exception to this rule, and authority for the position taken in the brief, may be found in Beverly v. Rhodes, 86 Va. 415, 10 S. E. 572, but that case is not clear on this point. The opinion is short, and does not set forth the pleadings. The heirs seem to have been made parties, importing an attempt to charge the real estate. For all that we can see, the bill may have shown deficiency of personal estate, and necessity of resort to the real estate. Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 156, is relied upon and seems to say the right of a creditor of a decedent to go into equity for satisfaction of his debt is never denied, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, but, if this is the correct reading of the text, it is admitted, in a subsequent part of the section, that "throughout the great majority of the United States, however, this jurisdiction of equity, even where not expressly abrogated, has become virtually obsolete." Whatever the doctrine may be elsewhere, Hale v. White, cited, the only decision of this court bearing directly on the question, denies such jurisdiction in this state, and a suit in equity, under such circumstances, is contrary to our practice.

Perceiving no error in the decree appealed from, we affirm it.

TRI-STATE TRACTION CO. v. PITTSBURG, W. & K. R. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
April 26, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 91*)—CROSSING WITH OTHER ROADS—SUIT TO DETERMINE—PARTIES.

In a suit pursuant to Code 1906, c. 52, § 11, for decree fixing the crossing of one railroad by another, the holders of the mortgage bonds of the defendant railroad are not necessary parties when the trustees in the mortgage are made parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 91*)—CROSSING WITH OTHER ROADS—SUIT TO ESTABLISH—PLEADING.

An allegation of the bill in such suit which merely states that certain original mortgage trustees are dead and that defendant trustees have been appointed in their stead contains sufficient particularity as to the fact.

3. RAILROADS (§ 91*)—CROSSINGS—ACTION TO ESTABLISH—EVIDENCE.

If the proposed crossing is within a city, it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff company to show that the municipal government has specifically granted permission to make the same, when a franchise from the city for the construction of plaintiff's railroad at the place of the crossing is shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 89*)—CROSSINGS—STEAM AND ELECTRIC ROADS.

An electric railroad may be decreed the right to cross a steam railroad. The physical character of the railroad seeking the crossing, or that of the railroad proposed to be crossed, has nothing to do with the applicability of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 90*)—GRADE CROSSINGS.

Grade crossings are not prohibited but are authorized by the law of this state. Where the facts warrant a crossing at grade, its construction and operation may be decreed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Brooke County.

Bill by the Tri-State Traction Company against the Pittsburg, Wheeling & Kentucky Railroad Company and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. B. Sommerville, for appellants. Henry M. Russell and J. F. Cree, for appellee.

ROBINSON, P. In the construction of an electric railroad from Steubenville to Wellsburg, the Tri-State Traction Company deemed it necessary to cross at grade the right of way and tracks of the Pittsburg, Wheeling & Kentucky Railroad Company, on 27th street in Wellsburg. The companies could not agree upon a crossing. By bill in equity, pursuant to Code, c. 52, § 11, the Tri-State Traction Company sought a decree for the establishment of the crossing desired. Upon a hearing of the cause, the plaintiff company was decreed the right to cross at grade the property of the other company at the place designated, by the payment of damages to be ascertained according to the provisions of chapter 42 of the Code. The manner of the crossing was particularly prescribed, and the respective rights of the parties in relation to the matter were definitely fixed and determined. From this decree the Pittsburg, Wheeling & Kentucky Railroad Company, and its lessee, the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, have appealed. Let us notice the points presented by the assignments of error.

The bill is not insufficient because the holders of the mortgage bonds of the Pittsburg, Wheeling & Kentucky Railroad Company are not made parties. The trustees in the mortgage deed of trust are parties to the bill. Their presence as parties suffices for the protection of the interests of the bondholders. "Indeed, whenever the rule obliging all parties interested to be parties is, from their number, impracticable, or extremely difficult, it is so far dispensed with, or rather modified, as to require only sufficient parties to secure a fair contest, by representing all the separate interests." 4 Minor's Inst. (4th Ed.) 1396. Generally, in a suit for foreclosure of a railroad mortgage the bondholders are not necessary parties. Why should they be in a case like this one? There is no more reason for making them parties here than in a foreclosure suit. "A trustee for bondholders represents their interests, and when made a party to a suit affecting their interests, they are as much bound by the decree rendered in the suit as if they were individually made parties to the suit." Jones on Corporate Bonds and Mortgages, § 398. "It would be impracticable to make the bondholders parties in a suit to foreclose a railroad mortgage and there is no rule in equity which requires it to be done." Vose v. Bronson, 6 Wall. 452, 18 L. Ed. 848. It is just as impracticable to make the bondholders parties to a suit like the one before us. This suit is of the nature of a condemnation proceeding. Its purpose is to prepare the way for a proper condemnation of the property sought to be taken. "Ordinarily, in proceedings to subject trust property to public use, the trustee is the proper party to represent the trust estate, and it is not necessary that the beneficiaries be made parties." 7 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 513.

Nor is the bill insufficient in its allegations relative to the fact that two of the defendant trustees were appointed to succeed trustees originally named in the deeds of trust. The bill alleges that those original trustees are now dead and that these defendant trustees have been appointed in their stead. We deem this sufficient particularity in a pleading having for its object that which is sought by this bill. And we find the bill entirely sufficient in its allegations relative to the franchise obtained by the plaintiff company from the municipal government of Wellsburg. The bill shows that the plaintiff company has been granted a right to construct its road within that city, and to construct that road at the place therein where the crossing is proposed to be made. It is not incumbent upon the plaintiff company to specifically show a grant by the city of the right to cross the tracks of the other company.

The point is made that the statute under which this suit is brought does not contemplate the crossing of a steam railroad by an electric railroad. So, it is contended that this suit by an electric railroad is not authorized by law. There is no weight in this contention. The statute expressly applies to "any railroad" which deems a crossing of "any other railroad" necessary. The physical character of the railroad, the service rendered, or the motive power used, has nothing to do with the applicability of this statute. The road of the plaintiff company is a "railroad," though it renders a somewhat different service from that of the other company and is operated by a different motive power.

It is insisted that the plans for an overhead crossing at another point which were proposed by the company whose property is sought to be taken should have been adopted and a decree entered accordingly. Whatever may be said against the propriety of grade crossings because of the dangers and inconveniences attending them, we must observe that our law expressly authorizes crossings at grade. Railroad Co. v. Traction Co., 56 W. Va. 18, 48 S. E. 746. Where the facts warrant a decree for a crossing of that character there is certainly no error in the court making such decree. A considerate review of the evidence in this case justifies the conclusion that the circuit court reached and warrants its decree in the premises. The sound discretion vested in the court in such case as the one under consideration has not been abused.

The assignments are not well taken. An affirmance of the decree will be ordered.

MCGRAW v. LAKIN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
April 26, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TAXATION (§ 414*)—ASSESSMENT LIST—TAX DEED—VALIDITY.

In an assessment and sale list for taxes in the surnames of two joint owners, as "Cofran & McGraw," the mere omission of their Christian names does not render a deed under a tax sale void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 691; Dec. Dig. § 414.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 764*)—ASSESSMENT—CERTAINTY IN DESCRIPTION.

In case of separate ownership of minerals, an assessment and sale for taxes of "mineral rights" in a tract of land is a sufficient description of the ownership of the property in such minerals, and such description does not render a tax deed void because of uncertainty in description.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1519-1522; Dec. Dig. § 764.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 530*)—MINERAL RIGHTS—PAYMENT OF TAXES BY SURFACE OWNER.

Payment of taxes on a tract of land by the surface owner is not payment of taxes on minerals in it owned by another person and separately assessed with taxes in the name of the owner of the minerals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 530.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. WORDS AND PHRASES—"MINING RIGHT."

"A 'mining right' is a right to enter upon and occupy ground for the purpose of working it, either by underground excavation or open working, to obtain from it the minerals or ores which may be deposited thereunder. By implication, the grant of such a right carries with it whatever is incident to it and necessary to its beneficial enjoyment. The term may also include licenses and the rights of the owner of the minerals."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4522.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County.

Bill by John T. McGraw against James S. Lakin and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Mollohan, McClintic & Mathews and Linn & Byrne, for appellants. Wm. G. Conley and P. J. Crogan, for appellees.

BRANNON, J. John T. McGraw brought a chancery suit in the circuit court of Preston county against James S. Lakin and others to set aside a tax deed for minerals in two tracts of land adjoining, making up a solid tract of 300 acres. The circuit court dismissed McGraw's suit without relief, and McGraw appeals.

There was a demurrer to the bill and amended bill. We consider the bill defective. The original bill, which, in this respect, is not helped by the amended bill, is very general. It simply charges, in general words, that the clerk of the county court without any legal authority made a conveyance, and that the assessment was illegal, null, and void, but wherein the bill does not tell us. There is no specification of defect, as there must be. Gerke Brewing Co. v. St. Clair, 46 W. Va. 93, 33 S. E. 122. The bill does say that the clerk conveyed more than the tax sale authorized; precisely wherein it does not say. I think the bills insufficient, and that the demurrer was well taken because of their uncertainty and indefiniteness. But let us waive the demurrer and come to the merits. The claim is as argued here that the assessment was too general and indefinite. No exhibit of that assessment is made; but, if we assume from the list of sales that the assessment was the same, what do we find? We find a charge for the years of 1895 and 1896 in the names of "Cofran & McGraw," a charge of real estate in quantity 300 acres in fee in Reno district, and the subject charged "Mineral Right." As to the name of the party charged, I will say that the record discloses that John T. McGraw and Leroy Cofran became owners of the minerals in said tract of land. The entry on the tax list in the names of Cofran and McGraw is not misleading, and it signifies to the common understanding, and certainly to both McGraw and Cofran, that they were charged with taxes. It did not mislead them. In prior years it had been so taxed, and they knew it, because they paid taxes under such charge. Our statute says that an irregularity, such as will impair a tax sale, must be such as to mislead the taxpayer. There is no evidence that this irregularity, if we call it even an irregularity, is such as did in fact mislead the owners. It would be very technical to sustain this failure to give the Christian names as a fatal defect. The surname is the substance—the Christian name minor or subordinate. A part of the name, the surname, if correct, is sufficient without the Christian name. Shall the name of each of a dozen owners be given, or a hundred, if there be so many? Shall a host of heirs be each one named in the narrow compass of an assessment list? I think not. It is enough if the name be plainly significant of the owners, so as not to mislead. But in truth the bills do not exhibit an assessment list or even a list of the sale. A sale list is printed in the record, but not made an exhibit. But the main complaint seems to be based on the theory that the assessment in the words "Mineral Right" is uncertain and indefinite. Now, what do those words import to the common understanding? I answer that they signify title or right to all that is mineral in the land. What otherwise should the entry say? Should it be minerals? What would that indicate except right and title to the minerals? I do not see how it could be plainer or more definite. "A 'mining right' is a right to enter upon and occupy the ground for the purpose of working it, either by underground excavation or open working, to obtain from it the minerals or ores which may be deposited thereunder. By implication the grant of such a right carries with it whatever is incident to it and necessary to its beneficial enjoyment." Clark v. Duval, 15 Cal. 86; Smith v. Cooley, 65 Cal. 46, 47, 2 Pac. 880; Sholl Bros. v. People, 194 Ill. 24, 61 N. E. 1122. "So these incorporeal rights to mine are sometimes described merely as mining rights, though that term may include licenses and the rights of the owner of the minerals." Barringer and Adams, Mines and Mining, p. 54. "The rule is laid down broadly that a reservation of minerals or mining rights is to be construed as a grant, and this may be taken to apply equally to an exception." Same, p. 83. So we regard this assessment of "mining right" specifying the tract, the district of its location, and the names of the owners sufficient.

As to the claim that the clerk conveyed more than the sale authorized, the argument is that the assessment and sale of "mineral rights" could not warrant the clerk to convey to the tax purchaser all the minerals in the land, or the absolute title to any such minerals. The very authority cited for this proposition contradicts it. One authority is Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts (Pa.) 37. It says: "'Minerals' means all ores and other metallic substances which are found beneath the surface of the earth, and all substances which are the object of mining operations." Another is Smith v. Cooley, 65 Cal. 46, 2 Pac. 880. Another is L. & N. R. Co. v. Massey, 136 Ala. 156, 33 South. 896, 96 Am. St. Rep. 17, saying that: "Mining rights must include incorporeal hereditaments lying in grant, but not in seisin; such as rights of way over the surface, the right to dig and drive slopes and entries, and the like rights of an intangible nature, incapable of being delivered by the sheriff, or of possession by the owner." That authority does not say that "mining rights" does not include the minerals themselves. On the contrary, it means that "mining rights" include not only the minerals, but right of way and other uses of the surface necessary for the enjoyment of title to the minerals. Now, the deed in this case recites the purchase by Lakin, Coogle, and Pickenpaugh "of the mineral under" the tract specifically described in the deed, and then says: "The mineral only under said tract is hereby intended to be conveyed." That conveyed all the mineral, and the assessment and sale of the "mineral rights" would be as broad as the deed. The deed did not convey more than the sale authorized. If the sale list were exhibited with the bills, it would correspond with the deed. We have considered the case on its merits, though the bill does not warrant it. The argument that we must presume that the surface owner paid the tax on the land, and that this would pay the tax on the mineral, will not hold, because that is the case where there has been no separation of minerals from the body of the land. In this case is a separate assessment and sale of minerals. And there had been such separate assessment for prior years.

We have struggled to decide the case otherwise, so as to prevent the loss to McGraw of valuable property for the failure to pay a pittance of a few dollars to the state; but we find ourselves unable to decide in McGraw's favor, and therefore we affirm the decree.

McCLAUGHERTY v. BLUEFIELD WATER-WORKS & IMPROVEMENT CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 22, 1910. On Rehearing,
May 18, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 148*)—WHEN GRANTED—COMPELLING WATER COMPANY TO FURNISH WATER.

A resident of a city may, in his own name, maintain mandamus against an incorporated water company to compel it to furnish him water as required by its franchise from the city to construct and operate its works in the city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 289; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 202*)— RULES OF WATER COMPANY—VALIDITY.

A rule of a water corporation requiring a consumer of water to repair service pipes leading from its main pipe in a street to the property of the consumer, assented to by him, and made a part of the contract between him and the corporation, is valid; the franchise giving power to make such rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 276; Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

Petition of N. H. McLaugherty for writ of mandamus against the Bluefield Waterworks & Improvement Company. Writ refused.

McLaugherty & Peters and Ritz & Ritz, for petitioner. Sanders & Crockett and A. W. Reynolds, for respondent.

BRANNON, J. The Bluefield Waterworks & Improvement Company is a corporation supplying the city of Bluefield with water. N. H. McLaugherty is a resident of that city owning a lot fronting on one of its streets. He had a contract with the water company to furnish his residence with water. He filed a petition in this court alleging that the water company had cut off the water from his premises, and asking a mandamus to compel the water company to restore water to his premises. The company laid a main pipe for carriage of water along that street.

A law question of importance is raised by the water company. It is that McLaugherty as an individual cannot maintain mandamus to compel the performance of its duties by the water company. By no means can we accede to this proposition. Seeing that McLaugherty is peculiarly and individually interested in the performance of its public duty under the franchise granting the water company admission to the city for supplying the public with water, he must be accorded some adequate remedy for the failure of the company to do its duty to him as a resident of the city. What other effective remedy can he have? A suit for damages? That is a slow process, and does not restore the water to his premises. He needs some prompt and effective remedy that will enforce the supply of water. We find in 26 Cyc. 401 the statement that in some jurisdictions such proceeding must be instituted by the city or a public officer, but that, where a private individual has a special and peculiar interest in the enforcement of the right or the performance of the duty apart from his interest as one of the general public, he may resort to mandamus. This principle is obvious. It is like that principle as to public nuisances, that an individual merely because of his right as one of the general public cannot maintain injunction against a public nuisance; but if he lives on a road which is a means of access to his home or land, impeded by an obstruction, or is in any way peculiarly and individually interested, he can have injunction. Pence v. Bryant, 54 W. Va. 263, 46 S. E. 275. High, Extra Remedies, § 433, and Farnham on Waters, § 159d, pointedly say that such an individual may enforce this right against a water company by mandamus. We are told that this defense of the water company can be sustained by sections 28cI and 28cII, c. 47, Code 1906. There we find that mandamus may be awarded at the instance of the city in its corporate name to compel a water company to perform its duty, and it is said that, as the writ is there given to the municipality, that excludes the right of an individual. This cannot be conceded. The law as just stated is clear that the common law gives an individual the right to maintain mandamus to vindicate his right. Can it be said that this statute was designed to take away from the individual this important privilege of self-protection and the enforcement of his just rights? Not with reason. What rule of construction would sustain this proposition? That citizen cannot lose such an important power without plain words from the Legislature. I think that that statute is perhaps only declaratory of what would be the law without it, which would accord the city right to this writ to enforce the public right under the public franchise for public good, and that the statute is only a precautionary declaration of the right of the city, which would exist without the statute. At any rate, we cannot hold that a remedial statute, made to make the remedy more expressive and clear in behalf of the municipality, can be construed to destroy the individual's action. Moreover, I see that said statute says that it "shall not be construed to deprive such county, city, town or village, or any inhabitant thereof, of any other remedy to compel such individual, association or corporation to comply with the terms, conditions and agreements of such right, privilege, license or franchise, or of the right to recover damages for their failure so to do." This preserves all legal rights existing in an individual. Its intent is to save any existing right of action. We cannot say that the words "any other remedy" saves all other remedies than mandamus and thus takes it away. Why should the Legislature be thought to have singled out that action and taken it away, and left all others? It did not mean to save only the action for damages, for that is expressly saved. The statute is remedial and must be construed as giving the city mandamus, and saving to individuals a like writ existing under the common law.

A leak appeared in the street in front of McLaugherty's residence. The water company sent its hands to investigate the leak; it being supposed that it might be in the main. The hands excavated, and in doing so cut off the water from McLaugherty's service pipe for the purposes of investigation.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

They discovered that the leak was not from the main pipe, but somewhere in the service pipe connecting McClaugherty's residence with the main pipe. McClaugherty, being informed of this, asked the company to give him a little time and he would make the repair. Later he informed the company that he had thought that a few inches of pipe would cure the leak, but, finding out otherwise, he would have nothing more to do with it. He did not demand then that the company turn on the water. Thus declining to make the repair, the company allowed the water to remain cut off. Whose duty was it to cure this leak?

This water company adopted a set of rules for the conduct of its business. Among them was a rule requiring the consumer of water to put in service pipes from the main in the street to his residence, and to keep them in repair. When McClaugherty filed an application to the company to supply him with water, which application calls itself "Application and Contract of Consumer," he signed that application or contract. There were two of them, each for one year. When these contracts were signed, the rule requiring the consumer of water to keep the service pipe in repair was in force. That contract makes McClaugherty ask the company to supply him with water, and for the permission to make the connection and to attach the same to the pipe of the company. Not only that, but by that contract McClaugherty "covenants and agrees to strictly abide by the rules of the company," referring to the rules to be had at the office. This is a part of the body of the contract. These rules are posted for the open inspection of all. These two contracts signed by McClaugherty make this rule a part of his contract. If it is to govern, clearly the case is with the water company. Counsel for McClaugherty states unquestionable law when he says that: "There is no question but that the respondent in a case like this has the right to adopt all such rules as it may deem proper or necessary for the conduct of its business, and it is likewise true that such rules must be reasonable ones." It is well settled that a corporation has power to make all necessary rules and regulations for its government and operation, though such power may not be expressly conferred in its charter, in the statute of its creation or any other statute. It is regarded as a power that is included in the grant of the capacity of being a corporation. It is generally said to be an incident to a corporation. Corporate by-laws must not contravene those principles of common right embodied in the common law or its franchise or law. By-laws must operate equally upon all persons of the class which they are intended to govern. The rule must not be unreasonable, oppressive, or extortionary.

Now, what is there in this rule that contravenes law or public policy? Why is it not within the power of this corporation to contract with the consumer that he shall keep the service pipe in repair? Counsel says this rule is contrary to public policy. This thing of overthrowing a contract as against public policy is a tender thing. It has been called "an unruly horse, astride of which you are carried into unknown and uncertain paths, and here that horse would be carrying us beyond all limits ever reached before, if respondent's position should meet with our approval. While contracts opposed to morality or law should not be allowed to show themselves in courts of justice, yet public policy requires and encourages the making of contracts by competent parties upon all valid and lawful considerations, and courts so recognizing have allowed parties the widest latitude in this regard; and, unless it is entirely plain that a contract is violative of sound public policy, a court will never so declare. 'The power of the courts to declare a contract void for being in contravention of sound public policy is a very delicate and undefined power, and, like the power to declare a statute unconstitutional, should be exercised only in cases free from doubt.' Richmond v. Dubuque, etc., R. R. Co., 26 Iowa, 191. 'Before a court should determine a transaction which has been entered into in good faith, stipulating for nothing that is malum in se, to be void as contravening the policy of the statute, it should be satisfied that the advantage to accrue to the public for so holding is certain and substantial, not theoretical or problematical.' Kellogg v. Larkin, 3 Pin. [Wis.] 125, 56 Am. Dec. 164. 'No court ought to refuse its aid to enforce a contract on doubtful and uncertain grounds. The burden is on the defendant to show that its enforcement would be in violation of the settled public policy of this state, or injurious to the morals of its people.' Swann v. Swann [C. C.] 21 Fed. 299." Stephens v. Southern Pacific Railroad Company, 109 Cal. 86, 41 Pac. 783, 29 L. R. A. 751, 50 Am. St. Rep. 19. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Baltimore Ry. Co. v. Voight, 176 U. S. 498, 20 Sup. Ct. 385, 44 L. Ed. 560, said: "It must not be forgotten that the right of private contract is no small part of the liberty of the citizen, and that the usual and most important function of courts of justice is rather to maintain and enforce contracts than to enable parties thereto to escape from their obligation on the pretext of public policy, unless it clearly appear that they contravene public right or the public welfare."

I again ask why could not this company agree with McClaugherty that he should repair this service pipe, beneficial to his own use? What is there unreasonable in it? I may safely say it is the general rule in cities and towns. Counsel for McClaugherty, admitting the power to make these rules, if reasonable, tells us that this particular rule operates to put upon the consumer a duty which otherwise rests on the water company. The ordinance granting the franchise puts no such duty on the company. It may be that in the absence of a contract the company would be called upon to lay and repair service pipes to the line of the consumer. For this position we are cited to Water Co. v. Standley, 7 Idaho, 155, 61 Pac. 518. It so holds incidentally. A late Virginia case (Vinton-Roanoke Water Co. v. City, 66 S. E. 835) looks the other way. There the water company agreed as a part of its contract of franchise to furnish the city buildings and fire hydrants with water. It was held that the city must make the service pipes to its buildings and hydrants, and that the water company had fulfilled its duties when it had laid its mains along the streets. But we do not have to pass on this question of what would be the duty of the company in the absence of this contractual rule. We say the rule governs this case. This proposition is supported by Gleason v. Waukesha, 108 Wis. 225, 79 N. W. 249, and Prindiville v. Jackson, 79 Ill. 337. Counsel for McClaugherty cites us International Water Co. v. City of El Paso (Tex. Civ. App.) 112 S. W. 816, for the proposition that it is the duty of the water company to construct its pipes to the line of the consumer's property. But that case does not help McClaugherty. It is against him. In that case there was an ordinance requiring the company to furnish water to consumers without provision as to payment for service or connecting pipes, and no rule upon the subject. The court distinctly said: "The contract nowhere provides that the consumer shall pay for such work. * * * We think the failure to provide that the consumer should pay said rates and also the cost of making said connection with his property indicates that he was not to bear the cost of the latter. * * * Primarily the duty to furnish water to property owners on streets containing mains carried with it the duty to do what was necessary to be done to place the company in position to furnish the property with water. It could not do this without connecting to the property line. We think, in order for the respondent to be able to claim immunity for this consequence, there would have to be some provision in the grant or contract which unmistakably, or at least by fair implication, taking into consideration all the provisions bearing on the subject, would relieve it." This admits that if there had been a contract, as in this case, the consumer must furnish and repair the service pipe. To show that McClaugherty is not bound by this contract, we are cited to Rogers Park Water Co. v. Fergus, 178 Ill. 571, 53 N. E. 363. There a party signed a contract for the supply of water in a village adjacent to Chicago contracting to pay certain rates. The village was incorporated with Chicago, and the council of Chicago passed an ordinance lowering water rates. The company claimed that the party must pay the higher rate fixed by the contract; but the Illinois court held that, the rate having been lowered by law, the party should only pay what others paid. However, I notice that the application for water in that case said that it was "subject to the rules and regulations of the company now in force or hereafter to be enacted or adopted, which rules and regulations are hereby made and declared to be part of the contract" between the parties. Of course, that gave the party the right to the lower rates. The very letter of the contract demanded no more.

It is argued that the duty of making and repairing the connecting pipes rests on the company from the consideration that the individual would not have the right to dig up the street to lay his pipe without the city's permission. We cannot accede to this position. The very grant of the franchise necessarily means that the company could dig up the streets for connecting pipes, or that the consumer contracting with it for water might do so under the privilege accorded the company. When the company contracts with the consumer to furnish water, that alone implies that the company makes the consumer its agent to lay the service pipe, and gives him authority to do so, else the franchise would be practically worthless. Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 56, says that the abutting owner has a right of passage and also rights not shared in by the public at large, "special and peculiar to himself, and which arose out of the very relation to his lot to the street in front of it, and that these rights were rights of property. * * * In cities the abutting owner's property is especially dependent upon sewers, gas, and water connection." The abutting owner has a right of access to his premises through the street for coal or wood or other necessary things; the right of ingress for persons; and why may we not call this right to use the street to lay his pipe for conveyance of water a right of access constituting a property right in the street, which he may use and of which he cannot be divested or denied? We recognize this full right of use of the street for the purposes of ingress and egress for all necessary purposes connected with the use of the lot in Pence v. Bryant, 54 W. Va. 263, 46 S. E. 275.

For these reasons we refuse the peremptory mandamus and dismiss the alternative mandamus.

On Rehearing.

A petition for rehearing makes as its strong point that the application and contract signed by McClaugherty, binding him to the company's rule that each consumer of water must furnish and repair service pipes, is invalid because without consideration. I would think that when, at the request of McClaugherty, the parties made a contract by which the water company bound itself to supply McClaugherty with water, and he bound himself to buy water and pay for it, there was benefit and detriment to each contracting party, a mutuality of obligation and benefit, a mutual consideration, a part and element of which contract was the rule alluded to. The company was to make the outlay of furnishing water, a detriment to it, and get pay for it, a benefit; whilst McClaugherty was to pay, a detriment to him, and get the water, a benefit. That seems plain to me. "Anything which confers benefit on a party to whom a promise is made, or loss or inconvenience on the party promising, is a valuable and sufficient consideration," is a sound definition of consideration given by Judge Green in Hornbrooks v. Lucas, 24 W. Va. 497, 49 Am. Rep. 277. "Anything that may be detrimental to the promisee or beneficial to the promisor in legal estimation will constitute good consideration for a promise." 3 Va. & W. Va. Ency. Digest, 338. "A benefit to the party promising, or an injury, loss, charge, or inconvenience, or the risk thereof to the party promised," we said, in Rutherford v. Rutherford, 55 W. Va. 60, 47 S. E. 242, citing 3 Minor's Inst. 183. "Benefit to be derived by each party to a contract furnishes a sufficient consideration for it." Rowan & Co. v. Hull, 55 W. Va. 335, 47 S. E. 92, 104 Am. St. Rep. 998.

But the petition for rehearing, as an additional argument to show no consideration, puts the proposition that, when this water company got its franchise, it was bound by law to furnish service pipes in order to perform its public duty as a part thereof, and that the consumer was not bound to do so, and that this contract makes McClaugherty do what he was not bound to do, and relieves the company of its obligation, and is without law to support it, and is without consideration; that is to say, that this rule requiring the consumer to furnish water is against public policy as relieving an incorporated company of public service from its duty. I should think the party could bind himself by such a contract. But a decisive answer to that proposition is found in the franchise granted to the company, which gives the company power to maintain its works and supply the city and citizens with water, "upon any terms and conditions that from time to time may be agreed upon by and between the said Bluefield Waterworks & Improvement Company, its successors and assigns, and the said city of Bluefield and other patrons and customers of the said Bluefield Waterworks & Improvement Company." Under that clause of its franchise the company could make such rule as that involved in this case. It was thus given full authority to do so. The rule is thus binding.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. May 3, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In trial of right to property levied on, conflicting facts and circumstances in relation to fraud vitiating claimant's title as against creditors are properly determinable by the jury and their verdict upon such facts and circumstances will not be disturbed.

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 442*)—SALE OF CORPORATE PROPERTY.

When all the stockholders of a corporation informally but plainly authorize a sale of all the corporate property, a transfer thereof on behalf of the corporation in pursuance of the authority so given is the corporate act and passes title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Fayette County.

Action by Bettie Kennedy against the Merchants' & Miners' Bank and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Hubard & Lee and Payne & Hamilton, for plaintiffs in error. Osenton & McPeak and Charles E. Hogg, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, P. Executions were levied on personal property as belonging to the Allegheny Bottling Company, a corporation. These writs were issued on judgments against that company. G. L. Hooper was its president and general manager. While suits were pending in which the judgments were obtained he, acting ostensibly for the corporation, sold and transferred to his sister-in-law, Bettie Kennedy, all the property that it owned. When the officer took charge of the property under the levies, she sought to establish her ownership thereto by petition pursuant to the statute. The justice found that she was not the owner; but on appeal a trial by jury in the circuit court resulted in verdict and judgment for her. The execution creditors have obtained the writ of error we must now consider.

It was personal property only that the corporation owned and Hooper sold. He executed and delivered to his sister-in-law a written bill of sale for it. That writing is made by him as president and general manager of the corporation. It plainly purports to have been made on behalf of the corporation by its authority duly given. The consideration for the sale was the surrender of two notes made by Hooper to his sister-in-law, for borrowed money. These parties assert that the corporation in fact assumed the repayment of this money, and that the corporation actually did repay it by the transfer of the property in satisfaction of the debt. After the sale was consummated, Hooper was employed by the new owner and took charge of the property for her.

The ownership of the claimant is attacked upon two grounds. It is submitted that the sale was a fraudulent and invalid one as far as creditors were concerned—that the transfer was made for the manifest purpose of defeating creditors. Then, it is insisted that the sale of the property was not by corporate action and that therefore the whole transaction was ineffectual to pass title to the corporate property.

The question of fraud is foreclosed by the determination of the jury. It was properly submitted to them and plainly called to their attention by an instruction. They saw the witnesses and judged of their credibility. There is nothing in the evidence so admittedly contrary to their finding as to call for a disturbance of that finding. But there is evidence sufficient to uphold the verdict in this particular. The purchaser testified that she had no knowledge whatever of the claims of creditors other than herself, that she bought the property in good faith, and that she paid a valid consideration therefor. In all this she is not directly contradicted. Other facts and circumstances in the case tended to overthrow her claims in these particulars, but the jury evidently found that these facts and circumstances did not overthrow her direct evidence. It was peculiarly their province so to find if they believed the evidence warranted the conclusion.

It is true that the sale was not made by formal corporate action. The corporation appears to have had practically no existence but in name. Though it was duly chartered there was no formal and regular corporate organization. The stock belonged wholly to two persons, it is proved. Hooper owned two-thirds of it, and another party, Blizzard, owned the other third. The wives of these two and a brother of Hooper were originally merely nominal stockholders, for the purposes of incorporation. The corporation simply succeeded a partnership composed of Hooper and Blizzard, which had been carrying on the identical business under the same name that the corporation assumed. No more in fact was done than to make the name a corporate one instead of a partnership one. Hooper continued as in the partnership to exercise the power to do everything about the business which he saw fit without regard to formal corporate action. He was indeed the mind of the corporation. He was the majority stockholder, the sole director, and the only officer.

Was the sale by corporate action? The contract evidencing it is executed ostensibly by the corporation. The officer who executed the contract professedly in its behalf was the appropriate one to execute such a contract in behalf of the corporation. The law, under these circumstances, presumes a precedent authorization regularly and rightfully made, if the corporation itself had the power to make such contract. 10 Cyc. 1003. Certainly a corporation legally may make a sale of its property, such as is evidenced by this writing. So the written contract or bill of sale is clearly prima facie evidence of the corporate act which it evidences. But it is shown pretty clearly that no meeting of the stockholders was formally held at which the execution of this writing could have been authorized. Thus its regularity and efficiency is attacked. For, under our law action by the stockholders is essential to the authorization of a sale of the property and assets of a corporation.

But it was proved before the jury that Hooper and Blizzard owned all the stock of the corporation and that they both assented that the sale should be made. As to these facts parol evidence was admissible. Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227. The corporation did not necessarily cease to exist because the number of stockholders became reduced to a number less than five. Code 1906, c. 53, § 17. It had not been dissolved. Then, was the joint assent and authorization of all the stockholders, obtained other than at a meeting regularly called as provided by law, a sufficient authority for the sale and the execution of the writing in that behalf? We are of the opinion that it was.

Our statute expressly empowers the stockholders of a corporation to authorize a sale of its property. In this case the corporate property was sold by the authority of the stockholders. The irregularity of the corporate organization—the failure to maintain a board of directors or whatever it may be—does not annihilate this power, if the corporation actually exists. If there are stockholders they may authorize a sale, provided they do so by an observance of the true purposes of the statute. The language of that statute is: "On the affirmative vote, in person or by proxy, of the holders of at least sixty per centum of the outstanding stock of the corporation, such corporation may sell, transfer or assign in good faith, all of its property and assets; but a smaller majority shall not have the right to make such a sale, transfer or assignment. But no sale, transfer or assignment of property and assets of such corporation shall be made, except at a general or special meeting of the stockholders, called in the manner provided by law." Code 1906, c. 54, § 83. Does this law demand that in all cases there shall be a formal meeting, called in the manner therein stated? If such meeting is called in the manner provided, the sale may be authorized by a vote of the holders of at least sixty per cent. of the stock; but is such formally called meeting essential to the sale when all the stockholders clearly assent that it be made by the corporation and in truth authorize it? May not all the stockholders voluntarily assemble, express their assent to a sale, and direct that some officer or agent execute the same on behalf of the corporation? This statute is to be construed in the light of its evident purpose. It directs a meeting, called in the manner provided by law, so that each and every stockholder may have the opportunity to express his views and cast his vote upon the question of a proposed sale, and so that it may thus be ascertained fairly that the holders of at least sixty per cent. of the stock do in fact authorize a sale. Its object is the protection of the minority stockholder. It exists for his protection. By it he is given the opportunity to be heard by argument and vote. The formal call of a meeting is directed in order that each and every stockholder shall have a say. Only for that purpose does the statute require a formally called meeting. But when all the stockholders informally but plainly authorize a sale of all the corporate property on its behalf, as we must assume the jury found was true in this case, then the very object of the statute does not demand its technical application. In the case before us, all the stockholders had an opportunity to be heard on the question of a sale and all of them assented to it, we may say from the verdict. That is even more than the statute demands. It does demand the opportunity for all to be heard, but not the assent of all. If the statute had been technically followed, the same result would have been reached. Its spirit has not been violated. The statute undoubtedly says that the stockholders may authorize a sale. When they all do so in a manner not formally in accord with the directions of the statute but just as clearly and as fairly as it requires, why should not the act be sustained as a valid one by the corporation?

We have heretofore held that a stockholder who owns more than sixty per cent. of the stock of a corporation cannot, in justice to public policy, bindingly contract to sell all the corporate property before a meeting and vote as required by law. Bias v. Atkinson, 64 W. Va. 486, 63 S. E. 395. But even by the qualifications expressed in that decision it appears that such contract may be made if the contracting stockholder is acting for all the other stockholders and by their consent.

Let it be distinctly observed that we do not hold that stockholders have such title to the corporate property that they may pass it by a sale to which all of them assent. They do not own the property. The title is in the corporation. But we do hold that assent by all the stockholders, clearly and fairly expressed, may constitute corporate action for the sale of all the corporate property and assets and may authorize the corporate title to be passed. 7 Thompson on Corporations, §§ 8402, 8403; Clark on Corporations, § 9; Cunningham v. German Ins. Co., 101 Fed. 977, 41 C. C. A. 609.

If the sale in question was one in good faith and one which every stockholder authorized after an opportunity to be heard. It was legally made by the corporation itself. And if there was evidence upon which the jury could find these conditional facts to be true, the verdict in this particular was also justified. Clearly there was before the jury sufficient evidence upon which to base a finding of these facts. The facts which we must assume that the jury found, and the law applicable thereto, characterize the sale as an honest and valid one between the corporation and the purchaser. Though its effect may have been to prefer a creditor of the corporation, under the finding of facts by the jury it is nevertheless valid as between the parties to pass title to the property. How far it may have been affected by suit in equity under the statute relating to preferences we cannot here properly inquire.

No error for which the judgment should be reversed is perceived. An affirmance, therefore, will be ordered.

CASTLEMAN'S ADM'R v. CASTLEMAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 3, 1910.)

1. JUDICIAL SALES (§§ 31, 52*)—CONFIRMATION—CURE OF IRREGULARITIES—MISTAKE IN AMOUNT OF LAND SOLD—REMEDY OF PURCHASER.

If commissioners authorized by a court decree to make sale of land decreed to be sold undertake without specific authority given to sell the land by the acre, and the sale is so reported to and confirmed by the court, such confirmation will cure any irregularities of the commissioners in making such sale, and if by mistake resulting from the actions of court and commissioners less land be sold than was bid for and supposed to be sold the purchaser will be entitled to a proportionate abatement of the purchase money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 66, 100; Dec. Dig. §§ 31, 52.*]

2. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 52*)—MISTAKE IN AMOUNT OF LAND SOLD—REMEDY OF PURCHASER.

Such relief may be obtained by the purchaser upon petition filed in the cause, by way of defense on a rule to show cause why the land should not be resold to pay the balance of purchase money, or by way of defense when sued on the purchase money notes, or by any other appropriate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 100; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

3. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 52*)—CAVEAT EMPTOR—APPLICATION OF RULE.

The rule caveat emptor does not apply to mistakes in the quantity of land sold by the acre at a judicial sale, as it does to defects of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-103; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

4. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 52*)—MISTAKE IN AMOUNT OF LAND SOLD—LACHES.

Nor as a general rule will the rule of laches be applied to a purchaser at such judicial sale, if no equities have intervened and the rights of no one will be injuriously affected by a proportionate abatement of the purchase money, so long at least as the purchaser still retains in his hands, unpaid, sufficient of the purchase money out of which such abatement can be made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 176*)—QUANTITY OF LAND SOLD—ALLOWANCE TO COVER ERRORS IN SURVEYS.

The arbitrary rule of allowing five per cent to cover inaccuracies reasonably imputable to variations of instruments and small errors in surveys, referred to in W. M. & M. Co. v. Peytona C. C. Co., 8 W. Va. 406, 437, and recognized in Pratt v. Bowman, 87 W. Va. 715, 721, 17 S. E. 210, is inapplicable to sale by the acre of valuable farming lands. In such cases only such allowance should be made as, considering the inequality of the ground and other obstacles hindering an accurate survey, may reasonably be imputable to such variations of instruments and small errors in surveys.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 333-340; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

6. JUDICIAL SALES (§§ 1, 31*)—NATURE.

In judicial sales, the court is the vendor and contracting party on the one hand and the purchaser on the other, the commissioners being merely the creatures of the court, and a sale is never complete until reported to and confirmed by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 59; Dec. Dig. §§ 1, 31.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County.

Action by James J. Singleton, administrator of H. W. Castleman, against Dewanna Castleman and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Forrest W. Brown, for appellant. R. T. Barton, for appellees.

MILLER, J. This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court, pronounced February 18, 1908, denying to a purchaser abatement of purchase money on account of alleged deficiency of acres sold and purchased.

By decree of August 8, 1887, and another supplementing it of October 14, 1892, special commissioners appointed were authorized to make sale, upon the terms prescribed, of "396 acres, 1 rood and 26 perches, Home Tract, and the 419 acres Mountain Tract of land in the bill and proceedings mentioned." By the latter decree the commissioners thereby appointed in place of those appointed by the former decree were directed to proceed to execute the same with such further powers as were given thereby, to-wit: To "make sale as a whole or in parcel of all the real estate in the bill and proceedings mentioned, free from the widow's dower on terms of one third cash, one third in one year, and one third payable six months after the death of Dewanna Castleman, both of said deferred payments to bear interest from date, and on the latter the interest is to be paid annually to the said Dewanna Castleman during her life, and both of said deferred payments to be evidenced by bonds of the purchaser, and secured by the retention of the title to the property until paid, or at the option of the purchaser, a deed will be made to said property, and a deed of trust taken to secure the deferred payments."

The report of the commissioners to whom the cause was referred, on August 3, 1887, reported the Home Farm as "containing 396 acres, 1 rood and 26 perches, value $55.00 per acre"; but the report of the commissioner appointed to assign dower to the widow, returned June 7, 1892, with accompanying plat and survey made by T. G. Baylor, surveyor, shows the Home Tract by metes and bounds to contain 409.85 acres.

The commissioners in their published notice of sale, set for November 15, 1892, described the Home Tract as composed of three several tracts as follows: (1) 250²/₁₀ acres of fine farming land, with some woodland, but no improvements, lying south of the river road; (2) 152²/₁₀ acres of No. 1 land, with the improvements lying north of the river road; (3) 6 acres of land with grist and saw mill and dwelling lying on both sides of turnpike, aggregating 408⁷/₁₀ acres. They also gave notice that in making sale the first two tracts would be offered together, then all three tracts together, the choice of bids to be accepted, and referred prospective purchasers to plats of the land in their possession at Charles Town.

Parthenia Singleton became the purchaser, and the commissioners on the day of sale entered into a contract in writing with her, made a part of and returned along with their report to the court of said sale.

In their report to the court the commissioners say that they offered the land in the bill and proceedings mentioned in accordance with said decrees, as shown by the attached advertisement, and that said "Parthenia Singleton's bid was the best obtained, which was $40.25 per acre for the home farm and $4.00 per acre for the mountain land, as shown by her agreement" which was in writing and therewith submitted. The contract says that the "Home tract of 409.85 acres was knocked down to said Parthenia Singleton at the bid of $40²⁵/₁₀₀ dollars per acre ($40-¹/₄) and the Mountain Tract of 419 acres was knocked down to said Singleton at four dollars ($4.00) per acre, the amount for both tracts amounting to the sum of $18,172.66."

The decree confirming said sale, December 2, 1892, rectifies the sale and purchase by said purchaser "of the land in the proceedings mentioned, to-wit: a tract of four hundred and nine acres and eighty five hundredths, at the price of forty dollars and twenty five cents per acre, and the Mountain tract of four hundred and nineteen acres at four dollars per acre." This decree also directs the commissioner to "at once proceed to complete said sale by making and delivering to the purchaser a deed for said lands, and taking from her her bonds for the deferred payments secured by a deed of trust upon said lands."

A subsequent decree of December 14, 1892, overruling exceptions to a Master Commissioner's report, adjudged that Barton and Boyd should be paid $1,000 with interest thereon, and Marshall McCormick be paid the like sum of $1,000, with interest thereon, being in addition to sums previously decreed to be paid them, and then provides how the residue of the purchase money, including the last payment to be made on the death of the widow, should be distributed, first to creditors, and then to the heirs and distributees of the decedent.

The deed made, executed and delivered by said special commissioners to Mrs. Singleton, the purchaser, December 23, 1892, recorded in Jefferson county, April 29, 1893, recites the sale of said lands "according to the terms and conditions required by said decrees, at which sale the said Singleton became the purchaser for the sum of Eighteen thousand one hundred and seventy two 68-100 dollars;" the confirmation thereof by the subsequent decrees of December 2 and 14, 1892, and describes said Home Tract by metes and bounds as containing $409\frac{5}{100}$ acres, and the Mountain tract as containing 419 acres, and also recites that the said first tract is according to the survey of said T. G. Baylor, in 1892, and that the bounds of the mountain land were according to a survey of Jas. M. Brown in 1847.

The first order relating to the original petition of Mrs. Singleton praying for an abatement of purchase money entered in the cause March 2, 1894, is as follows: "This the 2nd day of March, 1894, came Parthenia Singleton and asked leave which was granted to file her petition in the above entitled cause." No order is found in the record formally filing said petition, but it is copied into the record by the clerk, following this order; on November 26, 1901, the following order was entered: "This cause coming on to be heard this 26th day of November 1901 upon papers formerly read and the petition of Parthenia Singleton filed at a former term, it is ordered that the Clerk of this Court issue process to all parties interested in said petition returnable to next term of Court, and an order of publications may issue against non-resident parties." So far as the record shows process never issued on this petition. Parthenia Singleton died March 25, 1902, a little less than three months after the entry of the last order. No further proceedings appear to have been taken upon said petition until October 19, 1906, when James J. Singleton, administrator, intervened by filing his petition, in which he refers to the former petition of his decedent, makes the same part of his petition, reaffirms each and every allegation of her petition as if in his petition again set out in full, prays that said proceedings be revived in his name, and makes parties thereto those appearing from said proceedings to be creditors, administrators and heirs at law of H. W. Castleman, deceased, and the personal representatives of those who had died pending said proceedings. He also makes the prayer of her petition the prayer of his petition and prays for process and general relief. On the day he presented this petition an order was entered filing the same, and reviving the cause in his name as administrator, and remanding the same to rules for process. Process was sued out thereon November 12, returnable to December Rules, 1906, was duly accepted or served upon all resident defendants, and there was order of publication published and posted against all non-resident defendants, and the case regularly matured and set for hearing.

After setting forth the interests of the defendants as disclosed by the record, and the several orders, decrees and proceedings aforesaid, the petition specifically charged that about January 1, 1893, information was first brought to her attention, which led the purchaser to believe that an error had been made in the acreage of the home farm as sold to her; that she employed S. Howell Brown, county surveyor, to make a survey thereof, who ascertained and reported to her that the same contained only $398\frac{3}{4}$ acres, and which she alleged was a true and accurate survey, showing a shortage or deficiency of 11.60 acres in the number of acres sold to and purchased by her. Petitioner filed with her petition as a part thereof the survey and plat of said land, so made by the county surveyor, with his affidavit thereto, that he believed his survey to be correct. Defendants did not plead to or answer the petition.

Thus is presented the question whether the purchaser upon the petitions filed is entitled as prayed for to credit upon the last purchase money bond of $6057.55, with the sum of $466.90, the price of 11.60 acres at the rate of $40.25 per acre with interest.

Clearly the sale was a sale by the acre, not in gross. True as argued the original decrees of sale did not specifically authorize a sale by the acre, but the special commissioners assumed to make a sale of the land in that way. They so reported the sale to the court, and it was so confirmed as sale by the acre. This would entitle the purchaser to an abatement of purchase money if there is a deficiency. 24 Cyc. 54, § note 7. This authority, supported by court decisions cited in the note, says: "When by mistake resulting from the actions of the court or the misrepresentations of its agents less land is sold than was bid for and supposed to have been sold, the purchaser will be allowed a proportionate abatement of the purchase price when the property was sold by the quantity, but not when sold in gross as a specific tract." When the court confirmed the action of its commissioners in making sale by the acre it thereby adopted and approved their act. In all judicial sales the court is the vendor and contracting party on the one hand, and the purchaser on the other. The commissioners are merely the creatures of the court, and the sale is never complete until it is reported to and confirmed by the court. Core v. Strickler, 24 W. Va. 689, 696, citing Blair v. Core, 20 W. Va. 265, and Kable v. Mitchell, 9 W. Va. 492. Confirmation cures irregularities and gives the sale the same validity and effect as if made upon the precise terms of the decree. Rorer on Judicial Sales, §§ 122, 127; Robertson v. Smith, 94 Va. 250, 26 S. E. 579, 64 Am. St. Rep. 723; Langyher v. Patterson, 77 Va. 470.

It is the universal rule, and many cases in this state and in Virginia so decide, that if a deficiency in quantity is found, where the sale has been by the acre the purchaser will be entitled to an abatement, and that a court of equity will, even after deed made, abate the deficiency from the unpaid purchase money. See cases collated in 13 Cyclopedic Dig. 525, 9a. And this rule is applicable alike to sales by the court and under court decrees, as to sales by individuals. Watson v. Hoy, 28 Grat. (Va.) 698, Va. Rep. Ann. 220, and note; Crislip v. Cain, 19 W. Va. 438; Cooper v. Hargis (Ky.) 45 S. W. 112; Carmody v. Brooks, 40 Md. 240; Brown v. Wallace, 4 Gill. & J. (Md.) 479, 508; Marbury v. Stone-street, 1 Md. 147; Strodes v. Patton, 23 Fed. Cas. 237, No. 13,538; Myers v. Lindsay, 73 Tenn. 331; Trigg v. Jones' Adm'r, 102 Ky. 44, 42 S. W. 848.

But it is said that although the purchaser, in 1894, obtained leave to do so she never in fact filed her petition; that the order of November 26, 1901, treating it as having been filed at a former term, and directing process thereon, was a misrecital, and that no process having been in fact issued thereon, defendants were not bound thereby, and that not only these proceedings, but the proceedings upon the amended petition filed by the administrator in 1906, the purchaser in her petition admitting knowledge of the alleged deficiency as early as January, 1893, came too late, and that relief was rightfully denied under the rule caveat emptor, and because of laches, and because the decrees confirming the sale and distributing the proceeds thereof to creditors and distributees being final were not reviewable, except upon bill of review filed in time and with proper averments.

The authorities do not support the position of counsel. A purchaser at a judicial sale is not precluded by such decree from obtaining relief from such mistake. Relief may be obtained in such cases by defense to a rule against the purchaser to show cause why the land should not be resold to pay the balance of purchase money. Jones v. Tatum, 19 Grat. (Va.) 720; Crislip v. Cain, supra. Also by petition filed in the cause by the purchaser. Watson v. Hoy, supra; Marbury v. Stone-street, supra; Brown v. Wallace, supra. While the rule caveat emptor is applicable to all judicial sales so far as title is concerned, it has never been applied either in Virginia or in this state so far as we can find to cases of deficiencies in quantity of land where sold by the acre. Watson v. Hoy, supra, page 710 of 28 Grat. In the case just cited the court below appears to have been of a different opinion, but Judge Burks, referring thereto, says: "I cannot agree to this. It is true that in Virginia the general rule would seem to be that objections by purchasers to judicial sales for defect of title must be made before the sale is confirmed by the court, and that such objections afterwards made came too late." citing cases. "But," says he, "I apprehend the rule has no application to the equity of a purchaser arising from after discovered mistake, fraud, or other like matter. Courts of equity are always ready to relieve innocent injured parties in such cases, unless by reason of acquiescence, laches or other special circumstances, relief would be inequitable. There were no such circumstances precluding relief in this case." And, at page 711 of 28 Grat., he further says: "The mistake can be rectified and compensation made to appellant by allowing for the ascertained deficiency a proper abatement of the balance of purchase money still owing by him; and thus, while doing justice to him, no harm will be done to others. It would be singular indeed if this could not be done by a court of equity which by its agents is a party to a mistake it is called upon to relieve against."

Nor do we think the rule respecting laches applicable. No one can be injuriously affected by the abatement. At least no equities appear, and none are alleged by way of defense. The last payment of purchase money is still in the hands of the purchaser, or her representative. She is not suing to recover back money paid. Within a year after sale and confirmation thereof, and after discovering the mistake, she presented and obtained leave to file her petition setting up the mistake and praying for an abatement, thus making a record in the cause of her claim; and though she afterwards delayed suing out process and bringing the matter to an issue the last payment was not due and did not become due, except the interest, until the death of the widow. No one has been prejudiced or injured by the delay, so far as appears, and if a mistake was actually made there is nothing to preclude the court in granting the relief prayed for. In a general creditors suit the filing of a petition by a creditor in a pending suit stops the running of the statute of limitations. Jackson v. Hull, 21 W. Va. 601. In Ewing v. Ferguson, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 548, it was decided, that the first action taken by a party for the assertion of his claim by legal process, whether that be by the issuing of process commencing suit, or the filing of a petition in a suit already commenced, is treated as the institution of a suit, and from that time the statute of limitations ceases to run against him. These cases it is true were creditors suits, and the petitions were creditors petitions filed therein, and are not strictly applicable to cases like the one we have here. However, when the purchaser asked and was given leave to file her petition in the cause, that was a step which she had the right to take, was the assertion of her right negating abandonment thereof, or acquiescence therein, and gave notice to the court, her vendor, of her claim to abatement of purchase money, and of which the court took notice by giving her leave to file it, and by afterwards treating her petition as filed, and directing process thereon. The petition thus became a part of the record. Parks v. Petroleum Co., 25 W. Va. 108. But the petitioner was not bound to have filed any petition. She might have waited until sued on her bond, or was proceeded against by rule to resell the property. So long as she had the money in her hands time did not run against her right to defend the collection of the purchase money. Smith v. Ward, 66 S. E. 234.

It is further contended, in support of the decree below, that petitioner did not make out a case for relief, that the petition was not sworn to as it is claimed a bill of review or petition to rehear, based on after discovered evidence, is required to be. The petition is not a bill of review, nor a petition to rehear the decrees, and the rules applicable thereto are inapplicable. The petition charged a mistake, a shortage in the land sold. No plea or answer of the defendants denied it. It must be treated as taken for confessed.

Another question presented by the record, but not by counsel, has given us some trouble. The shortage of 11.60 acres is less than three per cent of the total acreage sold. Should the arbitrary rule of five per cent first announced by this court in W. M. & M. Co. v. Peytona C. C. Co., 8 W. Va. 406, 437, and recognized in Pratt v. Bowman, 37 W. Va. 715, 721, 17 S. E. 210, be applied here? If it should, the shortage being less than five per cent, petitioner did not make out a case for relief. One answer to this question, suggested in council, was that the rule was inapplicable to cases of sales by the acre, but only where land is sold as containing a definite number of acres "more or less," or "estimated to contain" a certain number of acres, or with like descriptive words. But as this allowance of five per cent is intended to cover inaccuracies reasonably imputable to variation of instruments and small errors in surveys, Pratt v. Bowman, supra, p. 721, we do not see why upon principle, it should not be applied in cases of sales by the acre, for in either case parties must necessarily be deemed to contract with reference to all such inaccuracies. Hilliard on Vendors (2nd Ed.) 329. This writer says: "But, in general, on a sale of land by the acre, relief is to be granted for all deficiencies, not reasonably imputable to the variation of instruments and small errors in surveys, whether the purchaser has expressly retained an election to have the tract surveyed or not." Citing therefor Nelson v. Carrington, 4 Munt. (Va.) 332, 6 Am. Dec. 519. But where and how did this arbitrary rule of five per cent originate? Judge Hoffman in W. M. & M. Co. v. Peytona C. C. Co., supra, at page 437 of 8 W. Va., says: "It is settled, in Virginia and West Virginia, that when a person has sold and conveyed a tract of land, described as containing a definite quantity, at a specified price, it is presumed that the estimated quantity was believed to be substantially correct—within five per cent of exact accuracy; that it constituted a material element in the determination of the price; and that, unless it appear that considerable uncertainty or actual risk as to the quantity was contemplated or intended; if in fact the quantity is afterwards ascertained to be materially less, and the purchaser properly asserts his right in a reasonable time and under reasonable circumstances, a court of equity will grant him relief. Though the sale be not by the acre, but by the tract in gross, this nevertheless is now the rule of decision. But in many—perhaps most cases of sales by trustees and other fiduciaries or officers, it may be different. This, however, it is not necessary now to determine." No cases, however, are cited by Judge Hoffman declaring this arbitrary rule. He likely deduced it from the decided cases in which relief has generally been denied where the deficiency has been less than five per cent. But we do not think that in this day of improved methods and instruments, such an arbitrary rule should be applied, especially when involving valuable lands like those involved here. A shortage of more than eleven acres of very valuable farm lands, practically level, in a survey of 409 acres, or 398 as the case may be, is entirely too much of a discrepancy to reasonably impute to variations of instruments or small errors in surveys. Certainly lands of the character of these lands can and should be surveyed with more accuracy than that. The deficiency here we do not think can reasonably be imputed to such inaccuracies, and if not the relief ought to be granted. Hilliard on Vendors, supra; Young v. Craig, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 270; Grundy v. Grundy, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 269.

In the absence of any showing to the contrary we think the petitioner was entitled to the relief prayed for. The decree below will therefore be reversed, and such decree as the circuit court should have entered will be entered here.

J. C. ORRICK & SON CO. v. DAWSON.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 3, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 32*)—RECOUPMENT—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Defendant cannot recoup damages if they depend on the breach of a contract different from, and independent of, the one on which suit is brought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, Cent. Dig. § 53; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 32*)—RECOUPMENT—CONTRACTS.

In an action by plaintiff for the price of goods sold and delivered, defendant cannot recoup damages for plaintiff's refusal to accept other goods sold to plaintiff by defendant under a separate and independent contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, Cent. Dig. § 53; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONTRADICTING WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Parol testimony is inadmissible to prove an unwritten agreement made at the time of, or prior to, a written agreement, for the purpose of varying or contradicting the terms of the latter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1719-1845, 2030-2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Morgan County.

Action by the J. C. Orrick & Son Company against W. E. Dawson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Modified and affirmed.

Forrest W. Brown, for plaintiff in error.
Faulkner, Walker & Woods, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. Writ of error to circuit court of Morgan county. Action of assumpsit by the J. C. Orrick & Son Company, a corporation, against W. E. Dawson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error.

Plaintiff is a wholesale dealer in cans and canned fruits and vegetables in the city of Cumberland, Md., and defendant is engaged in growing and canning fruits and vegetables in Morgan county, W. Va. Plaintiff sold a lot of cans and solder to defendant, and also bought from him some canned goods. The action is to recover the balance on account which plaintiff claims is due it. There is no dispute concerning the items of account as shown by plaintiff's bill of particulars, except an item of $28 for car demurrage, which plaintiff abandoned. The controversy is concerning the right of defendant to recoup damages for the alleged failure of plaintiff to accept canned goods from defendant in payment of the cans and solder which it had sold him, with the understanding, as defendant claims, that they were to be thus paid for, but which agreement, it is contended, plaintiff refused to carry out. A trial was had at the July term, 1906, which resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $1,043.74, upon a demurrer by plaintiff to defendant's evidence. The court took time to consider of its judgment upon said demurrer until the April term, 1907, when it decided in favor of plaintiff, and rendered judgment for the amount of the verdict.

Defendant took two several bills of exceptions to the action of the court in refusing to permit him to give oral testimony to prove the following facts, viz.: That he had purchased the cans and solder from plaintiff with the understanding that they were to be paid for in canned goods in the season of 1903, as per agreement or order dated March 24, 1903. That J. C. Orrick, president of plaintiff company, had inspected and approved the canned goods at defendant's cannery. That defendant had shipped to plaintiff one car load of the goods. That it had the other goods ready to ship, but did not do so because plaintiff refused to accept them, and that, on account of such refusal to comply with its contract, defendant was compelled to sell the goods to another purchaser at a less price than that for which he had previously sold the same goods to plaintiff, after the season was over, and that he thereby suffered damages as set out in detail in his notice of recoupment, which amount of loss claimed is $1,877.85.

Was it error to exclude this testimony? Is it consistent with the facts stated in the notice of recoupment filed by defendant? Although the defense of recoupment, especially in an action of assumpsit, may be made under the general issue, and need not be specially pleaded (Franklin v. Lilly Lumber Co., 66 W. Va. 164, 66 S. E. 225; Sterling Organ Co. v. House, 25 W. Va. 64), still the evidence offered in support of the damage sought to be recouped should be consistent with the facts alleged in the written notice of recoupment. Defendant could not file notice of one state of facts as his grounds for recoupment, and then introduce evidence of a different state of facts. Such notice, while not a technical plea, is still in the nature of a plea to the extent, at least, that the probata would have to correspond with the allegata in the notice. Such rule is necessary to prevent a surprise to plaintiff. Powell v. Love, 36 W. Va. 96, 14 S. E. 405; Sterling Organ Co. v. House, 25 W. Va. 64. Defendant filed, as part of his notice of recoupment, a copy of the written contract of sale by him to plaintiff of "4,000 cases of full standard 3 lb. Tomatoes at 72¢ per dozen, labeled." The contract was dated March 24, 1903, and the goods were to be delivered f. o. b. in Morgan county, W. Va., during the packing season of 1903. This would be some months after the date of the contract. The terms of sale expressly stated are: "Net cash on receipt of goods." Plaintiff's suit is for the price of cans and solder sold to defendant, and defendant contends that the sale of the tomatoes and the purchase of the cans are parts of one and the same transaction, constituting one contract; in other words, that the sale of the tomatoes was the consideration for the purchase of the cans; and that he was damaged by the subsequent failure of plaintiff to take the tomatoes. On the other hand, plaintiff contends that they are two separate transactions, made at different times, and therefore independent of each other. If defendant's contention be right, he would be allowed to recoup whatever damages he actually suffered resulting from plaintiff's breach of the contract, not to exceed plaintiff's claim. B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833, 31 Am. Rep. 775; Logie v. Black, 24 W. Va. 1; Dillon v. Eakle, 43 W. Va. 502, 27 S. E. 214; Bunting v. Cochran, 99 Va. 558, 39 S. E. 229; Clark's Cove Guano Co. v. Appling, 33 W. Va. 470, 10 S. E. 809; Natural Gas Co. v. Healy, 33 W. Va. 102, 10 S. E. 56. But, if plaintiff's contention is correct, defendant could not recoup damages for plaintiff's failure to receive the tomatoes in the present action, which, as above stated, is a suit for the price of the cans. Before a defendant can be allowed to recoup damages against a plaintiff's demand, it must be shown that the damages sought to be recouped grow out of a breach of the same contract on which plaintiff sues, or out of some other agreement so intimately related to it as to be a part of it. Logie v. Black, supra. Consequently, in order to determine whether or not defendant's testimony was properly excluded, we must consider (1) whether the sale of the tomatoes and the purchase of the cans and solder are one and the same, or whether they are independent contracts; and (2) whether or not, if they are one, or parts of one, transaction, or agreement, the oral testimony offered and excluded contradicts the terms of the written contract for the sale of the tomatoes. The written contract shows that the sale of the tomatoes was made on March 24, 1903, and that they were to be paid for in "net cash on receipt of goods." There is no mention made of the cans in this contract. It then becomes material to know when the cans were purchased. Was it at the same time of the sale of the tomatoes, or a later date? If they were purchased later, and with the understanding or agreement that they were to be paid for with the tomatoes, we have no doubt that the two transactions might then be regarded as one for the purpose of recoupment, because such subsequent oral contract would then operate as a modification of the previous one, changing the terms of payment for the tomatoes from "net cash" to a payment in cans, or at least to a part payment in cans. Such a subsequent oral modification of a written agreement is allowable in law, and would make the two agreements related parts of one contract for the purpose of recouping damages for a breach of either, in an action upon the other. But, if the purchase of the cans was made prior to or at the time of the sale of the tomatoes, it should have been incorporated in the written contract, otherwise oral proof of it cannot be received to contradict the writing. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 275. The rejected testimony of defendant would prove, if admissible, that the two contracts were either made at the same time, or, if not at the same time, that the cans were purchased prior to the sale of the tomatoes. He says "that he purchased cans and solder in the bill of particulars mentioned with the understanding that they were to be paid for with canned goods in the season of 1903, and be used in the preparation of said goods, and with the understanding that the plaintiff should purchase from said defendant 4,000 cases of canned tomatoes as per an agreement or order, dated March 24, 1903." The language, "that the plaintiff should purchase from said defendant," etc., implies that it had not then purchased. The verb "should purchase" denotes future time, and negatives the idea that a purchase of the tomatoes had then been made. If the written contract had been made prior to the time, with reference to which defendant was testifying, he would not have spoken of a future purchase of the tomatoes, because that contract shows a sale as of its date, providing for a future delivery.

The circuit court committed no error in excluding defendant's testimony, and its judgment will be modified to the extent of providing that it shall not prejudice the right of defendant to bring an independent action against plaintiff for its alleged breach of the contract for the purchase of the 4,000 cases of canned tomatoes, and, as so modified, it will be affirmed, with costs to appellee.

HOGG v. MCGUFFIN et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 3, 1910.)(Syllabus by the Court.)1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 5)—EXCHANGE OF STOCK—INADEQUATE LEGAL REMEDY.

Equity will decree specific performance of a contract for exchange of shares of stock in corporations when legal remedy is not adequate because the stock sought is of special and peculiar value, or is not readily purchasable in the market, or has no certain ascertainable value, or a money judgment against the party would be worthless because of his insolvency, or other circumstance in the case calling for specific performance as the only adequate relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 5-8; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 127*)—RELIEF AWARDED—RIGHT TO LIEN.

If one is entitled to have specific performance of a contract for exchange of stock in corporations, and one of the parties transfer to an innocent purchaser the stock which he is to transfer in exchange, equity will give the other party to the contract a charge or lien upon the purchase money yet in the hands of such purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 408-411; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.

Bill by Gory Hogg against R. M. McGuffin and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Hubard & Lee and A. W. Reynolds, for appellant. H. A. Ritz, Sanders & Crockett, Dillon & Nuckolls, and S. L. Walker, for appellees.

BRANNON, J. A written contract was made between R. M. McGuffin and Gory Hogg by which McGuffin agreed to sell to Hogg 50 shares of the stock of the Pike Collieries Company at the par value of $100 each; and the contract provided that McGuffin would, at the expiration of two years from the date of contract, if Hogg should so request, sell and transfer to Hogg 50 shares of the stock of the Harvey Coal & Coke Company, in exchange for the stock of the Pike Collieries Company, which latter stock Hogg agreed to transfer to McGuffin in case of such exchange. Hogg paid McGuffin for the Pike Collieries stock $5,000 by check to him. Certificate of stock was issued to Hogg by the Pike Collieries Company. At the date of the contract McGuffin owned a large amount of stock in the Pike Collieries Company, and he owned 75 shares of stock in the Harvey Coal & Coke Company. The written contract declared on its face that the 50 shares of stock in the Harvey Coal & Coke Company sold by McGuffin to Hogg stood on the books of the Harvey Company in the name of McGuffin. Some time after this written contract a written contract was made between J. A. McGuffin, R. M. McGuffin, A. P. Gibson, S. C. Wilson, and

Gory Hogg, parties of the first part, and S. Dixon, of the second part, by which J. A. McGuffin, Gibson, and Wilson sold Dixon certain shares in the Dunn Loop Coal Company and in the Prudence Coal Company and the Harvey Coal & Coke Company; and R. M. McGuffin sold Dixon 75 shares in the Harvey Coal & Coke Company and 30 shares in the Dunn Loop Coal Company and 200 shares in the Prudence Coal Company; and Gory Hogg sold Dixon 20 shares in the Prudence Coal Company. For the shares of stock sold to Dixon by R. M. McGuffin Dixon paid some cash, and executed to McGuffin four notes payable in the future, amounting to the sum of $89,950. The contract last mentioned provided that the stock sold to Dixon by the parties should be deposited with the notes as collateral security for the payment of the notes, and in pursuance of that clause of the contract the said notes made by Dixon and the certificates of stock sold to him by the selling parties were deposited in the hands of the Citizens' National Bank of Charleston, with the understanding or upon the trust that the bank should receive payment from Dixon of the notes, and when paid deliver to him the certificates of stock. Afterwards, within two years from the date of the sale by McGuffin to Hogg of the Pike stock, Hogg notified McGuffin of his desire to make the exchange of stock provided for by the contract, and expressed his readiness to transfer to McGuffin the Pike stock, and demanded of McGuffin that he transfer to Hogg the 50 shares of stock in the Harvey Coal & Coke Company. McGuffin responded to this request and demand that he had sold the Harvey stock to Dixon, and that he could not make the exchange on that account, but offered to repay Hogg the $5,000 which Hogg had paid him for the Pike stock, with interest. Hogg declined such adjustment, and he brought this suit against McGuffin making him and the Citizens' National Bank of Charleston and W. M. Williamson, its cashier, defendants. The relief asked by the bill is that an injunction be awarded restraining McGuffin from collecting any money on the notes of Dixon, held by Williamson and the bank, calling them trustees, or from making any transfer of the notes, and that Williamson and the bank be enjoined from disbursing or disposing of any money that might be paid on the notes, and that the notes in the hands of Williamson and the bank and the funds arising from them be attached and garnished in the hands of such trustees, and applied as the court might decree, and that the funds arising therefrom be held intact to satisfy any decree in the case, and that the contract between Hogg and McGuffin be specifically enforced, in so far as possible, and that if the court should be unable to compel performance of the contract between Hogg and McGuffin by compelling a transfer of the 50 shares of stock of the Harvey Company, McGuffin be required to pay Hogg the full market value of the stock, and upon his failure to do so that the amount be paid out of the funds arising from the said notes in the hands of said trustees, and that the status of the parties be preserved and complete determination of the questions involved be made. I will further state that the plaintiff sued out a writ of attachment against the estate of McGuffin basing it upon the allegation that McGuffin had fraudulently incurred the liability for which the suit was brought. Williamson and the bank were designated as persons indebted to or having in their possession effects of R. M. McGuffin, and the attachment was served on them as garnishees. The result of the suit was that the attachment was quashed and the bill dismissed without relief. Gory Hogg appeals.

We think that the attachment was properly quashed, as the facts show no fraudulent incurrence of the liability. Surely there was no fraud in the contraction of the liability in the sale by McGuffin to Hogg of the Pike stock, and the affidavit does not say so; but was there any fraudulent incurrence of liability in the sale by McGuffin of his stock in the Harvey Company to Dixon? If McGuffin had secretly sold such stock, Hogg not knowing of it, there would be plausibility in charging that McGuffin thereby fraudulently incurred liability to Hogg because of such secret sale; but the fact is that Hogg well knew of such sale, and we can by no means say that the sale was secret or fraudulent. But eliminate the attachment. The question then comes, Can Hogg support this suit in equity without the aid of that attachment? That attachment if good would fasten or clinch the fund in the bank's hands to answer the ultimate decree; but has Hogg other ground for fastening his claim upon that fund? We have concluded that he has. We cannot assert that legal title to the stock was in Hogg, but had he no right therein, as viewed in equity? We deem it, firstly, pertinent to inquire whether, if McGuffin had not sold the Harvey stock to Dixon, Hogg could enforce the transfer by McGuffin to him of the said stock. As a general rule we admit that specific enforcement of a contract for the sale of corporate stock will not be made in a court of equity; but that is a general rule and is subject to exceptions. In the first place, this particular stock is identified. I note just here the fact that the contract by which McGuffin sold Hogg the Pike stock, and promised exchange of it for Harvey stock, recited on its face that the stock so sold was stock "which now stands on the books of said Harvey Coal & Coke Company in the name of the said party of the first part." That clause makes the contract single out the stock from all other stock. It identifies it. We may say it separates it from all other stock, and enables any one to put his finger upon it, because it stood in the name of McGuffin on the stock book of the corporation, separated from the stock of every other stockholder, and the certificate had its distinctive number. Hogg had an option to acquire it, and McGuffin must keep the stock to answer that option. In the next place, it is said that equity will not enforce such transfer where the remedy at law is adequate. Suppose a lawsuit by Hogg against McGuffin. In it, in order to fix damages, it would have to be made to appear, not only what was the value of the Harvey stock, but also the value of the Pike stock, and the difference between them would be the damages. But without detailing the evidence I can assert that it would be impossible to fix the value of the Pike stock. It was not on the stock market list. As McGuffin himself admits it had no fixed value. Not a syllable of evidence gives any value to it. The company became indebted, and was thrown into the hands of a receiver, and large debt judgments against it and McGuffin as its surety were rendered, and if that stock had any value whatever it would be far below par, practically worthless, and any value of it unascertainable. Whilst McGuffin says it would be worth something, what that something would be he does not pretend to say. If worth anything at all, its worth is problematical—unascertainable. True, if entirely worthless, it would not be deducted from the value of the Harvey stock; but I say that its value could not be ascertained, which brings it under the rule spoken by many authorities. This would be an impediment to adequate remedy at law.

Again, the Harvey stock was not upon the stock list, and in that respect had no stock list value. It may be said that none was for sale, none could be purchased. The Harvey stock was very valuable. The company was very little indebted, the corporation a going concern and earning a great deal of money, and paying fine and increasing dividends. Its stock had a peculiar value, worth three or four for one. "If it appears that corporate stock contracted for is desired for special and legitimate personal purpose, or that its market value cannot be fixed with certainty because the stock is not upon the market, it is manifest that a judgment in damages would be inadequate and impracticable, and specific performance may be granted." 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (1st Ed.) 993. Fairly, Hogg could say—had the right to say—that he wanted this Harvey stock because of its present and promising prospective value. That is one consideration for specific performance.

Another consideration calling for specific performance is that this Harvey stock was a close corporation. Only a few stockholders held it. Not a case of great corporations like the great railroads or the United States Steel Corporation, with millions of dollars of stock on the stock list and purchasable in the open market. This Harvey stock could not be purchased in the open market, and the evidence shows it was not purchasable. What does the law say under this consideration? Cook on Corporations, § 338, says: "Where the value of the stock is not easily ascertained, or the stock is not to be obtained readily elsewhere, specific performance will lie." We find in 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 122, this statement: "Specific performance of a contract for the purchase or sale of stock will not be decreed where the stock is purchasable on the market, or has money value which may be readily computed." "Specific performance will not be decreed if the shares are readily obtainable in the market." 6 Pomeroy, Eq. Rem. § 752. But such is not the case with the Harvey stock. Taylor on Corporations, § 790, says: "Further, a contract for the sale of shares will be specifically enforced in equity, if it is not unconscionable or against public policy, when from the scarcity of the shares or other reasons the purchaser cannot go into the market and purchase similar ones. But if shares similar to those which are the subject of the sale are readily purchasable in the market, equity will not, as a general rule, specifically enforce the contract; but will leave the parties to their remedies at law." In 1 Cook on Corporations, § 338, we find it stated that if the stock "is easily obtained in the market, and there are no particular reasons why the vendee should have the particular stock contracted for, he is left to his action for damages. But where the value of the stock is not easily ascertainable, or the stock is not to be obtained readily elsewhere, or there is some particular and reasonable cause for the vendee's requiring the stock contracted to be delivered, a court of equity will decree a specific performance and compel the vendor to deliver the stock." This law is well stated in Safford v. Barber (N. J. Ch.) 70 Atl. 371. I refer for the same purpose to Northern C. R. Co. v. Walworth, 193 Pa. 207, 44 Atl. 253, 74 Am. St. Rep. 683. In Manton v. Ray, 18 R. I. 672, 28 Atl. 998, 49 Am. St. Rep. 811, it is held that if the value of the stock is uncertain and not easily ascertainable specific performance will be decreed; but the "true standing of a corporation is seldom known outside of its own officers. A stranger would, in most cases, find it difficult, if not impossible, to prove the real value of its stock, unless it is one that is rated for sale in the market. He has no access to its books; he cannot know its assets and liabilities; and although he is willing to take the stock for a price he might be quite unable to prove that it was worth that or any other price. No one can say that the remedy of damages in such a case is an adequate remedy." I cite the case of Watkins v. Rober'son, 105 Va. 269, 54 S. E. 33, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1194, 115 Am. St. Rep. 880, holding as follows: "An option under seal for the sale of shares in a joint-stock company is a binding offer from which the promisor cannot recede during the time stipulated for in the option, and, if accepted during that time, constitutes a contract the specific performance of which a court of equity will compel." Another reason found for specific performance as stated in 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (1st Ed.) 992, is the insolvency of the defendant, citing Avery v. Ryan, 74 Wis. 591, 43 N. W. 317, and Clark v. Flint, a Massachusetts case found in 22 Pick. 231, 33 Am. Dec. 733, holding that, "Remedy by damages against one actually insolvent is not adequate legal remedy such as will prevent a resort to equity." The evidence practically shows McGuffin to be insolvent. He is under thousands of dollars of liability by judgments and executions against him as surety for the Pike Collieries Company. True, he gives evidence that he had a very considerable amount of property; but the whole case shows that his solvency is very problematical and doubtful. Now, is Hogg to be compelled to take a mere personal judgment which would be subordinate to these prior liens? Equity ought not to say so. The case is different from mere ordinary personal property, such as horses or wheat, or other tangible property, because such property can be readily bought, and one horse is as good as another in this sense. How different with stock. Hogg had right to the very stock in this valuable Harvey coal mine—a particularly valuable one. But on this question of specific performance of contracts for the sale of stock I need hardly have gone further than to cite our own case of Bumgardner v. Leavitt, 35 W. Va. 194, 13 S. E. 67, 12 L. R. A. 776, where it was held that there might be specific performance in the case of stock in a steamboat company, a case similar to this. That case asserts that there may be specific performance under special circumstances.

If it be necessary to show, as I think it is, that if McGuffin yet owned the stock Hogg could compel him to transfer it, I think I have shown, by ample authority, that he could have done so. I assert the proposition that by the contract McGuffin agreed to keep that stock ready, to answer Hogg's call for it. Hogg was entitled to demand the very stock itself. He had an option to buy it by exchange. When he elected to make that exchange, and thus purchase the stock, the option was converted into an actual contract, and made Hogg's right a property right. But McGuffin sold the stock. What then? Hogg became entitled to the money proceeds. It is a trust fund. Hogg has a lien upon it, because we may regard it as money emanating from his property. Hogg may follow that fund. If not, what is his remedy? A mere decree for money against McGuffin, and he insolvent. But aside from that consideration Hogg has right to follow that fund. He has no adequate remedy at law; but he is not driven to any remedy at law, doubtful or not, because he has a right to go for that fund independent of considerations of solvency or remedy at law. In Bartlett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va., on page 759, 11 S. E., on page 228, where a party had an option for land and the optioner sold it, the court declared the right of the optionee to follow the purchase money, and said: "This is entirely consistent with equity practice. On the execution of a contract of sale of real estate, the vendor becomes trustee for vendee, and, if he sells subsequently to a third party, the proceeds will be affected with the trust, and the vendee is entitled to require that they shall be paid over to him in lieu of the estate which had been placed beyond his reach." This court said in Ballard v. Ballard, 25 W. Va. 477, "If, therefore, the vendor should again sell the estate of which he is such trustee he will be considered as selling it for the benefit of the vendee, and the second vendee if he has notice, or the conveyance to him is without valuable consideration, will hold the estate subject to the first contract and be compelled to convey it to the first purchaser." "In contracts of sale upon the purchaser's option the question whether or not a conversion is effected at all cannot, of course, be determined until the purchaser exercises his option; but the moment when he does exercise it, the conversion as between the parties claiming title under the vendor relates back to the time of the execution of the contract." 3 Pomeroy, Eq. § 1163. The same principle is stated in Minor on Real Property, § 474. Section 1047, Pomeroy, Eq., says as follows: "By the well-settled doctrines of equity a constructive trust arises whenever one party has obtained money which does not equitably belong to him, and which he cannot in good conscience retain or withhold from another who is beneficially entitled to it; as, for example, when money has been paid by accident, mistake of fact, or fraud, or has been acquired through a breach of trust or violation of fiduciary duty and the like. It is true the beneficial owner can often recover the money due to him by a legal action upon implied assumpsit, but in many instances a resort to the equitable jurisdiction is proper and even necessary." And the same book (section 1051) says: "As a necessary consequence of this doctrine, whenever property subject to a trust is wrongfully sold and transferred to a bona fide purchaser so that it is freed from the trust, the trust immediately attaches to the price or proceeds in the hands of the vendor, whether such price be a debt yet unpaid due from the purchaser or a different kind of property taken in exchange, or even a sum of money paid the vendor, as long as the money can be identified and reached in his hands or under his control." Thus I repeat that that fund is a trust fund in the bank which Hogg may subject to his claim.

It is suggested that Hogg joined in the paper by which McGuffin and others sold stocks to Dixon, and thus is estopped to make the claim sought to be asserted in this suit. Of course, that would estop Hogg as to Dixon from specific execution by transfer to Hogg of the stock, on the principle of estoppel that where a party stands by when he sees another buying property, and does not set up his claim and give warning to the purchaser, he is estopped from claiming to that purchaser's prejudice. For that reason Hogg cannot claim the Harvey stock, as also for the reason that Dixon is an innocent purchaser. But that has nothing to do with this case. Hogg's consent to the sale was no release of the obligation of McGuffin to him; no waiver of his right under another and different contract. He did not sign the scratch of a pen or utter a word by which he released the contract between him and McGuffin or the obligation of McGuffin to him. We cannot take away from Hogg his vested property right without some action of his plainly so operating. It does not appear that Hogg knew at the time of the sale to Dixon that McGuffin was selling all his Harvey stock; he might have thought he had yet enough left to answer his demand.

But it occurred to me whether he should not have inquired whether McGuffin yet owned enough stock to answer his right to 50 shares. On further reflection I conclude that that is immaterial; for even if he knew that McGuffin was disposing of all his stock, still that would not bar his claim, because he had the right to look to that fund for payment. He did not release his rights.

It is argued on the point put by Jones v. Tunis, 99 Va. 220; 37 S. E. 841, and Pomeroy's Eq. vol. 6, § 837, that Hogg knew, when he sued, that McGuffin had sold the stock to Dixon, and could not have specific performance. We admit this as a general rule, but we do not decree specific performance, and ask, Does that principle repel Hogg from recourse to the fund coming from his property?

It is argued that the contract was not really a sale by McGuffin, but a subscription to stock, a contract with the Pike Collieries Company, and that the contract was only intended to indemnify Hogg to the extent of his outlay, a guaranty only for the Pike stock. That would deny the very word of the contract, and the fact that McGuffin personally got the money for it. It is argued that there was no consideration for this promise to exchange, and a want of mutuality forbidding the enforcement of the exchange. Obviously this cannot be so, because Hogg paid McGuffin the large sum of $5,000, constituting a consideration not only for the Pike stock, but also for that covenant of the same contract providing that McGuffin would exchange Harvey stock for Pike stock. And we ask how McGuffin can complain of our action when it only does that which he promised to do for large consideration.

These views conduct us to the reversal of the decree of the circuit court of Mercer county, and, having done this, this court rendering such decree as the circuit court ought to have rendered, it is by this court adjudged, ordered, and decreed that R. M. McGuffin do pay to Gory Hogg the sum of $16,620 with interest from the 25th day of November, 1908, and the costs of said Hogg about his suit in the circuit court of Mercer county expended, and that said Hogg has right to have paid to him said sum and interest and costs, as also his costs in this court expended, out of the four promissory notes made by S. Dixon to R. M. McGuffin, three of them for $25,125 each, and one of them for $14,575, all dated the 30th day of April, 1906, and in the record described, and that the moneys called for by those notes constitute a trust fund for payment of said sum and costs, and that Gory Hogg has a lien and charge upon said notes and the money called for by them for satisfaction of the same, and that the Citizens' National Bank of Charleston may collect of said notes a sufficient sum to satisfy said sum and interest and costs, and out of such collection make payment of said sum, interest and costs to Gory Hogg, and such payment as it may make out of the collection of said notes shall stand valid to the credit of said bank and to the protection of said bank against any demand by R. M. McGuffin; and, further, that the said bank, if it collect said notes, shall and must pay out of its collection to Gory Hogg the said sum, interest and costs. It is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that R. M. McGuffin be enjoined and prohibited from collecting or transferring said notes, or in any wise disposing of them, or the money called for by them, unless and until he discharge to Hogg said sum, interest, and costs, or until the same shall be discharged from collections made by said bank, and that said notes and the money called for by them remain intact in the hands of said bank as a trust fund to answer this decree. It is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that R. M. McGuffin has right, on such payment, to the 50 shares of stock in the capital stock of the Pike Collieries Company owned by Gory Hogg, represented by the stock certificate issued by that company to Hogg on file in this case, and that, when Hogg shall have been paid said money and costs, R. M. McGuffin may withdraw from the papers of this cause remaining in the circuit court of Mercer county, and hold as his own, the said stock certificate. And this cause is remanded to the said circuit court for any further order found necessary to enforce and execute this decree.

PRESTON v. BENNETT.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 3, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TAXATION (§ 786*)—TWO SALES FOR TAXES—RIGHT OF FIRST PURCHASER.

If land be sold twice at the same tax sale for two several years delinquency of taxes assessed in the names of two successive owners, and an individual buys under the sale made to satisfy the first delinquency, and, after a year, obtains a deed and records it, he will have title against the state who buys under the sale made to satisfy the second delinquency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1554; Dec. Dig. § 786.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 641*)—SALE—NECESSARY PARTY—UNKNOWN CLAIMANT.

A claimant of land that is proceeded against as the state's land under chapter 105 of the Code, who is known or whose claim to the land can be ascertained by the use of reasonable diligence, should be made a party to the bill eo nomine, and, if a resident of the state, should be served with process.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 641.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 641*)—SALE—NECESSARY PARTY EO NOMINE.

It is error to proceed against such claimant under the general designation in the bill of "unknown claimants," and any decree that may be pronounced against him, without his appearance in the cause, will be void as to him for want of jurisdiction, and may be collaterally assailed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 641.*]

Brannon, J., dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Action by A. D. Preston against L. M. Bennett. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Charles E. Hogg and M. O. Brackman, for plaintiff in error. J. W. McCreery and W. H. McGinnis, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. This cause is here upon writ of error granted plaintiff to a judgment in ejectment rendered by the circuit court of Raleigh county on December 20, 1907, in favor of defendant. The case was tried by the court, in lieu of a jury, upon the title papers of the respective parties and upon an agreed state of facts. Plaintiff claims title by deed from J. A. Ewart, commissioner of school lands, dated February 4, 1901, and defendant claims the same land under a tax deed made to his immediate grantors bearing date the 7th of January, 1897, and recorded January 14, 1897. The question is purely one of title. The land was returned delinquent for non-payment of taxes for each one of two succeeding years in the respective names of the successive owners, and was twice sold at one and the same delinquent tax sale. In one instance it was bought by R. V. and J. P. Buckland and G. M. Smith, who are defendants' immediate grantors, and in the other by the state, who afterwards sold it as school lands to plaintiff. The land was delinquent for nonpayment of taxes assessed thereon for the year 1893 in the name of Jessie M. Myers and Nettie M. Ferguson, the then owners, as a tract of 373 acres and 119 poles. On October 14, 1893, Jessie M. Myers conveyed her interest to Nettie M. Ferguson, and by deed dated February 5, 1894, Nettie M. Ferguson and husband conveyed the land to Margaret Ferguson, to whom it was charged on the land books with taxes for the year 1894. It was sold for the delinquent taxes of each of those years in the names of the respective owners. At the tax sale November 4, 1895, defendants' grantors became the purchasers under the sale made on account of the delinquent taxes of 1893, and the state became the purchaser under the sale made on account of the delinquent taxes of 1894. In 1898 the state instituted a suit against the land in the name of Margaret Ferguson, and in January, 1901, it was sold under a decree in that suit, and was bought by A. D. Preston to whom the school commissioner made a deed, as above stated. Neither the defendant nor his grantors were made parties to that suit.

The majority of the court are of opinion to affirm the judgment of the lower court for the following reasons:

First. Because by the previous decisions of this court in the cases of State v. West Branch Lumber Co., 64 W. Va. 673, 63 S. E. 372, and State v. Snyder, 64 W. Va. 659, 63 S. E. 385, the state is estopped from claiming title to the land as against Bennett who claims under the tax purchasers, Buckland, and others, who had obtained their deed and placed the same on record, notwithstanding there may have been irregularity committed either by the auditor in failing to certify both years taxes together as one lien against the land to be satisfied by one sale, or an irregularity committed by the sheriff in failing to combine the two years taxes and make one sale of the land to satisfy both. Whether the two sales amounted to an irregularity which would render either one, or both, of said sales voidable, and whether or not it was the duty of the auditor to certify both years' taxes to be satisfied by one sale, they hold it is unnecessary to decide, inasmuch as the effect of the two decisions, above referred to, construing section 29 of chapter 31 of the Code, makes the tax deed to the Bucklands and Smith conclusive evidence against the right of the state to set up any title claimed to have been vested in the state prior to the time of the recordation of their tax deed.

Second. The sale of the land by the school commissioner to the plaintiff Preston is not binding on Bennett who claims by deed from the tax purchasers, for the reason that he was not made a party to the bill in that proceeding and was not served with process, and did not come into that suit by petition at any time during its pendency. Section 6, c. 105, Code, reads in part as follows: "All such tracts or parcels of land mentioned in any such report, not exceeding in quantity one thousand acres, may be included in one suit, but a separate suit may be brought and prosecuted for the sale of each tract of land exceeding in quantity one thousand acres; and the former owner of any such tract of land at the time of the forfeiture thereof, or the person in whose name the same is forfeited, shall, if known, be made a defendant in such suit, and all persons claiming title to or interest in any such lands shall, as far as known, be made defendants therein." Bennett, the defendant in the case, at the time of the institution of the suit by the school commissioner, was a claimant of the land under deed from the tax purchaser dated May 24, 1898. His title to the land was a matter of record. Unless it be right to say that a claimant of land may be properly proceeded against as an "unknown claimant," regardless of the nature of his claim or of the place of his residence, Bennett certainly occupied the position of a known claimant. A mere casual examination of the record by the school commissioner would have disclosed the fact that Bennett was a claimant of the land under the tax deed made to his grantors pursuant to a sale of the land had at the same time of the sale under which the state claimed title, and, if in fact the school commissioner did not know that he was a claimant, he could have ascertained the fact by reasonable diligence. Bennett, therefore, occupied the position in contemplation of the statute of a known claimant, and was therefore entitled to be made a party to the bill and to be served with process. It would be too harsh a construction of the statute to interpret it to mean that a claimant of land, whose claim thereto is a matter of record and can be easily ascertained, may be proceeded against by order of publication as an "unknown claimant," and be bound by a decree which would take from him his land without more notice than such a publication. It is a fundamental principle of the common law that every person shall have an opportunity to be heard in court before he shall be deprived of his property or his liberty, and this right is guaranteed to him by both state and federal Constitutions. To divest one of his property it must be by "due process of law," which means that he must be given a reasonable notice, and a chance to be heard about his defense. By the use of the words "unknown claimants" the statute does not mean simply such persons, claimants, as may not happen to be known personally to the school commissioner at the time of filing his bill, but it means such as are not known to him, and cannot be ascertained by his reasonable diligence. To illustrate the harshness of the rule, if we should construe the statute otherwise, let us instance a case which might easily happen: Suppose a tract of 1,000 acres of land has been forfeited to the state in the name of A. for failure to enter the same on the land books, and the state proceeds against it in the name of A. and all other "unknown claimants" of the land. B. is the owner of a tract of 100 acres of land lying within the bounds of the larger tract, to which he has perfect title adverse to A.'s title, and has no knowledge of the fact that his tract lies within the larger tract. The description of the larger tract and the proceedings against it in the name of A. and all "unknown claimants" would scarcely give any information to B. that his land was included within the bounds of the larger tract, and yet, if the statute should have the effect to bind B. as an "unknown claimant" of a portion of the land, it would divest him of his title without any notice whatever, notwithstanding he may be in actual possession of the land, and may have paid all the taxes chargeable on it. The hardship of such a rule would be shocking to the conscience, yet such would be the unavoidable effect of it if the statute should be so construed as to permit such a claimant to be proceeded against, and bound by the proceeding under the general and indefinite description of "unknown claimants" simply because his claim to the land happened to be a fact unknown to the school commissioner. The statute should not be construed as intending to dispense with the common-law right of an individual to be personally served with process, or notice, when he occupies such position or relation to the property involved as would entitle him under the common law to be so served, and, being in derogation of a common-law property right, the statute should be construed most strongly in favor of the individual claiming the right. Mosser v. Moore, 56 W. Va. 478, 49 S. E. 537; Millhiser Mfg. Co. v. Gallego Mills Co., 101 Va. 579, 44 S. E. 760; Fork Ridge Baptist Cemetery Ass'n v. Redd, 33 W. Va. 262, 10 S. E. 405. The evident purpose of chapter 105 is to bring in, and make parties to the suit, all claimants to the land, or any part of it, which the state is seeking to sell, regardless of their source of title or the nature of their claims, and to require the conflicting claimants to litigate their respective claims with the state and incidentally among themselves, so that a final decree in such proceeding may be conclusive upon all parties, known and unknown, who claim title by any means whatsoever to all, or to any portion, of the land proceeded against, and to create, as it were, by such a proceeding, a title in the purchaser at the sale a new title to the land as clear and as free from incumbrances as it was possible for the state to make by grant under the old patent laws of the state of Virginia to a tract of land then granted for the first time. In other words, there is a twofold purpose in the statute, viz.: (1) To sell the state's land and to confer an indefeasible title; and (2) to give the former rightful owner who has been in default in not paying his taxes, if it is ascertained there is such an one, an opportunity to redeem his land and to start him off afresh with the title which he had previous to the forfeiture, released of all claims for taxes previously charged or chargeable thereon in favor of the state. Such then being the purpose of chapter 105 of the Code, a claimant of the land who is known, or whose claim to the land is such that it can be ascertained with reasonable diligence, is entitled to be made a party eo nomine to the bill, and if a resident of the state is also entitled to be served with process, and unless so made a party and served with process, or unless he come into the suit and is given an opportunity to litigate his claim, he is not bound by the decree of the court.

I concur fully in the majority opinion, but I think the opportunity is clearly presented to the court in the present case to interpret section 4 of chapter 31 of the Code which sets forth the duties of the auditor in relation to certifying delinquent lands to the sheriff for sale, and thus to avoid any future trouble which might arise in cases like the present one. In my opinion the interpretation of this statute furnishes of itself a sufficient reason for upholding the tax deed to the Bucklands and Smith as against the state's claim of title to the land, and a better opportunity to construe it can hardly be again presented than is now presented by the record in this case. Its construction would also tend to settle the law in regard to the duties of the auditor in relation to certifying delinquent lands to the sheriff, and would avoid, in the future, a repetition of the irregularity and resulting conflict of claims of title that are presented in this case. If the land had remained on the land books for 1894 in the name of the same person to whom it was assessed in 1893, and had been returned delinquent by the sheriff for each year, no difficulty would have arisen, and the taxes for the two years would have been combined, and the land would have been sold once to satisfy the taxes of both years. But in the present case the confusion has arisen because of the attempt by the sheriff to make two sales of the same tract of land at one and the same tax sale to satisfy the delinquent taxes of two several years. This could not lawfully be done. It is impossible for two persons thus buying the same land to acquire title thereto. There can be but one title to the land. It seems to me either that one or the other of such sales is invalid, or that both are invalid. Section 4, c. 31, Code, reads as follows: "On or before the first day of November of each year, the auditor shall cause to be delivered to the sheriff or collector of taxes for every county two lists of the real estate therein, which, at the time said lists are made out, shall have been returned delinquent for the nonpayment of taxes thereon for any previous year and not previously sold therefor, and on which the taxes and interest, or any part thereof, shall remain then unpaid and not released or otherwise discharged, with a statement of the several amounts due for state and state school taxes; county taxes for all purposes; school district and independent school district taxes; other district taxes for all purposes, and municipal corporation taxes for all purposes, on each tract or lot for each year with interest on each amount from the twentieth day of January in the year succeeding that in which such taxes were levied until the first day of November in the year such list is delivered as aforesaid to the sheriff, or collector, at the rate of twelve per centum per annum added thereto. But if the real estate has been sold for the nonpayment of taxes, the same shall not be charged with, or again sold on account of any taxes for any year previous to that for the taxes of which the same was made; except, that if for any cause a previous sale of real estate purchased by, or in behalf of, the state, has been or shall be set aside by any court, and the taxes for which it was or shall be sold, have not been paid, the auditor shall include in such lists all such real estate, and the same shall be sold for the taxes and interest due thereon for the years for which it was previously sold, in like manner and with like effect as the other real estate mentioned in said lists."

This section is an express direction to the auditor to include in his certificate to the sheriff all the taxes due on the land, with interest thereon up to the 1st day of November of the year in which the list is returned to the sheriff, "for each year." This means taxes and interest thereon for all the years for which taxes may be unpaid, beginning with, and including, the year for which it was first returned delinquent. The sheriff then is required to sell the land once to satisfy all those taxes. It is the auditor's duty to ascertain all the taxes due on the land which the sheriff is directed to sell, whether the land remains all the time assessed to one person, or whether it has changed ownership and is assessed for one year in the name of one person and for another year in the name of another person. I admit that in some cases this might be difficult to do, but it is a duty that evidently ought to be performed by some one, and I think the statute clearly defines it as one of the auditor's duties. There is certainly no statute directing the sheriff to do it. He is to be guided in making sale by the auditor's certificate. The auditor, in turn, is guided by the land books that come to him from the various county clerks' offices. These are duplicates of the ones remaining with the clerks of the counties, and, if the clerks have performed their duty in noting the transfers of the lands on the land books, it is a comparatively easy matter for the auditor to keep track of, and to identify, the land. In case the land is delinquent for two several years, first in the name of one party and then in the name of his grantee, opposite the name of the person in whose name it is delinquent for the first year there will be a memorandum showing the transfer to the vendee, and opposite the name of the vendee, for the succeeding year, there will also be a memorandum on the land book giving the name of the person from whom the land was transferred. It thus becomes a very easy matter for the auditor to trace the land and the taxes assessed thereon, and to combine the taxes in one certificate to the sheriff, authorizing one sale only in the names of the two respective parties. If, as a matter of fact, the county clerks in practice do not preserve this information on the land books, the auditor has power by direction to require them to do it, and it should be done. The law certainly does not contemplate two sales of the same land at one tax sale for two separate years of delinquent taxes simply because the land happens to be delinquent for two or more years in the names of the several successive owners. It is not only impossible to give two titles to the same land to two separate purchasers, but the attempt to do so would produce confusion and litigation between conflicting purchasers, and would necessarily render more uncertain the plan of the state to collect its taxes in that way. If two purchasers should buy, there would be unavoidable conflict. Neither would apparently have a right to redeem as against the other, and the result would be that no one would want to buy and the state would have to buy to protect itself. It may be insisted that the state would ultimately get its taxes by a subsequent sale of the land as school land, to which argument I reply that the state does not want the land, but it does stand in need of its revenues and wants them as soon as they are due, and the purpose of the statute is to enable it to collect them by a sale of the land, not to herself, but to an individual. The statute was not intended to make the state a speculator in the lands of its citizens, but is purely a measure to enable it to get its revenues without unreasonable delay.

In view of the statute as it was at the time the land in question was sold, and before the statute was amended so as to require the auditor to certify to the sheriff the unredeemed delinquent lands annually, instead of biennially, the same land was twice returned to him as delinquent before he was required to certify it back to the sheriff for sale. It was properly and regularly returned, and he should have ascertained all the taxes due on the land for the several years, with interest to the 1st of November of the year in which he certified it for sale, and should have combined all the taxes in one certificate. But his failure to do so in the present case is only such an irregularity as is cured by section 25 of chapter 31 of the Code, and the tax purchaser's deed is good by virtue of this section.

Suppose in the present case an individual, instead of the state, had bought the land in question for the delinquency for the year 1894, and that both he and the Bucklands and Smith, as tax purchasers, had gotten their deeds from the clerk and had had them recorded, the question would arise, Which then would have the title? It is suggested that the one who first recorded his deed would have the title. But, suppose both deeds were recorded at the same time, then which one would have the title? Unquestionably neither would be in a position to redeem from the other within the year allowed for redemption, because neither would be within the description of the persons entitled to redeem, neither could be said to be a former owner. Suppose, again, that in the present case the defendant Bennett and the former owner in whose name the land was sold had both appeared in the suit brought by the commissioner of school land, and had both claimed the right to redeem, whose right would be superior? In such event Bennett clearly would not have the right of redemption as against the state, because he was a tax purchaser at the same time the state took the land for its taxes for one of the years for which it was delinquent. He therefore would clearly not be a redemptioner as against the state. On the other hand, the original owner would have the right of redemption as against the state. But would he have the right of redemption as against Bennett who claimed under a tax deed apparently regular and duly recorded? I think clearly not. In such case I think the tax purchaser, claiming under a recorded tax deed, would have title against the state, and that the state would still have the right by any lien against the land for the unpaid taxes.

I am furthermore of opinion that in order to authorize the state to proceed to sell land under chapter 105, Code (1906), and to give to the decrees of the court in such proceeding a binding force upon claimants, the state must be the owner of the land. The title must necessarily be in the state before it can proceed under this chapter. Section 1, c. 105, Code. This is essential to the jurisdiction in such a proceeding, and, if the state has not title, the proceeding must necessarily be void. If the state claims the land by forfeiture of some former owner, or by purchase at a tax sale, it must have the title of such former owner before it can proceed to sell the land, and if it has not, in fact, such title, the proceeding is without jurisdiction. In the present case the title to the land was vested in Bennett at the time of the bringing of the suit by the commissioner of school lands, and I am of opinion that the whole proceeding is void for want of jurisdiction concerning the subject-matter of the suit.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

BRANNON, J. (dissenting). The decision in this case is rested on State v. West Branch, 64 W. Va. 673, 63 S. E. 372. My opinion of dissent in that case by accident did not appear with the court opinion, but is found in 66 W. Va. 1, and 65 S. E. 1038, to which I refer. It may be a question whether that case exactly applies to this case. It is chapter 31, § 29, of the 1906 edition of the Code, that is made the foundation of decision in that and this case. I do not know that I presented a full view of that section in that opinion. Scanning it further, I am confirmed in the opinion that the section does not conclude the state. I think its effect is that it is prima facie evidence as to the former owner, his heirs and assigns, and persons having right to redeem, as well as the state, and that such estate as section 25 specifies passed by the tax deed, and as to strangers is conclusive evidence of such title. Why the clause saying that the section should not bar the state and other taxing bodies from such suit as any one claiming the land could maintain to set aside the sale? It was probably not necessary, this clause, but inserted as a precaution, to prevent any construction that would absolutely bar the state. Clearly a former owner can sue to set aside a tax deed. Cannot the state do so? The same right is reserved to both. How can the court make the statute an estoppel against the state when the deed is only prima facie, and the right to attack it reserved? The court makes it conclusive. It is conclusive against strangers, not former owners and the state. It has been suggested that the intent was not to make the deed evidence as to the state that the title of those named in section 25 passed, as the state is not seller, or warrantor, had nothing in the land, and why make the act pass anybody's title as against her when she claimed no adverse title; but waive that, and repeat that it was intended to make the deed only prima facie as to the state if she could overcome it. Preston claims under the state, gets the right she had. He is not a stranger.

I think the sale for the latter year for a tax paramount to that of the former year carried the better tax title. The first purchaser should have paid the tax for the second year.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 109*)—SURRENDER OF PREMISES—ACCEPTANCE.

There was no acceptance by the lessor of the surrender of the premises by the lessee, terminating their relation of landlord and tenant, and consequently further liability of the tenant for rent, where the lessor entered, tore down the partition wall which separated the leased premises from an adjoining room, removed temporary plumbing apparatus installed by the lessee, and leased to another the entire space formerly constituting the two rooms; there having been no surrender of the premises by the tenant at the time of the landlord's re-entry, but the tenant having declared that it would not continue business because it was unprofitable, and the landlord's acts having been with the knowledge and acquiescence and on behalf of the tenant to minimize its loss.

Error to Corporation Court of Norfolk.

Proceeding by the Stag Hotel Corporation against the Hoster-Columbus Associated Breweries Company and others. There was an order adverse to defendants, and they bring error. Affirmed.

H. C. & H. W. Davis and E. R. F. Wells, for plaintiffs in error. Leo Judson, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This is a writ of error to an order of the corporation court of the city of Norfolk, awarding execution to the defendant in error against the plaintiffs in error upon a forthcoming bond taken on a distress warrant for the amount of rent ascertained to be due from the Hoster-Columbus Associated Breweries Company, hereinafter called the "Hoster Company," to the Stag Hotel Corporation, hereinafter called the "plaintiff."

The rent which is the subject of this litigation covered the period from May 1, to October 31, 1908, and accrued under a written lease from the plaintiff to the Hoster Company for "all that certain space located on the first floor of the Haddington building in the city of Norfolk, * * * which said space is about twenty-one feet and nine inches long by sixteen feet and six inches wide." The lease was for a term of five years at a rental of $2,000 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments.

The Hoster Company had previously made default in payment of certain installments of rent; whereupon a distress warrant was sued out for the rent in arrear and a forthcoming bond given with the same surety as in this case, the Atlantic Trust & Deposit Company; and at the hearing the court awarded execution for the rent due, with interest and costs.

Two assignments of error are relied on here: (1) That the court erred in sustaining the motion of the plaintiff to strike out the first nine grounds of defense, and in refusing to allow the defendants to introduce evidence in support of them.

These identical defenses were interposed by the defendants in the former case, and the judgment on the merits in that case constitutes an absolute bar touching the same matters of defense relied on in this instance. The rule is too well settled to call for citation of authority that under the doctrine of res adjudicata a former judgment on the merits, rendered in an action between the same parties, is a bar to all matters of law and fact which were, or which might have been, properly put in issue and decided by the previous judgment.

It is contended (2) that the court erred in overruling the defendants' motion to strike out of the rent statement all items claimed as rent which accrued after September 30, 1908, and in rendering judgment against the defendants for an amount which included those items. This assignment is founded upon the assumption that during the month of October, 1908, after the Hoster Company had abandoned the premises, the plaintiff re-entered and tore down the partition wall which separated the leased premises from an adjoining room, and removed certain temporary plumbing apparatus which the lessee had installed, and leased the entire space formerly comprising two separate rooms to another tenant. This conduct on the part of the plaintiff, it is insisted, by operation of law constituted an acceptance of the surrender of the premises by the Hoster Company, and terminated the relation of landlord and tenant between them, and consequently there was no further liability on the Hoster Company to pay rent.

The contention, however, loses sight of the fact that the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff tends to show that at the time of re-entry by the plaintiff there had been no surrender of the premises by the tenant; that the Hoster Company, through its agent, had declared that the bar was not profitable, and for that reason it would not renew the license and continue business; and that the acts of the plaintiff, now set up as grounds of forfeiture, were done with the knowledge and acquiescence and on behalf of the Hoster Company for the purpose of minimizing its loss.

The trial court accepted that theory of the evidence; and the rule is well settled that in the trial of a case at law, where neither party demands a jury, and the whole matter of law and fact is heard and determined by the court, and the evidence, not the facts, is certified, the judgment of the trial court will be given the same weight as if it were the verdict of a jury. Martin v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 101 Va. 406, 44 S. E. 918.

The evidence for the plaintiff, if true, was sufficient to warrant the judgment of the corporation court, and it must be taken to be true on this writ of error.

Judgment affirmed.

HEITMANN et al. v. COMMERCIAL BANK OF SAVANNAH. (No. 2,502.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. May 12, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 462*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONTRADICTION WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

When a written contract expressly recites that it is made for one purpose, it is not competent (in the absence of a claim of fraud, accident, or mistake) to show by parol that it was made for another inconsistent purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2134; Dec. Dig. § 462.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1203*)—PROCEEDINGS AFTER REMAND—MERGER—REVERSAL AS TO CERTAIN DEFENDANTS.

Under the facts presented, there was no error in holding that the present complaining defendants were not discharged from liability by the action that had been taken in the case as to other joint obligors on the instrument sued on.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1203.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 123*)—PROOF OF AGENCY—DECLARATIONS.

The court did not err in directing a verdict in the plaintiff's favor.

(a) While it is permissible to prove as a part of the res gestæ of a transaction that one of the parties purported to act as the agent of a third person, yet his declaration to that effect is not of sufficient probative value to establish the agency, unless there be further proof, direct or circumstantial, to show that he was in fact an agent, or that his acts as agent had been ratified by the alleged principal.

Error from City Court of Savannah; Davis Freeman, Judge.

Action by the Commercial Bank of Savannah against J. H. Heitmann and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Osborne & Lawrence, for plaintiffs in error. Adams & Adams and U. H. McLaws, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. This case has been before this court previously. See Heitmann v. Commercial Bank, 6 Ga. App. 584, 65 S. E. 590. It will not be necessary to repeat the facts there stated; indeed, what is here said is to be read in connection with what is there said. The point decided when the case was here before was that there was error in disallowing a plea which set up that the note and the accompanying letter had never been delivered to or accepted by the bank as a complete, final contract, but was merely to be held by them, in the nature of an escrow, until another person, named Peoples, should affix his signature. It was further held that such a plea did not contradict the terms of the writing, but that the defendants would not be allowed to set up a state of facts which contradicted either the letter or the note. At the trial the defendants offered an amendment to their plea. First, they pleaded that the note was without consideration, in that it was given merely as collateral security for a past-due indebtedness, owing by the Sand Lime Brick Company to the plaintiff. Even if this plea were otherwise meritorious, it was in direct contradiction to the statement in the letter that the note sued on was given in payment of this past indebtedness, thus becoming an original obligation based on a lawfully recognized consideration.

2. The plea further set up that the defendants Heitmann, Knight, and Manning were discharged from liability, because the plaintiff had dismissed the action as to one Goette, and had also in the present suit procured judgment against O'Connell and four others of the signers of the note, without procuring judgment against the present plaintiffs in error. It should be noticed that this came about by reason of the fact that, while originally the judgment was against all of these defendants, except Goette (who had died pending the action and who was stricken on that account), this court granted a new trial as to Heitmann, Knight, and Manning only.

The Civil Code of this state (section 5041) expressly authorizes a dismissal as to a defendant dying pending the action, without affecting the liability of the other defendants. Savannah Bank v. Purvis, 6 Ga. App. 275, 65 S. E. 35. Nor do we think that under the facts of the case such a merger of the liability on the note resulted from this court's reversing the judgment only as to three of the defendants and its granting as to them a new inquiry as to preclude the plaintiff from proceeding on the new hearing to establish their liability and to have a judgment in the action rendered against them also. Cf. Ellis v. Bone, 71 Ga. 466.

3. The main point insisted on, however, is that the court erred in directing a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, notwithstanding the evidence offered by the defendant (in support of the plea which this court, when the case was here before, held was allowable) to prove the agreement that the note and letter were never formally delivered, and were by mutual agreement of the parties never to become a completed contract until Peoples signed. Some of the defendants offered testimony that the note was presented to them by one Comerford, who said that it was not to become a contract until Peoples signed it. Comerford, it appears, was the receiver of the corporation in payment of whose debt the present note was given. To disclose the effect of this transaction between the signers of the note and Comerford, it is best that certain other facts be stated. There had previously been some dispute between the bank and the signers of the notes preceding the one in controversy (for the indebtedness had been renewed from time to time) as to whether certain others should not have signed also. When the giving of the present note was proposed, the vice president of the bank, who was also its attorney, in order to foreclose any further dispute on this line, prepared the letter, which appears fully in the former opinion in this case, and which was to be signed by the new makers, asking the bank to accept the new note in lieu of the old one, and stating further that not all the old signers were to sign the new paper, and asking the bank to deliver to them (the new signers) the old note that they might compel contribution. This letter and the note were turned over to Heitmann and O'Connell (two of the present defendants) in order that they might be signed and returned. Later Heitmann and O'Connell, in company with Comerford (who was interested adversely to the bank, or, at least, not in privity with the bank), brought to the bank's vice president and attorney the note and letters signed as they were when sued on. He examined them, telephoned the bank's clerk that they were all right, and upon his instruction Heitmann, O'Connell, and Comerford went to the bank window, where they delivered the new note to the bank clerk and received the old note from the bank; the evidence showing that probably the physical transfer of the papers was to and from the hands of O'Connell, though Heitmann and Comerford were standing by.

The evidence was clear and unequivocal that the officials of the bank were ignorant of the representations, if any, made to any of the signers of the note to the effect that it was not to become a completed contract until Peoples signed it. It was equally clear that Comerford was not agent for the bank and was not authorized to make any statement on the bank's behalf. There is no other reasonable inference deducible from the testimony than that the note had come into Com-erford's hands at the time he made the representations, directly or indirectly, from either Heitmann or O'Connell, who were two of the joint signers of the note. Therefore, notwithstanding he may have induced some of the defendants to sign on the understanding that the note was not to be delivered until Peoples signed it, nevertheless delivery to the bank was consummated without charging it with notice of any such condition; and the bank, acting on the apparent completeness of the transaction, delivered up the old note, thus putting the case very fairly within the principle of the case of Lewis v. Board of Commissioners, 70 Ga. 486.

At least one of the defendants testified that Comerford told him at the time he presented the note for signing that he was representing the bank in procuring the signatures. The court struck out this testimony. While we are of the opinion that Comerford's statement, so closely associated as it was with the act of procuring the signatures, was admissible as a part of the res gestæ, and that the court's action in ruling it out was abstractly erroneous, nevertheless this error is immaterial. The rule is that while such declarations are admissible as a part of the res gestæ, yet they are without sufficient probative value to establish the agency, until it is shown by further proof, direct or circumstantial, that the alleged principal had in fact authorized the alleged agent to act for him, or had subsequently ratified the act. Wigmore on Evidence, § 1777 (2); Roebke v. Andrews, 26 Wis. 311, 321. Cf. White Sewing Machine Co. v. Horkan, 7 Ga. App. 283, 66 S. E. 811; Chattanooga R. Co. v. Davis, 89 Ga. 708 (4), 15 S. E. 626. The elements essential to a ratification were not present in the case at bar, as they were in the two cases last cited above.

Even if the judge had admitted all of the testimony that was excluded, the proof would not have been adequate to support the plea in accordance with the former opinion of this court in the case, and his action in directing a verdict in the plaintiff's favor is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

MEACHAM v. STATE. (No. 2,389.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. May 12, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1109*)—PETITION FOR CERTIORARI—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.

The rules applicable to briefs of evidence incorporated in bills of exception do not apply to petitions for certiorari, and a petition for certiorari is not subject to dismissal upon the ground that the evidence adduced upon the trial is not properly briefed. A petitioner for certiorari, if he sets forth plainly what transpired upon the trial, may make his statement of the evidence as full as the facts will justify without the apprehension of any other penalty than the probability of confusing the reviewing court by an unnecessary mass of irrelevant matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1109.*]

2. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 1*)—PROMISE TO DO AN ACT IN THE FUTURE.

One cannot be defrauded and cheated by the violation of a promise to perform an act in the future. The deceitful means or artful practice by which one may be defrauded and cheated must have relation to an existing fact or a past event. Ordinarily one who is induced to act by the promise of another to do a particular act in the future acts upon the promise, and not upon the false representation of fact; and, while the violation of the promise is immoral, it is not a criminal offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 1*)—SALE OF PERSONALTY—SUBSEQUENT FRAUDULENT CONVERSION.

One who has by a valid assignment sold personal property to another, and who thereafter, without the knowledge and consent of the purchaser, fraudulently converts the property to his own use, may be guilty of larceny, but cannot be convicted of cheating and swindling, unless deceitful means and artful practice induced the purchaser to buy something which it was not within the power of the vendor to sell.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

Hill, C. J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

W. T. Meacham was convicted of swindling, and brings error. Reversed.

Thos. B. Brown and Virgil Jones, for plaintiff in error. C. D. Hill, Sol. Gen., Lowry Arnold, Sol., D. K. Johnston, and Lamar Hill, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. 1. Upon the call of this case a motion was made to dismiss the writ of error upon the ground that the evidence in the record was not briefed as required by law. The only statement of the evidence is embodied in what purports to be a copy of the petition for certiorari, which was presented to the judge of the superior court, and which he declined to sanction. The petition for certiorari is properly incorporated in the bill of exceptions. As the issuance of the writ of certiorari was denied, the petition for certiorari should appear before this court in the exact form in which it was presented to the judge of the court below. If alterations of the petition were permitted, it would be, in some instances at least, impossible for this court to determine whether the lower court erred in the judgment refusing to sanction the petition. The rule which requires a proper brief of the evidence in writs of error generally has no application to petitions for certiorari. The petition must be incorporated in the bill of exceptions, and there is no rule requiring the testimony adduced upon the trial in the inferior judicatory to be briefed at all. The petitioner for certiorari is expected to set forth plainly and distinctly what occurred upon the trial, and he may exercise this privilege ad libitum, even to the extent of presenting what Judge Bleckley calls a rigmorole of questions and answers, objections, remarks of the counsel, etc., with no other penalty attached than the probability of irretrievably confusing the court. For this reason the motion to dismiss cannot be sustained.

2. The plaintiff in error was convicted of the offense of cheating and swindling by using deceitful means and artful practice, in violation of the provisions of section 670 of the Penal Code of 1895. It appears that after having sold an account for his wages as a fireman, and after having authorized the purchaser, as his attorney in fact, to sign any and all checks, vouchers, receipts, and acquittances necessary to be signed in order to collect the account, he collected it himself. We fail to see wherein any deceitful means or artful practice was used which can be said to be the direct cause for the prosecutor's advancing the money of which it is alleged he was defrauded. To conform with the ruling of this court in Crawford v. State, 2 Ga. App. 185, 58 S. E. 301, the accusation in the case at bar alleges that the defendant, when he made the assignment did not intend to allow King Bros. & Co. to collect the wages covered by it, but intended to collect them himself. It is further alleged that King Bros. & Co. believed and relied upon the statements contained in said application and assignment to the effect that they were authorized to collect the wages therein mentioned, and that the statements were false, and made for the purpose of deceiving them. The principle announced in the Crawford Case, supra, is entirely sound and well settled; but neither the allegations of the accusation nor the evidence in the present case measure up to the rule announced in that case. Nothing is better settled than that the false representations which afford the basis for the criminal prosecution in cheating and swindling must relate to existing facts or events in the past. A representation as to a fact which it is assumed will exist in the future, or a promise which the promisee understands must be performed in the future, does not afford a basis for a criminal prosecution, because it is apparent that he who is influenced by a representation as to a fact which he knows the future must evolve contingent upon a future action of the promisor does not primarily rely on, and is not influenced by, an existing condition, but depends upon the confidence of the promisee in the ability and integrity of the promisor. In case the anticipated event does not happen, or the promise is not fulfilled, or the pledge or future performance is not redeemed, it is a case of misplaced confidence, but not a case of false representation; and the promise, if there was no false statement of past or existent facts, cannot be said to be deceitful means or artful practice within the definition of the Penal Code, because the party to whom the representation was made had as full opportunity of determining for himself the likelihood or probability of what the future would develop as he who made the promise, and this irrespective of whether the promisor intended or did not intend to deceive the opposite party. The reason of the rule is that, if the party to whom the representation was made had full knowledge of the real condition of the affairs or chose to rely upon the promise as to a future contingency, he is not deceived by deceitful means or artful practice (because he knows all of the facts and their true relation), but his loss results from his absolute confidence in the party making the promise.

The accusation in this case states that the defendant represented that he was 21 years old; that he was employed by the Southern Railway Company; that he was employed during the month of June, 1909, and while so employed earned as salary or wages the sum of $30; that there were no offsets or counterclaims against the account, nor any orders, drafts, garnishments, or attachments outstanding in any way affecting said account; that the account was just, true, and unpaid, and had not been sold or transferred. None of these representations or warranties were false. So far as appears from the record, each of them was true. Upon this statement the prosecutor purchased the defendant's account for wages, and, in order to effectuate the purchaser's right to collect, the defendant authorized the purchaser to sign such necessary vouchers, receipts, or acquittances as were proper. The authorization of the purchaser to collect the account for wages was not in any sense a representation of a fact. It was not artful practice. The purchasers of the account did not sustain any loss (if any at all sustained) by reason of this authorization, because the prosecutor, according to the recitals of the assignment, had already parted with his money before the assignment was made. So far as the writer is concerned, he does not look with favor upon the purchase of accounts for wages where the practical result is to afford a means by which one who is working for wages can be compelled to pay an exorbitant price for the use of money earned by his labor, by selling a portion or all of his account at a reduction below its face value, no matter how such conduct may be intended. The practical effect is to extort a usurious rate of interest, whether that be the intention of the parties or not. Interest is nothing more than a charge or price for the use of one's money, and, although there be an absolute sale of account for wages or salary, yet, where it appears that the sale is made solely for this purpose of realizing sooner than the account would ordinarily be paid, it is apparent that the seller loses the difference for the sole purpose of obtaining the use of his money earlier than he would otherwise have received it, and that he sacrifices by the sale a portion of the account in his favor merely to pay for the use of the remainder during the interval between the time when he receives the purchase price and the time when he can reasonably anticipate the payment of his account. We realize that it is contrary to public policy to place restrictions on one's right to dispose of any property he may possess, at his own discretion and upon terms satisfactory to himself, and yet the writer cannot see any difference, in its practical effect upon the wage-earner, between paying a usurious rate of interest upon a loan and sacrificing a portion of the chose in action in order to be enabled to use the remainder.

But regardless of my personal views, and yielding full judicial assent to the prior decisions in which it has been held that only the sale of wages where the practical effect is to work a deduction greater than 5 per cent. per month is included within the inhibition of the statute which forbids usury by means of the device of purchasing accounts, it is plain in this case that, if the defendant sold the account to King Bros. & Co., it became from that instant their property, and, if thereafter the defendant wrongfully and fraudulently converted this personal property to his own use, he might be guilty of simple larceny, but could not be guilty of cheating and swindling, for the reason that, if any false representations of fact were made, which were the occasion of loss and damage to the purchaser, if any loss is attributable to his reliance upon the assignment and to the subsequent violation of its terms by the defendant, neither of these can be classed as antecedent causes of the prosecutor's loss. We think the judge of the superior court should have sanctioned the certiorari, and upon this record, if it had been sustained by the answer, should have granted the defendant a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

HILL, C. J. (dissenting). I do not concur in the opinion of my Brethren that the facts alleged and proved in this case do not show the offense of cheating and swindling, under the general section of the Penal Code of 1895 (section 870). The accusation was evidently framed in accordance with the views of this court as expressed in the case of Crawford v. State, 2 Ga. App. 187, 58 S. E. 303. We then thought these views were "sound and * * * fully supported by the decision of the Supreme Court in Garner v. State, 100 Ga. 257 [28 S. E. 24]," and I see no reason to change the opinion then expressed. The majority of the court in this case reaffirms the soundness of the principle announced in the Crawford Case, but think that "neither the allegations of the accusation nor the evidence in the present case measure up to the rule announced in that case." I am wholly unable to see any distinction between the facts of this case and the illustration given in that case of what would constitute a violation of this section. As held in the Crawford Case, section 670 very greatly enlarges the common-law offense of cheating and swindling by false tokens, false pretenses, and false representations. It seems to have been intended to supply deficiencies which existed in the common law in reference to this offense, as well as to embrace all other offenses of like character which were not specifically covered by other sections of the Code. The language of this section is exceedingly broad and comprehensive. "Any deceitful means or artful practice" by which another is "defrauded and cheated" is within its terms. The words "deceitful means and artful practice" are words of general use, and should be given their ordinary significance. The jury in each particular case are to determine whether the means or practice used to cheat and defraud was "deceitful or artful" in the ordinary signification and definition of these terms. I think that if the accused, at the time he sold and assigned the salary he had earned to the prosecutor and authorized the latter to collect it from his employer, the railroad company, on "pay day," had the intent, nevertheless, to himself collect it and convert it to his own use, and did accomplish this intent, he was guilty of a violation of this section. It is true he made no distinctly false representation of any fact to the prosecutor. The "deceitful means" and the "artful practice" which he employed consisted in using facts to enable him first to get the prosecutor's money, and subsequently to get the full amount of his salary from his employer. It cannot be denied that by these means he was enabled to get $63, $30 from the prosecutor and $33 from his employer, when he was only entitled to $30. The plan was very simple, was calculated to allay suspicion, and was, it seems to me, a form of artifice cunningly adopted to first get the prosecutor's money and then to collect from the employer the money which had been sold to the prosecutor. If this conduct of the defendant does not constitute "deceitful means and artful practice," I confess I do not understand the meaning of these words. To violate this statute, it is not necessary, in my opinion, that any verbal false representations or pretenses should be made. The offense can be committed by deceitful conduct as well as by deceitful words. Jones v. State, 97 Ga. 430, 25 S. E. 319, 54 Am. St. Rep. 433.

The majority of the court base the decision upon the construction that the defendant made merely an implied promise that he would not, after having sold his salary, himself collect it from his employer, the railroad company, and that in doing so he only broke his promise, and a broken promise is not a false pretense. Of course, it is well settled that a mere promise relating to the future cannot be the basis of a prosecution for this offense; but, as was said by the Supreme Court in Holton v. State, 109 Ga. 127, 34 S. E. 358, and by Mr. Bishop in his work on Criminal Law (volume 2, § 224): "Where there is both a false pretense and a promise which acted together on the mind of the person defrauded and induced him to part with a thing of value, and he would not have done so on the promise without the pretense, such a pretense, if false, is sufficient to support a conviction for being a common cheat and swindler." And as also said by Mr. Bishop in the same work: "It would be difficult to find in actual life any case wherein a man parted with his property on a mere representation of fact, whether true or false, without an accompanying promise." Here there was blended with the implied promise of the accused—that he would not himself collect the salary from the railroad company, but would permit the prosecutor to do so—the deceitful means and artful practice of selling his salary and giving written authority to the prosecutor to collect it. This apparently honest conduct, relied on by the prosecutor, induced him to pay to the accused the amount of the salary so bought, 30 days before he could have gotten it from the employer. I think this case in principle is very similar to that of Garner v. State, 100 Ga. 257, 28 S. E. 24. There the accused, with intent to cheat and swindle a named person, bought from him a horse and gave him a check in payment, took possession of the horse, and stated at the time of the purchase that the check would be paid on presentation (what was this but a promise?), and after obtaining possession of the horse, with intent to cheat and swindle the purchaser, he went to the bank and stopped payment of the check so that the seller was in fact defrauded. Suppose that, instead of stopping payment of the check, he had simply drawn all of his money out of the bank, leaving nothing to pay the check he had given to the seller for the horse, would it have been any less a case of cheating and swindling? And would there not have been just as plainly a promise made or implied when he gave the check that it would be paid at the bank, and that he had funds there to pay it, as there was in this case that he would permit the prosecutor to collect the salary from the railroad company? I cannot see any substantial difference in principle in the two cases.

It is insisted by my associates that, if the accused was guilty of any offense, it was the offense of simple larceny, that the title to his wages had passed to the prosecutor under the assignment, and therefore that when he subsequently collected his salary, it was the wrongful and fraudulent taking of the personal property of the prosecutor. Was it the property of the prosecutor; that is, did he have such a legal title to the property as would have authorized him to sue the railroad company for it? This would depend upon whether the assignment or sale covered the entire amount of salary which had been earned by the accused at the time when he made the sale or assignment, or whether it covered only a part of the amount which had been earned. I think it fairly deducible from the facts in the record that it was a partial assignment of the salary which had been earned, and that the prosecutor had only an equitable title to the amount which had been sold to him, and could not have maintained a suit against the railroad company for it. There is no evidence that the railroad company gave assent to the assignment, and as repeatedly held by the Supreme Court, and by this court, in the case of Central Ry. Co. v. Dover, 1 Ga. App. 240, 57 S. E. 1002, where there is a partial assignment of a chose in action, the purchaser has only an equitable title, which can only be enforced by equitable petition, with the debtor and consignor both parties. If, therefore, the assignment was only as to a part of the salary earned, the money was not the personal goods of the prosecutor, but was only property to which he had an equitable title, and the definition of simple larceny is: "The wrongful and fraudulent taking and carrying away * * * of the personal goods of another, with intent to steal the same." Pen. Code 1895, § 155. Of course, this would include personal goods to which one has the right of possession.

There being in the record ample evidence of the defendant's fraudulent intent when he assigned his salary and received the money therefor from the prosecutor, I am very clearly of the opinion that he was properly convicted of the offense of cheating and swindling under section 670 of the Penal Code.

ASHLEY v. CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. (No. 2,285.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. May 12, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 150*)—FREIGHT DELIVERED ON RIGHT OF WAY—LIABILITY OF CARRIER—LOSS BY FIRE.

Relatively to property for carriage, railroad companies owe no duty of diligence under the law, except where the property has been delivered at stations or places designated by the company for its delivery. Where property is placed on the railroad right of way by request of the owner and solely for his convenience, and permission is given by the railroad company to place it there, by virtue of a contract in which the owner, in consideration of such permission, relieves the railroad company from any and all liability "for the loss, damage, or destruction of said property while on its right of way, whether such loss, damage, or destruction be attributable to the negligence of any agent or employe of the company, or from any cause whatever," the contract is valid; and, if the property is destroyed by fire while on the right of way, the company cannot be held liable, except for gross negligence or willful misconduct. Holly v. Southern Ry. Co., 119 Ga. 767, 47 S. E. 188; 3 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) § 1236;

Evans v. Nail, 1 Ga. App. 42, 57 S. E. 1020. (Russell, J., dissenting.)

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 654-659; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

2. LOSS BY FIRE—EVIDENCE.

Irrespective of the contract above mentioned, the evidence in this case did not clearly show that the property was burned by the negligence of the railroad company. If there was any inference fairly deducible from the evidence sufficient to raise the statutory presumption of negligence, it was fully rebutted by the evidence in behalf of the defendant. The destruction of the property seems to have been a casualty necessarily incident to its location in close proximity to passing engines.

3. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

No material error of law was committed, and the verdict is right under the law and the evidence.

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by L. A. Ashley against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Austin Branch, for plaintiff in error. J. C. Black, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

RUSSELL, J. (concurring specially). I dissent from so much of the decision as affirms the legal validity of the contract. In my opinion, any contract which stipulates to relieve a common carrier from the results of its own negligence is contrary to the declared public policy of this state. Even if the opinion of a divided court in the case of Holly v. Southern Ry. Co., supra, were a binding precedent, the fact that the plaintiff in error in that case was traveling on a free pass (thus being virtually a guest of the company, or "gratuitous bailee") distinguishes it as to its facts from this case, in which it is undisputed that the railroad company had been receiving $6 per car for the carriage of other wood hauled from the same point, and reasonably expected to receive the same compensation as freight upon the wood which was destroyed.

ROSSI v. STATE. (No. 2,496.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. May 12, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—MURDER—INSTRUCTIONS.

"The question of what is sufficient to reduce the grade of the crime where a killing is prompted by passion is one thing, and the question of what is sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man that a felony is about to be committed upon him is another and very different thing." Consequently, in a case where it is insisted that the homicide was committed by the defendant under the fears of a reasonable man, upon whom a serious bodily injury or felony was about to be perpetrated, it is error to charge the jury that "provocation by words,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures will in no case free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder," without calling the attention of the jury to the fact that while words, threats, or menaces will not mitigate the offense, and while even the heat of passion, supposed to be irresistible, presents no excuse for homicide, nevertheless words, threats, or menaces may justify a killing if the circumstances be such as reasonably to arouse the fears of a reasonable man that a felony is about to be committed upon him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 273*)—JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE—KILLING OF WIFE'S SEDUCER.

"If a man takes the life of another who attempts the seduction of his wife, under circumstances of direct and gross aggravation, it is for the jury to find whether the case stands upon the same footing of reason and justice as other instances of justifiable homicide enumerated in the Penal Code." Biggs v. State, 29 Ga. 724 (3), 76 Am. Dec. 630.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 566; Dec. Dig. § 273.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 123*)—JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE—DEFENSE OF HABITATION.

One who may rightfully eject another from his house has the right to use whatever force is necessary to accomplish that purpose. If request, persuasion, and remonstrance have proven fruitless, and the right to the possession of one's home and the protection of his family require the eviction of an intruder, the degree of force which may be employed is limited only by the necessity for its use. Even life itself may be taken if a lesser degree of force is unavailing.

4. WORDS AND PHRASES—"MENACE."

A "menace" is defined to be the show of an intention to inflict evil. It is to act in a threatening manner, and any overt act of a threatening character, short of an actual assault, is a "menace."

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Jno. W. Maddox, Judge.

Frank Rossi was convicted of voluntary manslaughter on a charge of murder, and brings error. Reversed.

Ennis & Shaw and M. B. Eubanks, for plaintiff in error. Jno. W. Bale, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was indicted for the offense of murder, and was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter. He excepts to the judgment overruling his motion for new trial. The motion for new trial contains a large number of grounds. It is not necessary to state or discuss them in detail. In the main the charge of the learned trial judge is a lucid and impartial exposition of the law. We think, however, that the plaintiff in error is entitled to a new trial upon three of the exceptions presented.

1. In the first place, the judge charged that portion of section 65 of the Penal Code which relates to provocation by words, threats, menaces, etc., without such explanation as was required in a case like this, where the defendant presented the defense that his action was prompted by the fears of a reasonable man that the shooting was necessary for the protection of his life. If the defense had been only that the defendant was defending against an actual assault, the section might have been charged as it was by the trial judge, without qualification. Words, threats, menaces, and contemptuous gestures of themselves will not reduce a killing from murder to voluntary manslaughter. But, as held in the Cumming Case, 99 Ga. 662, 27 S. E. 177, words, threats, or menaces, according as either may be accompanied by other circumstances, may generate a reasonable fear, on the part of one to whom they are directed, that he is in danger of such serious bodily harm as may amount to a felony. And in such a case, if the jury come to the conclusion that the reasonable fears actually existed, although they were generated by threats or gestures, the jury would be authorized to justify the killing and acquit the defendant. In the present case, while the state introduced testimony to the effect that the killing was unprovoked, testimony was adduced in behalf of the defendant which tended to show that the deceased was a large and powerful man, far superior physically to the defendant, and that the threat said to have been made by him was accompanied by a manifest attempt to carry the threat into execution. If the jury believed this testimony, they should have been instructed that it was for them to determine what threat and menace, if any was proved, would justify the defendant in assuming that his life was then in danger; and even if as a matter of fact the menace would not have been sufficient to authorize another to assume that his life was in danger, still, if they believed from the circumstances that the defendant at the time was honestly impressed with the belief that his own life was endangered, he would be justified.

As stated in the Cumming Case, supra: "The question of what is sufficient to reduce the grade of the crime where a killing is prompted by passion is one thing, and the question of what is sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man that a felony is about to be committed upon him is another and very different thing. The Penal Code (section 71) declares that 'a bare fear of any of those offenses to prevent which the homicide is alleged to have been committed, shall not be sufficient to justify the killing. It must appear that the circumstances were sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man.' But it does not undertake to define what circumstances shall or shall not be sufficient to excite such fears. It is true that, in order to justify a homicide, there must be something more than mere verbal threats. There must be an appearance of imminent danger. The means of inflicting the threatened injury must apparently be at hand, and there must be some manifestation of an intention to inflict the injury presently; but it is not essential that there should be an actual assault. Mere threats and menaces may, under some circumstances, be sufficient. A 'menace' is defined to be 'the show of an intention to inflict evil'; to menace is 'to act in a threatening manner.' Webster's Dictionary. Any overt act of a threatening character, short of an actual assault, is a menace; and it will not do to say, as the court in effect did in this instance, that no such act can be considered sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man. If a man of reckless and violent character, who bears a grudge against me and has made threats, which have been communicated to me, that he will kill me on sight, approaches me in an angry and threatening manner, with a deadly weapon in his hand, though the weapon is not then directed or aimed at me, and declares that he intends then and there to kill me, this is no more than a menace, but the law does not say: 'You shall not take him at his word until he actually assaults you; until he does, any fear you may have that he is about to carry out his threats is unreasonable; and if you kill him, although you do so under the belief that the killing is necessary to save your own life, your fears are no defense.' To hold that this is the law would be to exclude as a defense, in such cases, the fears of a reasonable man, or to say as a matter of law that fears are unreasonable when we are not able to say it as a matter of fact. It would in many cases render the right of self-defense practically nugatory; for it would postpone the exercise of the right until it would be of no avail. In Wharton on Criminal Law (volume 2, § 493) it is said: 'A violent and perilous defense can only be employed in cases where there is an apparently violent and perilous attack. To sustain such a defense, however, the actual striking of a blow is not necessary, nor is it even requisite that the assailant be within striking distance, if the attack be apparently imminent.' Mr. Bishop, after stating the doctrine that threats with no overt act and no imminent danger will not justify a homicide, says: 'Not in conflict with this rule, a threatened blow need not be actually given.' Bishop's New Criminal Law, § 872. It has been well said that: 'It is difficult to lay down a rule strictly governing all cases, the circumstances of the cases differ so widely. The overt act that will justify a defendant in assuming that his own life is then in danger must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. Cases may be readily supposed, and no doubt often occur, where to require a defendant to wait until his adversary actually begins the combat would be to require him to wait until there would be but little chance left of successful defense—cases where the deadly purpose of the party is so fixed and determined, his character so reckless and bloody, his use of deadly weapons so expert and skillful, that to await his attack would be to await almost certain death; and the result of the rencounter would often depend upon which party was the quicker in action.'"

2. The learned trial judge charged the jury that "a mere indecent proposal to the defendant's wife, unaccompanied by any overt act on the part of the deceased to carry out such proposal, would not justify the defendant in killing the deceased." We are clear that this instruction was error prejudicial to the defendant. It was not within the province of the judge to say that an indecent proposal to the defendant's wife would not justify the defendant in killing the deceased. If, upon the instant of such proposal in the presence of the husband, the husband kills the attempting seducer of his wife for the purpose of protecting his honor, his home, and his marital rights, the question as to whether it is an instance standing upon a like footing of reason and justice as the protection of mere property, or the protection of one's own person against bodily harm, is a question for solution by the jury alone. We have carefully examined the cases cited by the learned counsel for the state, and in none of them is the principle stated in Biggs v. State, 29 Ga. 723, 728, 76 Am. Dec. 630, controverted or altered. In fact, we have been unable to find a case as similar in its facts to those of the Biggs Case as is the case at bar. We deem the ruling in that case as absolutely controlling in this case, and we think it well to call attention to the language of Judge Lumpkin when he says: "His honor, the presiding judge, charged the jury 'that under no circumstances of aggravation, however gross and direct, would a man be justifiable in taking the life of another, who attempts the seduction of his wife.' This instruction brings up broadly the meaning of the sixteenth section of the fourth division of the Penal Code. After treating of the various grades of homicide, murder, manslaughter—voluntary and involuntary and justifiable—it is provided that 'all other instances which stand upon the same footing of reason and justice as those enumerated shall be justifiable homicide.' What is the meaning of this section? It signifies something. And it is the duty of the courts to give it effect. It has been suggested that, to bring cases within this provision, they must be accompanied with force. But has the Legislature so limited it? Is it not more reasonable to suppose that it was their purpose to clothe the juries in criminal cases, in which they are made the judges of the law as well as the facts, with large discretionary powers over this class of offenses, and leave it with them to find whether the particular instance stands on the same footing of reason and justice as the cases of justifiable homicide specified in the Code? Has an American jury ever convicted a husband or father of murder or manslaughter for killing the seducer of his wife or daughter? And with this exceedingly broad and comprehensive enactment standing on our statute book, is it just to juries to brand them with perjury for rendering such verdicts in this state? Is it not their right to determine whether in reason or justice it is not [as] justifiable in the sight of heaven and earth to slay the murderer of the peace and respectability of a family, as one who forcibly attacks habitation and property? What is the annihilation of houses or chattels by fire and faggot, compared with the destruction of female innocence; robbing woman of that priceless jewel, which leaves her a blasted ruin, with the mournful motto inscribed upon its frontals, "Thy glory is departed"? Our sacked habitations may be rebuilt, but who shall repair this moral desolation? How many has it sent suddenly, with unbearable sorrow, to their graves? In what has society a deeper concern than in the protection of female purity, and the marriage relation? The wife cannot surrender herself to another. It is treason against the conjugal rights. Dirty dollars will not compensate for a breach of the nuptial vow. And if the wife is too weak to save herself, is it not the privilege of the jury to say whether the strong arm of the husband may not interpose, to shield and defend her from pollution?"

According to the statement of the defendant, which in this case was corroborated by sworn testimony to the same effect, the deceased repeated indecent proposals to the defendant's wife in his very presence and hearing. Nothing should be more lightly regarded than a defense (created for the purpose of acquitting a murderer) which offers as justification for homicide a false and fraudulent claim that the sanctity of the home has been invaded. The jury should repudiate with loathing a sham defense of this kind. But if in truth and in fact the virtue of one's wife or daughter is really involved, and the destruction of the innocence and purity of either is imminent, it is for the jury, and the jury only, to say whether the circumstances are such that even the destruction of human life is necessary for its protection and preservation. If the killing of a fellow creature can be justified upon the ground that it was necessary to save human life, because that life, if lost, cannot be restored, the same reason would seem to apply where female virtue is at stake; for its loss is also irreparable. In any event, it is for the jury to determine whether the necessity for the protection of the virtue of one of those females to whom the duty of protection extends exists, in any case, and whether the circumstances are such as to call for speedy action in order that the protection afforded may be adequate. It is well recognized, of course, that the use of force can only be justified where it is necessary for the prevention of an impending danger, and that a killing in revenge for a past wrong, no matter how grievous, is murder. We are not prepared to say, however, and no court can say, as a matter of fact, that a husband who would stand by without concern and not raise a hand to protect his wife, who was being solicited in his presence to consent to prostitution, might not feel, in such a case, that his wife would have just cause for believing that he desired her to consent. If the wife was a virtuous woman, she could justly think that she was without a protector. If she was a weak woman, the husband, so far from preventing the impending danger to his conjugal rights, might forfeit the respect of his wife to such an extent as to render her an easier prey to the seducer. In Wilkerson v. State, 91 Ga. 729, 17 S. E. 990, 44 Am. St. Rep. 63, in which the Supreme Court was considering the right of an adulterer to defend himself against the husband, and in which, therefore, the question now before us was not directly involved, Judge Lumpkin, delivering the opinion, says: "The law permits and will justify the homicide of another by the husband to prevent the seduction of the wife, or even to prevent the committing with her of a single act of adultery, if by his previous conduct he has not forfeited the right. Nay, more, the law will sometimes excuse the husband for slaying the seducer of his wife, immediately after the guilty act is over, if he acts promptly and in that burst of passionate indignation which overwhelms him upon discovering the outrage which has been done him."

Section 75 of the Penal Code is not a dead letter. It is not unwritten, but written, law, and leaves to the jury to determine, in every case where it is insisted that a homicide was committed in defense of the virtue of a female relative to whom the right of protection extends, the question as to whether the awful remedy of a homicide was necessary for that purpose, or whether the impending danger could otherwise have been averted, as well as whether the defense is a pretense and a sham.

3. We think the instruction of the court to the effect that the defendant would be guilty of voluntary manslaughter, if the jury found from the evidence that he was trying to eject the deceased, and that while doing so the deceased made an assault upon him, which aroused a sudden and violent impulse of passion, was injurious to the defendant, not because it is not sound law as far as it goes, but because, standing alone, it restricted his defense. Furthermore, the judge nowhere charged the jury that the defendant had the right to eject the deceased from his place of business, if the deceased refused to go upon request, and that he had the further right to use whatever force was necessary to successfully accomplish the ejection in case the deceased resisted. The court presented no instance to the jury in which the defendant, under the evidence, would have been justifiable in ejecting the deceased. The instruction of the judge was confined to supposable cases in which the defendant, seeking to eject the deceased, was aroused and angered by a blow. According to the evidence of the state, no blow was stricken. According to the evidence of the defendant, he did not act under an impulse of passion. For this reason it does not seem to us that the charge presented the contentions of either party; and, while the judge could properly have given the instruction complained of, it was error, injurious to the defendant, to do so, unless, in connection with this statement of abstract law, the jury had been told that in a proper case the defendant might have required the deceased to leave his premises, and that, if the latter refused, the defendant would have been authorized to employ whatever force was necessary to effect the ejection. While such an instance must necessarily be rare, a case is conceivable in which even the taking of human life might be necessary to clear one's home of a hardened criminal. In such a case the right is not limited by reason of the fact that the contingency or the necessity might be most unusual.

The evidence in this case is strongly in conflict in some particulars. According to the testimony in behalf of the defendant, the deceased, a large and powerful man, under the pretense of making some purchases, entered the house which was at once the store and dwelling of the defendant, and made advances to his wife, and finally, in the defendant's very presence, solicited carnal intercourse, naming the place and a time the following morning. The defendant asked the deceased to leave his house and not to insult his wife. This the deceased declined to do, sneeringly asking the defendant if he meant his request for him; and, when the defendant informed him that he did, the deceased practically refused to leave, by answering the request with the most infamous abuse of the defendant. According to some of the testimony, the deceased followed this by seizing the defendant and choking him down behind the counter, when the defendant, after having appealed to the bystanders to take the deceased off, and fearing death or serious bodily injury, drew his pistol and fired the shots which caused the death. We do not undertake to say that this is the truth of what actually transpired. According to some testimony in behalf of the state, the case was one of unprovoked murder. But the jury should have been told that words, threats, or menaces, dependent upon the attendant circumstances, may be sufficient to arouse such fear of bodily danger as will justify a homicide. They should have been told that, if the defendant had the right to require the deceased to leave his premises, he would have the right to use whatever force was necessary for that purpose, and even to kill the deceased, if the jury was satisfied that he could not otherwise have been ejected. They should have been told that they had the right to determine whether the slaying by the husband of one who in his presence had made indecent proposals to the wife stood upon the same footing of reason and justice as instances of defense of person or property. If the jury believed that an indecent proposal was made by the deceased, and that he was asked to leave the premises, and that, under the circumstances, nothing but the use of the weapon could move the deceased, the defendant should have been acquitted. If the jury believed that the defendant was rightfully ejecting the deceased, and could not remove him and protect his wife otherwise than by killing him, the defendant would be justified by the necessity which the deceased himself had created. And regardless of the question of the ejection, the jury should have been told that if they believed that the indecent proposals were made to the defendant's wife, in his presence, it was for the jury to determine, from the facts and circumstances of the case, whether the killing of the deceased was necessary for the preservation and protection of the virtue of the defendant's wife, and the preservation of his home.

Judgment reversed.

LETSON v. STATE. (No. 2,562.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. May 12, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 656*)—CONTINUANCE.

In overruling a motion for a continuance, the trial judge may, in the statement of his reasons, include a review of the evidence adduced in support of the motion, or of that submitted by way of countershowning, or of both, and may state his opinion on the weight of such testimony and its probable effect upon the trial, without violating the terms of section 4334 of the Civil Code. While a judge should not intimate an opinion as to the truth or falsity of any testimony which may properly be submitted upon a subsequent trial, he may, in ruling upon a motion for a continuance, properly pass upon the materiality of the testimony; and therefore it is not erroneous for the court to state, in the presence of the jury, that certain evidence is not material and would do the defendant no good.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 656.*]

2. JURY (§ 89*)—QUALIFICATION—INTEREST.

That the fines and forfeitures arising in the city court of Flovilla are payable to the educational fund of the city does not disqualify citizens of Flovilla from serving as jurors in that court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 411, 412; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 918*) — NEW TRIAL — GROUNDS—REMARKS OF JUDGE.

The fact that the judge, in inquiring if there was any further testimony, called the attention of the Solicitor General to the fact that one of the witnesses in behalf of the state, who had been sworn, had not been called to the stand to testify, does not require the grant of a new trial. Nor does the mere fact that the court referred to and repeated a portion of the defendant's statement require a new trial, unless it involved an expression of opinion upon the facts in the case or otherwise appears to have been prejudicial to the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2182; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

4. DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS (§ 5*)—FEES—IN SUPREME COURT—"TAKEN UP FROM THE CIRCUIT."

The act of 1907 creating the city court of Flovilla (Acts 1907, p. 174, § 6), requiring the solicitor of that court to represent the state in all cases carried therefrom to the Supreme Court, in which the state is a party, and providing that for services rendered in the Supreme Court the solicitor shall be paid the same fees as are allowed to solicitors general (even if a writ of error would lie to a decision of that city court), has no reference to cases carried by certiorari to the superior court of Butts county. If exception be taken by writ of error to the judgment upon the certiorari, this is a case "taken up from the circuit," within the meaning of the Constitution (Civ. Code, § 5862), and it is the duty of the Solicitor General of the Flint circuit to represent the state in such cases, and he is entitled to receive the fee provided for such service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 656*)—TRIAL—CONDUCT OF JUDGE.

While the court may express no opinion as to what has or has not been proved, it may state that there is testimony to a certain effect, where there is no testimony to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1524-1533; Dec. Dig. § 656.*]

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Frail Letson was convicted of assault and battery, and brings error. Affirmed.

C. L. Redman, for plaintiff in error. O. M. Duke, Sol., and J. W. Wise, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was convicted in the city court of Flovilla of the offense of assault and battery. The judge of the superior court overruled his certiorari, and exception is taken to that judgment.

1. The defendant made a motion for a continuance, which the judge of the city court overruled, and this ruling constitutes one of the exceptions presented by the petition for certiorari. It appears, from the justice's answer to the certiorari, that the witnesses had not been subpoenaed in the case then up for trial, though they had been subpoenaed in a case in which the same defendant was charged with riot. For this reason it cannot be said that the judge of the city court erred in overruling the motion. The fact that the witnesses had been subpoenaed in the riot case did not dispense of the necessity of subpoenaing them in the assault and battery case. The plaintiff in error insists, in addition, that even if the court did not err in overruling the motion, the statement of the judge that he had heard the witnesses swear before, and that their evidence was not material and would do the defendant no good, was so prejudicial to the defendant and such an expression of opinion as to require the grant of new trial. From the answer of the judge of the city court it appears that the statement complained of was not made in the presence of the jury, as none had at that time been impaneled. We fail to see, however, that it would have been erroneous, even if the jury had been present, for the judge to give his reasons for overruling the motion for a continuance, provided he confined himself to a discussion of the evidence submitted to him. Of course the expression of an opinion upon the evidence in the presence of the jury, even antecedent to the trial itself, is to be avoided, if possible, and yet the trial judge must be allowed some latitude in expressing his judgment, and, if need be, in explaining the principles upon which it is based. His statement of his reasons for overruling a motion for a continuance may include a review of the evidence adduced in support of the motion, or of that submitted by way of counter-showing, or of both, and in stating his reasons the judge may state his opinion on the weight of such testimony and its probable effect upon the trial, without violating the terms of section 4334 of the Civil Code. While a judge should not intimate an opinion as to the truth or falsity of any testimony which may properly be submitted upon a subsequent trial, he may, in ruling upon a motion for a continuance, properly pass upon the materiality of the testimony; and therefore it is not erroneous for the court to state, in the presence of the jury, that certain evidence is not material and would do the defendant no good.

2. The defendant objected to the panel of the jury put upon him in the case, because all of the jurors resided in the city of Flovilla, and, under the terms of the act creating the city court of Flovilla (Acts 1907, p. 172), the fines and forfeitures arising in that court are paid into the city treasury for educational purposes. The defendant insists that by reason of this fact citizens of Flovilla are disqualified from serving as jurors in criminal cases. The act of 1874 (Acts 1874, p. 45), now codified as section 754 of the Political Code, declares, that "the fact of a person being a citizen or resident of a municipal corporation shall not render him incompetent to serve as a juror in cases in which said municipal corporation is a party or interested." Conceding that the jurors may have been interested in swelling the educational fund of Flovilla, the state has declared that jurors are not to be deemed capable of being affected by this fact, or influenced thereby to render an unjust verdict.

3. It appears that the solicitor administered the oath to all of the witnesses for the state at the beginning of the trial, and thereafter called them to the stand. Some length of time after the last witness who had testified had left the stand, the court asked the state's counsel if he had anything else to offer, meaning thereby to inquire if he wished to offer any further evidence. The state's counsel explained his delay by stating that he was wondering whether all the witnesses for the state had yet testified. This statement being in the nature of a query, the court replied: "All you swore have testified, except Mr. Preston." Thereupon the solicitor called Mr. Preston and examined him as a witness. We do not find any cause for complaint in the conduct of the court above set forth, and there is certainly no basis for the contention that what transpired was prejudicial to the defendant, or that there was any intimation on the part of the court of any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

In charging the jury the judge stated that "the defendant in his statement said something about two absent witnesses, and they"—when he was stopped by the solicitor; and he thereafter said nothing more as to the contents of the defendant's statement. As we do not know what the judge intended to say, it cannot be inferred that the court would have stated anything that should not have been said in the charge to the jury. It is not to be presumed that he would have said anything expressive of his opinion upon the facts. And even if the judge was in fact prevented by the solicitor from making an improper statement (as was alleged), this fact would not require a new trial. It may be that, if the solicitor had not interrupted the judge, he might have intimated an opinion as to the weight of the defendant's evidence; but the mere fact that the court stated that the defendant had said something about two absent witnesses, if, as a matter of fact, the defendant did make such a statement, would not necessarily afford ground for reversal. It has several times been held that, while the court can express no opinion as to what has or has not been proved, he may state that there is testimony to a certain effect, where there is no testimony to the contrary.

4. A motion is made to tax the cost in this case. The writ of error comes to this court upon a judgment overruling a certiorari in the superior court of Butts county. Under the ruling in the case of Williams v. State, 121 Ga. 195, 48 S. E. 938, it is the duty of the Solicitor General to represent the state in criminal cases which come from city courts by means of certiorari. We deem the ruling in the Williams Case to be applicable to this, and to be controlling, and therefore adjudge that the Solicitor General of the Flint circuit, and not the solicitor of the city court of Flovilla, is entitled to the fee.

Judgment affirmed.

McCRAV v. STATE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. April 27, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JURY (§ 90*)—QUALIFICATIONS OF JURORS—RELATIONSHIP.

A juror upon the panel put upon the accused in a murder case, whose niece was the first wife of the father of the deceased, but who was not related in any way to the mother of the deceased, the second wife of his father, was not disqualified, by reason of relationship, to sit as a juror upon the trial of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 413-422; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1064*)—WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

A ground of a motion for a new trial, assigning error upon the admission of certain quoted testimony over the objection of the movant, without stating what the objection was upon which the trial judge ruled, is so incomplete that this court cannot pass upon it, although it may appear that a valid objection might have been made to such testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2676-2684; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 398*)—EVIDENCE—BEST EVIDENCE.

The rule of evidence requiring the production of the best evidence obtainable is not violated by permitting the genuineness of a signature to an unattested instrument to be proved by a witness who is familiar with the handwriting of the person by whom it purports to have been made, without introducing the testimony of such person, though he may be easily accessible at the time such proof of the signature is offered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 881; Dec. Dig. § 398.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 451*)—EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE.

"The opinion of a witness is not admissible in evidence when all the facts and circumstances are capable of being clearly detailed and described so that the jurors may be able to form correct conclusions therefrom."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1040-1042; Dec. Dig. § 451.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 156*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—STATEMENT OF ACCUSED PRIOR TO KILLING.

Testimony as to a statement made by the accused a few days before the homicide, which tended in some degree to illustrate the state of his feelings towards the deceased at the time of the homicide, and to throw some light upon the question of the motive which actuated him when the killing occurred, was not inadmissible because such statement had not been communicated to the deceased.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 298-296; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 451*)—EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE.

It is not permissible for a witness who testifies to a conversation between himself and another to state to whom such other person referred when in such conversation he used the pronoun "them"; the opinion of the witness on this question not being competent evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1040-1042; Dec. Dig. § 451.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 415*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF DECEDENT.

Declarations made by the deceased in reference to his motive in seeking to find the accused, though made while on his way to the scene of the homicide in quest of the accused, were not admissible, over the objection of the accused, for the purpose of showing that the intention of the declarant in seeking the accused was peaceful and lawful.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 937-949; Dec. Dig. § 415.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 217*)—EXAMINATION—PRIVILEGE—WAIVER.

Testimony which a witness has given, without objection on his part, cannot be excluded on motion of a party to the case, on the ground that the personal privilege of the witness was violated when such testimony was elicited from him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 780; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 374*)—CREDIBILITY—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE TO SHOW INTEREST.

It was not error, in view of the evidence in this case, to admit in evidence, to be considered solely on the question as to the credibility of a witness testifying in behalf of the accused on trial, an indictment against him and such witness, charging them jointly with the offense of assault with intent to murder, alleged to have been committed upon a named person, who, the evidence in the case on trial showed, accompanied the deceased at the time he was killed, and was assaulted as he was leaving the scene of the homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1201, 1202; Dec. Dig. § 374.*]

10. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—INSTRUCTIONS—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Under the evidence in the case, the law of voluntary manslaughter was involved therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

11. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—INSTRUCTION—SELF-DEFENSE—DUTY TO LIMIT.

Relatively to the plea of self-defense alone, in a murder case, an instruction that it was important for the jury to determine "whether the offense, if any, the defendant acted in fear of was a felony or not," was not erroneous. But such instruction, if applied to the defense that the homicide was committed in defense of the habitation of the accused against the deceased and another, who were manifestly intending and endeavoring, in a riotous and tumultuous manner, to enter the same for the purpose of assaulting or offering personal violence to some one dwelling or being therein, would be erroneous. The court should have made it clear to the jury that this instruction was intended to apply only to the defense first above indicated, and did not apply to the last-mentioned defense.

12. PROPER INSTRUCTIONS.

The instructions which were excepted to upon the ground that they deprived the accused of the benefit of his defense which is last mentioned in the next preceding headnote, and the instructions which were excepted to upon the ground that they placed improper limitations or restrictions upon this defense were not subject to the assignments of error made upon them, as in none of these instructions was the court dealing with the law applicable to the homicide in defense of one's habitation, and the court did elsewhere in the charge deal with this defense of the accused, and no complaint is made that the instructions on this subject were erroneous or were not full and explicit.

13. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The law of justifiable homicide as found in Pen. Code 1895, §§ 70, 71, is not qualified or limited by the law upon the separate branch of the same subject laid down in section 73; and it is error for the court, upon the trial of one indicted for murder, to so charge the jury as to confuse the defense of justifiable homicide under the fears of a reasonable man, based upon the provisions of the two related sections first mentioned, with the defense of absolute necessity to kill, in order to save one's own life, which is contained in section 73.

(a) Under the evidence contained in the record, the law laid down in section 73 was not involved in this case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

14. ARREST (§ 65*)—ON CRIMINAL CHARGE—PERSON ENTITLED TO SERVE WARRANT.

One whose name appears upon a warrant as prosecutor, and who, though not named as such in the warrant, is to all intents and purposes a prosecutor in the case in which the warrant is issued, is not a proper person to execute it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

15. ARREST (§ 65*)—ON CRIMINAL CHARGE—SERVICE OF WARRANT BY PRIVATE PERSON.

If a private person relies upon his having in his possession a warrant, and upon being deputized to execute it, to justify his making an arrest, he must inform the person sought to be arrested that he is acting by virtue of such warrant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Evans, P. J., and Atkinson, J., dissenting in part.

Error from Superior Court, Bryan County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

Brunswick McCray was convicted of murder, and brings error. Reversed.

Brunswick McCray was tried under an indictment charging him with the offense of murder; the person alleged to have been killed by him being Zenas S. Warnell. The jury found him guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, whereupon he made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted. According to the evidence contained in the record, Zenas S. Warnell, the deceased, and his brother, D. B. Warnell, were engaged in operating a turpentine farm. J. B. Boatright was employed by them as "woodsman," and boarded with Zenas Warnell. Brunswick McCray, the accused, had been for several years prior to the homicide employed as a laborer upon the turpentine farm by the Warnells. On several occasions he had left their premises, or, in the language of Boatright, who was the main witness for the state, had "run off," and the deceased "had gone after him." Two or three weeks prior to the homicide he again left the premises of the Warnells, and on this occasion he went to the turpentine farm of J. H. Blitch, 14 or more miles from that of the Warnells. A few days prior to the homicide, he returned to the Warnell place (where the evidence indicates his wife had still remained) at night, and, upon being seen there the next morning by D. B. Warnell, was by him furnished with some rations from the commissary, and was sent in a wagon in charge of Barker, an employé of the Warnells, to the woods to work. He apparently did not want to go to the woods to work, and said to Barker: "I have done left here, and I am going to leave again. They claim an account against me, but I don't owe them anything. Anyhow, if I do, I am not going to pay them." He also said: "The man who goes after me, it will be judgment with them." Shortly after this conversation he did leave the Warnell place. Barker testified: "He [McCray] remained on Mr. Warnell's place only that night." One night after he left Z. S. Warnell went to the bedside of Boatright, "woke him up," and asked him to go with him "for Brunswick." Boatright testified that Warnell then told him that he had a warrant, but "said he 'wanted to go to get Brunswick to come back to work for him.' That was the purpose he had in view in going for Brunswick, was to get him to come back and work for him. That was all the purpose that was disclosed to me." Another witness for the state, who lived on the Blitch place, testified that, after Warnell and Boatright got to that place, Warnell told the witness that he had come to get Brunswick McCray to go back to work for him, and did not say that he had come to arrest McCray or that he had a warrant for him. Z. S. Warnell and Boatright, the former armed with a repeating rifle and the latter with a revolver, rode in a buggy to the Blitch place, and to a two-room house thereon, which was the home of Webster McKinney, a brother-in-law of McCray's wife, and his wife and four children. Brunswick McCray and his wife were in this house at the time; the wife having joined the husband there during the night. It was between "daylight and sunup" when Warnell and Boatright got there. Warnell hailed several times at the gate in front of the house without getting any response. He and Boatright then went to the door, where Warnell again hailed several times. Finally, Webster McKinney "poked his head out of the door." Warnell asked him if "Brunswick McCray was there," to which McKinney responded, "Yes; he is here." Then, according to Boatright's version of what occurred, Warnell walked in the house, but, when Boatright started to enter also, McKinney tried to close the door on him and keep him out, but he "pushed on in there anyhow, and got in the house." According to the testimony of McKinney, when he opened the door, Warnell asked him if Brunswick McCray was in the house, and he answered, "Yes, sir," and then "asked him did he want to see Brunswick, but he did not say anything," and McKinney said: "If you want to see him, I will get him out here to you, because don't come in the house and disturb my wife and children. They are all asleep. I am the only one who is up." But McKinney testified that "they came right on in." "They got in the house by shoving the door open and coming right on in," and, when they came in, McKinney, as he testified, went out. "McCray and his wife slept in that room that night, the first room." Boatright testified that Warnell entered the house with his rifle in his left hand, the muzzle pointing downward, and he (Boatright) entered with his pistol in his right hand, having pulled it out of his pocket when McKinney tried to close the door on him. Warnell, closely followed by Boatright, walked through the front room to the door leading into the back room, pushed this door open, and stepped into the room, calling as he did so, "Come out here, Brunswick," and just then a gun was fired by some one in this room and Warnell was killed, his brains being blown out; the evidence clearly indicating that the person who fired the gun was Brunswick McCray. There was evidence as to a paper purporting to be a warrant for the arrest of Brunswick McCray, with blood on it, having been taken from an inside coat pocket of the deceased by a person who arrived at the scene of the homicide about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the day it occurred, and who then made an examination of the dead body. This paper was introduced in evidence by the state, but is not copied in the record sent up to this court. The evidence indicates that there were evidences of erasures and alteration on this paper. At the time when witnesses for the state were being questioned in reference to the finding of this paper upon the dead body, there appears to have been another paper pinned to it, but the witnesses who testified as to the discovery of "the warrant" testified that they did not know whether the other paper was attached to it then or not, and it does not appear that this attached paper was introduced in evidence. There was other testimony not necessary to be stated here.

Oliver & Oliver and F. A. Morgan, for plaintiff in error. Williams & Giles, N. J. Norman, Sol. Gen., and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. One ground of the motion for a new trial complains because the court refused to set aside for cause a juror who was upon the panel put upon the accused after the juror had informed the court that the first wife of the father of the deceased was the juror's niece, but that the juror was not related to the mother of the deceased, who was the second wife of his father. It is clear that it does not appear from the statement of the juror that he was related either by consanguinity or affinity to the deceased, nor does it appear that he was related to the prosecutor, who was D. B. Warnell, a brother of the deceased. The objection to his competency was therefore not well taken.

2. The second ground of the amended motion complains of the admission of certain testimony, objected to by the accused, without stating, however, what the objection made was. While we can conceive of a valid objection to this testimony, we cannot, without knowing what the objection which the court overruled was, decide whether the ruling complained of was right or wrong.

3. One ground assigns error because the court over the objection of counsel for the accused permitted a witness to testify that the signature upon a document purporting to be a warrant for the arrest of the accused which the state contended the deceased had in his pocket and was attempting to execute at the time he was killed was the signature of the magistrate by whom the document purported to have been issued. The ground of the objection was "that an effort was being made to lay the foundation for the introduction of the paper, that Mr. Eyer [the magistrate] was on the court grounds, that there was higher and better grounds and better evidence accessible to prove whether or not the signature was that of Mr. Eyer," and the proof offered was secondary and incompetent. While it may seem rather singular that in a case of this extreme gravity the state, while insisting that the deceased at the time that he was killed had in his possession, and was endeavoring to execute, a warrant for the arrest of the accused, and had been lawfully deputized to make the arrest by the magistrate who issued the warrant, should in seeking to lay the foundation for the introduction of the paper claimed to be the warrant have failed to introduce the magistrate by whom it purported to have been issued, when he was so near at hand, and when, as the record shows, the judge during the progress of the trial informed the counsel in the case that the magistrate was present in the courtroom, and could be introduced as a witness, yet the objection to the testimony which the state did offer for the purpose of proving the genuineness of the warrant was not well taken. The rule of evidence requiring the production of the best evidence obtainable is not violated by permitting the genuineness of a signature to be proved by a witness who is familiar with the handwriting of the person by whom it purports to have been made without introducing the testimony of such person, although he may be easily accessible at the time such proof is offered. Royce v. Gazan, 76 Ga. 79 (4); Lefferts v. State, 49 N. J. Law, 26, 6 Atl. 521; McCaskle v. Amarine, 12 Ala. 17; Smith v. Prescott, 17 Me. 277; Ainsworth v. Greenlee, 8 N. C. 190; McCully v. Malcom, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 187; Foulkes v. Commonwealth, 2 Rob. (Va.) 836. In Royce v. Gazan, above cited, objection was made to proving the execution of certain notes and drafts by proving that the signatures of the purported maker of the same were in his handwriting; the objection being that he was present in court, and that his evidence would be the best evidence of their execution. It is true that in that case the maker of the notes and drafts was the defendant in the case, and this court held that it would be especially wrong to require a party to call his adversary to prove his own handwriting, and thus make that adversary his own witness, but this was merely given as being in that case an additional reason for the ruling that, "if there be no witness to a writing, anybody who knows the handwriting of the maker may prove it." The identical question made in the present case—that is, whether the genuineness of the signature of a magistrate to a criminal warrant may be shown by proof of his handwriting by another person, when the magistrate is himself within call at the time of the trial—was made in McCully v. Malcom, supra, and decided in the affirmative. In Ainsworth v. Greenlee, supra, a judgment of a justice of the peace in a criminal case was proved by calling witnesses who were acquainted with his handwriting, although the justice was within reach of the processes of the court.

4. A witness who had examined the body of the deceased about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the day he was killed, and who testified that he found the paper purporting to be a warrant for the arrest of Brunswick McCray in an inside pocket of the coat of the dead man, was asked by counsel for the state whether, from what he saw and the examination that he made, this paper was in Mr. Warnell's pocket at the time he was killed. The witness answered: "The way the warrant was in there and the way the blood was on it, I don't see how it could be placed in any other time. In my opinion it was there at the time." This testimony was objected to upon the ground that the opinion of the witness upon this question was not competent, and the objection was overruled. The court clearly erred in this ruling. This was not a question for opinion evidence. Whether this paper was in the pocket of the deceased at the time he was killed, as the state contended, or had been subsequently surreptitiously placed there, as seems to have been the contention of counsel for the accused, was for determination of the jury alone, who were just as competent as the witness to form an opinion from the facts to which he testified relative to this matter whether the paper in question was in the pocket of the deceased at the time he was killed. Mayor, etc., of Milledgeville v. Wood, 114 Ga. 370 (2), 40 S. E. 239; O'Neil Mfg. Co. v. Harris, 127 Ga. 640, 56 S. E. 739, and cases cited; Brunswick & Birmingham R. Co. v. Hoodenpytle, 129 Ga. 174 (5), 59 S. E. 705; Churchill v. Jackson, 182 Ga. 666 (4), 64 S. E. 691.

5. A witness was permitted to testify to a statement made to him by the accused a few days prior to the homicide, which was to the effect that the Warnells claimed to have an account against him, but he did not owe them anything, and that, if any one came after him to force him to again return to the turpentine farm of the Warnells, where he had been employed as a laborer, "it would be judgment with them." This testimony was objected to upon the ground that the statement of the accused to the witness was irrelevant, unless it had been communicated to the deceased; that, if it had no influence or effect upon the deceased, it could not be material. In view of the evidence in the case as to the circumstances under which the homicide occurred, we think this testimony was admissible as tending in some degree to illustrate the state of feeling of the accused toward the deceased at the time the homicide occurred, and to throw some light upon the question of the motive of the accused when he fired the shot which took the life of the deceased.

6. The court, over the objection of counsel for the accused, allowed this witness to testify that the accused referred to "Mr. Z. S. Warnell," the deceased, "when he said he was expecting them." This was clearly a mere opinion, surmise, or conjecture of the witness, and was inadmissible. He could state what the accused said, but had no right, as a witness, to put his own interpretation upon the language of the latter.

7. The court allowed a witness to testify that the deceased on the morning that the homicide occurred, and while he was in quest of the accused, in a conversation with the witness, "said he did not believe Brunswick would hurt him, nor did he want to hurt Brunswick. All he wanted was to have Brunswick go back and work out his money what he owed; and, if he did that, he would be satisfied." These were merely declarations made by the deceased about his own conduct, not communicated to the accused, and were inadmissible over the objection of the latter.

8. Counsel for the accused moved to rule out certain testimony of one of the witnesses for the accused on the ground that the witness was not compellable to testify to anything that might tend to disgrace or humiliate him, and that the testimony in question was of that nature. This motion was properly overruled. It may be that this testimony was subject to objection by the accused upon other grounds, but it could not be excluded merely on his motion upon the ground urged. Granting that the testimony in question could have been withheld or excluded at the instance of the witness under his personal privilege, he had not claimed the protection of his privilege, and the accused could not avail himself of it in order to have the testimony excluded from the consideration of the jury. The personal privilege of a witness cannot be set up by a party to the cause on trial as a ground for excluding testimony which the witness gives without claiming the protection of his privilege. Taylor v. State, 83 Ga. 647 (4), 10 S. E. 442.

9. An indictment wherein McCray, the accused in the present case, and the witness McKinney, who testified in his behalf, were jointly charged with the offense of assault with intent to murder, alleged to have been committed upon Boatright, the principal witness for the prosecution, was offered in evidence by the state. Objection was made to its admissibility, which objection was overruled, and on this ruling error is assigned. If it appeared that the indictment was based on a part of the same transaction on which the indictment for murder was founded—that is, if it charged McCray and the witness McKinney jointly with committing an assault with intent to murder on Boatright immediately after the homicide and as he was leaving the scene of the same—the evidence was admissible for the purpose of being considered by the jury in determining the bias of the witness McKinney. It was not admissible merely as being an indictment against McCray or against McKinney. An indictment is a mere charge or accusation by a grand jury, and is no evidence of guilt. Its introduction, therefore, could not be used as tending to show that McCray was guilty of another offense than that for which he was on trial, or as tending to impeach his character, or for the purpose of showing that McKinney was guilty of any offense. The sole purpose for which it was admissible was to show that McKinney had been indicted in connection with McCray for a part of the same transaction about which he testified, so that the jury could consider whether his testimony was given in the light of that fact and of the fact that he was subject to trial under the indictment, and whether his testimony was biased thereby. If the indictment was based on Boatright's testimony that McCray shot at him as he was leaving the scene of the homicide, and that McKinney instigated or urged him thereto, such testimony would tend to show that McKinney was an accomplice. He could not be convicted of the offense charged if the person who was charged with doing the actual shooting could not be convicted. The transactions immediately preceding such shooting might have weight in tending to show whether the person who did the shooting was guilty of the offense charged, or whether, if he was, it should be mitigated, or whether he would be found guilty of any offense or of a lower grade of offense than that charged. If he was found not guilty McKinney, under the testimony of Boatright, could not be found guilty, and, if the person doing the shooting were found guilty of a lower grade of offense than that charged in the indictment, it would inure to the benefit of McKinney. So it was competent to show that McKinney testified in the light of the fact that he was thus jointly indicted with McCray, was subject to trial on that indictment, and that the testimony which he gave in the present trial might benefit or injure him on his own trial.

The court will doubtless carefully instruct the jury so as to limit them in considering the evidence to the purpose for which we have held it could be legitimately introduced, and inform them that they cannot consider it as proving or tending to prove that McCray or McKinney was guilty of the offense therein charged, or that McCray was guilty of the alleged offense for which he was on trial. But the fact that evidence which is admissible may be considered for an improper purpose, unless the judge shall correctly guard it and instruct the jury in regard to it, is not a ground for its rejection. See Cochran v. State, 113 Ga. 726 (2), 39 S. E. 332; Watts v. State, 18 Tex. App. 381. The ruling made in City Bank of Macon v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283-285 (12), is obiter, as the record in that case on file in this court shows that no assignment of error was made upon the admissibility in evidence of the indictments referred to in the ruling. Moreover, the decision was rendered by only two judges, and therefore would not be binding authority even if it were not obiter.

10. Some of the grounds of the motion raise the question whether it was error for the court to instruct the jury in reference to the law upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter; but the accuracy of the specific instructions given upon this subject is not attacked; and hence we express no opinion thereon, but simply determine that, under the evidence in the case, the law of voluntary manslaughter was involved therein. We deem it proper to say in this connection, however, that neither the paper claimed by the state to be a warrant for the arrest of Brunswick McCray, the accused in the present case, nor the paper said to have been attached to it, which are referred to by some of the witnesses for the state, is before us. The alleged warrant, although introduced in evidence by the state, is not set out in the record, and, so far as the record discloses, the other paper never became a part of the evidence in the case. If, however, the document claimed to be a warrant was really a warrant for the arrest of Brunswick McCray, and the deceased had it in his possession at the time that he was killed, and he was himself the prosecutor, or the other member of the firm of which he was a member had sworn out the warrant for an offense alleged to have been committed against the partnership, it was not lawful for him to attempt to execute it, even if the magistrate who issued it had undertaken to deputize him to do so. One whose name appears upon a warrant as prosecutor, or who, though not named as such in the warrant, is to all intents and purposes a prosecutor in the case in which the warrant is issued, is not a proper person to execute the warrant. Davis v. State, 79 Ga. 767, 4 S. E. 318. Furthermore, if a private person relies upon his having in his possession a warrant and being deputized to execute it to justify his conduct in seeking to make an arrest, he must inform the person sought to be arrested that he is acting by virtue of such warrant. Davis v. State, supra. In the present case, if the deceased at the time he was killed really had a warrant for the arrest of the accused and was seeking to execute it, he in no way disclosed this fact to the accused, nor did he even so much as intimate to the accused, or to any one else at the place where the homicide occurred, that he had a warrant or that he intended to arrest the accused. In this connection, it is due to the trial judge to say that in his charge he instructed the jury that, under the evidence submitted, the deceased had no authority to arrest the accused, and that the state did not contend that, if an arrest had been made, it would have been lawful. It is by no means clear from the evidence that the deceased was attempting to arrest the accused, but there is evidence tending to show that he was simply attempting to compel the accused to return and resume work for him. If this was the fact, if he really was attempting to force the accused to return to work for the firm of which he, the deceased, was a member, and not merely attempting to arrest him for an alleged offense, the existence of the warrant or its possession by the deceased would afford no justification whatever for his conduct. There is a vast difference between an honest, though mistaken, effort of one who has a warrant in his possession to execute it and an effort upon his part to forcibly take the person against whom the warrant has been issued and compel such person to work for him. It is perhaps proper to state here that, besides the theory of an attempted arrest under a warrant, the state also contended that when the deceased, armed with a repeating rifle, and accompanied by a companion and employé, armed with a loaded revolver, started from the home of the deceased at 2 o'clock in the morning to find the accused, his purpose was to persuade the accused to return and resume work for him, and that this was the sole motive which inspired and governed his conduct at the scene of the homicide. It will be seen, however, that these two theories were directly conflicting.

11. Exception was taken to the following instruction: "It is important in determining whether your verdict should be murder, voluntary manslaughter, or not guilty that you should consider and determine whether the offense, if any, the defendant acted in fear of was a felony or not. If the evidence shows that there was an intention to commit a serious injury, it must also appear that the defendant acted under the influence of those fears, and not in a spirit of revenge." One exception to this instruction is, in effect, that it is erroneous, because it is not necessary for the justification of one who kills another in defense of his habitation against two or more persons who manifestly intend and endeavor in a riotous and tumultuous manner to enter the same for the purpose of assaulting or offering personal violence to some one dwelling or being therein, that he should act under the fears of a reasonable man that they intend to make a felonious assault upon some inmate of the habitation, but that he would be justified if he merely acted under the fears of a reasonable man that the purpose of the invaders was to offer personal violence not amounting to a felony to some one in the house. The instructions complained of would not be erroneous if applied only to the defense that the accused fired the fatal shot under the fears of a reasonable man that his own life was in jeopardy or that a serious personal injury, amounting to a felony, was about to be inflicted upon him. Relatively to the question of complete justification for the homicide upon the ground of mere self-defense alone, without regard to the defense of habitation, it was important to determine whether the accused acted under the fears of a reasonable man that a felony was about to be committed upon him by the deceased. But, relatively to the defense indicated in the stated exception to this instruction, it was not important to determine whether the accused acted under the fears of a reasonable man that the deceased and his companion were manifestly intending and endeavoring to enter his habitation for the purpose of making a felonious assault upon him or some one else therein; but if he acted under the fears of a reasonable man that their purpose was to make an assault upon, or to offer personal violence, not amounting to a felony, to some inmate of the house, he would be justified. Hudgins v. State, 2 Ga. 173, 182; Smith v. State, 106 Ga. 681, 32 S. E. 851, 71 Am. St. Rep. 286. The court should have made it clear to the jury that the instructions complained of applied only to the defense first above indicated, that is, that the homicide was committed in self-defense against a felonious assault upon the person of the accused, or under the fears of a reasonable man that such an assault was being made upon him, and not to the defense that the homicide was committed in defense of habitation against persons manifestly intending and endeavoring, in a riotous and tumultuous manner, to enter the same for the purpose of assaulting or offering personal violence to the accused or some other person dwelling or being therein. As to the last-mentioned defense, the court should have instructed the jury that it was not necessary for the accused, in order to be justified, to have acted under the fears of a reasonable man that the assault or personal violence intended would, if perpetrated, amount to a felony, but that if he acted under the fears of a reasonable man that the purpose intended was to commit an assault upon, or to offer personal violence to, an inmate of the habitation, he would be justified.

12. Several grounds of the motion set forth excerpts from the charge, wherein the court was instructing the jury with reference to the subjects of murder, voluntary manslaughter, justifiable homicide in self-defense, and reasonable fear as a justification for a homicide, or as to some of these subjects, and except to the same, not upon the ground that they were not correct when applied to the particular subject or subjects embraced therein, but upon the ground that they either entirely deprived the accused of his defense that the homicide was committed in defense of his habitation against persons who manifestly endeavored, in a riotous and tumultuous manner, to enter the same for the purpose of assaulting or offering personal violence to some one therein, or had the effect of placing improper limitations or restrictions upon this defense. In our opinion none of these exceptions is well taken. In none of the instructions so complained of was the court dealing with the law applicable to homicide in defense of one's habitation. The court did, however, elsewhere in the charge, and very properly, we think, under the evidence in the case, undertake to deal with this defense of the accused, and no complaint is made that the court's instructions upon this subject were erroneous or were not full and explicit.

13. The court, after charging upon the subject of reasonable fear in the language of section 71 of the Penal Code of 1895, continued the instruction as follows: "In other words, it must be established that upon the occasion to which this evidence points * * * this defendant had an apprehension or had a fear, and had reason to fear, and that the reasons were such as to excite the fears of a reasonable man, not the fears of a coward, but the fears of a reasonably courageous man, that a felony was intended to be committed upon him, or a serious personal injury, and that this shooting was done with a view of defending himself against that danger, either real or apparent; that there was then impending danger; that it was necessary for him to kill to save his own life." The last two clauses of the sentence last quoted are improper qualifications of the doctrine of reasonable fear as applied to the defense of justifiable homicide, and tended to destroy the effect of the instructions upon this subject which immediately preceded them. If it is shown that when the killing occurred the circumstances under which it occurred were sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man that his life was in imminent peril, or that an offense was about to be committed against him by the person killed amounting to a felony, and in striking the mortal blow he really acted under the influence of such fears and not in a spirit of revenge, the homicide is justifiable, whether it was in fact really necessary for him to kill in order to save his own life or not, or whether there was then really impending danger or not. Absolute necessity to kill is not the test by which to determine whether a homicide was justifiable, when the defense of justifiable homicide under the fears of a reasonable man is the question involved. The doctrine of absolute necessity has its proper place in the law of homicide, but that place is not found in the section of the Penal Code which deals with the subject of reasonable fear as a justification for a homicide. Section 73 of the Penal Code, which provides that, "if a person kill another in his defense, it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing at the time of the killing that, in order to save his own life, the killing of the other was absolutely necessary," this court has decided applies exclusively to cases of self-defense arising during the progress of a fight wherein both parties have been at fault. Teasley v. State, 104 Ga. 738, 30 S. E. 938; Parks v. State, 105 Ga. 242 (3), 31 S. E. 580; Lowman v. State, 109 Ga. 501 (3), 34 S. E. 1019; Delegal v. State, 109 Ga. 518 (3), 35 S. E. 105; Pugh v. State, 114 Ga. 16 (1), 39 S. E. 875. And it has been repeatedly held that the law as laid down in section 73 does not qualify or limit the law of justifiable homicide as laid down in sections 70 and 71, and that instructions dealing with the law contained in the last two mentioned sections, which are applicable when the homicide is committed in good faith to prevent the perpetration of any of the offenses mentioned in section 70, or under the fears of a reasonable man that such an offense will be committed, unless the person who is actually, or apparently, about to perpetrate it is killed, should not be confused with instructions as to the law embraced in section 73, wherein absolute necessity to kill is made the test of justifiable homicide. Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 22-26, 29 S. E. 309, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277, and cases to this effect cited; Teasley v. State, supra; Pugh v. State, supra; Warrick v. State, 125 Ga. 133 (7), 53 S. E. 1027. In the case with which we are dealing, however, the error of the court was more deep seated than this; for, in no view of the evidence, under the decisions first above cited, could this case fall within the class of cases to which section 73 of the Penal Code is applicable, and hence the question of justification arising from absolute necessity to kill in order to save one's own life was not involved in the case.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

EVANS, P. J., and ATKINSON, J., concur in the judgment and in the various propositions laid down in the opinion, except that contained in the ninth division. We think this evidence was inadmissible. A joint indictment against a witness for the accused and the accused for a distinct offense is not admissible to show the bias of the witness. The defendant's involuntary joinder in the indictment with the witness by the grand jury affords neither presumption nor inference of identity of interest or defense. By this evidence the credibility of the witness is not attacked by any of his own acts or conduct; but he is sought to be discredited by the ex parte action of the grand jury in returning a joint bill of indictment for a distinct offense against himself and the accused. If a defendant is to be presumed innocent until proved guilty, a fortiori, the standing, character, and credibility of a witness should not be allowed to be impugned by the introduction in evidence of an indictment containing a different charge, which he has never had the privilege of defending. Our views are in accord with the ruling in City Bank of Macon v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283 (12); and, though the point there decided may have been an obiter dictum, it is based in our opinion upon an impregnable basis.

MARTIN v. COWAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTION (§ 194*)—CLAIM BY THIRD PERSON—EVIDENCE.

In a claim case, where the plaintiff in fi. fa. seeks to make out a prima facie case by showing possession in the defendant, it is incumbent on him to show such possession at the time of the rendition of the judgment, or at the time of the making of the levy, or at some time intermediate the judgment and the levy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 196*)—CLAIM OF THIRD PERSON—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In such a case, where the levying officer amended his entry of levy by adding thereto, after the words "defendant in fi. fa.," the words "being in possession of the property levied upon," and where the plaintiff in fi. fa. on the trial introduced also the testimony of witnesses which, as it appears in the record, is somewhat ambiguous, and renders it uncertain whether the defendant was in possession, either at the time of the rendition of the judgment, or at the time of the making of the levy, or between those dates, the presiding judge correctly refused to dismiss the levy, but erred in directing a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. He should have submitted the case to the jury, to determine what was the fact in regard to such possession.

SMITH v. SMITH et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

EJECTMENT (§ 63*)—PLEADING—PETITION.

In an action of complaint for land and mesne profits, the petition, which alleged that the defendant was in possession, claiming title under the plaintiff's mortgagee, who had sold the land under the mortgage, and that the debt secured was the debt of the plaintiff's husband, and the sale void, was subject to demurrer; it not being alleged that the purchaser at the mortgage sale had notice at the time of the sale that the debt was that of the husband. To meet the demurrer it was not sufficient to allege that the mortgagee had notice, or that two others, one being the defendant, but neither alleged to be the purchaser at the mortgage sale, "likewise knew" all the facts stated in the petition.

TAYLOR v. HARTSFIELD.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTION (§ 196*) — CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS—QUESTION FOR JURY—POSSESSION AT TIME OF LEVY.

Where, in a claim case, the plaintiff in fa. introduced in evidence the entry of levy, which contained a statement that the defendant in fa. was in possession of the land levied at the time of the levy, and also introduced parol evidence tending to show such possession, but later introduced other parol evidence tending to show that the defendant was not in possession at the time of the levy, but that the claimant was then in possession, it was error for the presiding judge to direct a verdict finding the property subject. He should have submitted to the jury the question thus raised by this conflicting evidence as to possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 194*) — CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS—TITLE IN CLAIMANT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a claim case, if the plaintiff in execution makes out a prima facie case, and the claimant seeks to show title to the land levied on, it is not sufficient for that purpose to introduce a deed from a third person who is not shown to have had title, or to have been in possession at the time of the making of the deed.

(a) In the present case, the deed sought to be introduced was claimed to have been made by a corporation. The evidence failed to show that such corporation was in possession, but tended to show that its president, as an individual, held the land as his own.

(b) Objection having been made to such deed when it was introduced, and it having been admitted temporarily, but subject to a renewal of the motion, and the evidence, when the claimant closed, failing to show either title or possession in the corporation when the deed was made, its exclusion from evidence, on motion, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 370*)—CORPORATIONS (§ 432*)—DEEDS OF CORPORATION—SEAL AS PRESUMPTION OF AUTHORITY—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

When a deed purporting to have been made by a corporation, through its president, is offered in evidence, and objection is duly raised thereto, authority of the president to make such deed should be shown. If the deed has the seal of the corporation attached thereto, this will furnish presumptive evidence of such authority.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—DECISIONS APPEALABLE—JUDGMENT ON DEMURRER TO APPLICATION FOR QUO WARRANTO.

According to the ruling made in Western & Atlantic Railroad Co. v. State, 69 Ga. 524, which was followed in Sayer v. Harding, 118 Ga. 642, 45 S. E. 418, a judgment overruling a demurrer to an application for the writ of quo warranto is not a final disposition of the case, from which a bill of exceptions can be taken directly to this court.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 337*)—EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 30*)—DISMISSAL—PREMATURE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EXCEPTIONS PENDENTE LITE.

Under the rulings made in the cases above cited, the bill of exceptions in the present case was prematurely sued out, and therefore the writ of error must be dismissed; but, inasmuch as such rulings seem to constitute an exception to the general practice that a bill of exceptions will lie in a case "when the decision or judgment complained of, if it had been rendered as claimed by the plaintiff in error, would have been a final disposition of the cause," leave is granted, on motion of counsel for the plaintiff in error, to have the official copy of the bill of exceptions, of file in the office of the clerk of the superior court, recorded there as an exception pendente lite.

BUCHMAN et al. v. INSURANCE CO. OF NORTH AMERICA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INSURANCE (§ 668*)—ACTION ON POLICY—NONSUIT.

It appearing from the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, who sued upon a policy of fire insurance, that there had not been even a substantial compliance with the terms of the promissory warranty contained in the "iron safe clause," providing that "the assured will keep a set of books, which shall clearly and plainly present a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases, sales and shipments, both for cash and credit, from date of inventory as provided for in first section of this clause, and during the continuance of this policy," and compliance by the assured with this part of the contract of insurance being one of the conditions upon which, by the express terms of the contract, the validity of the policy is made to depend, the court did not err in directing a nonsuit at the conclusion of the testimony offered by the plaintiff. *Sou. JACKSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. April 16, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NAME OF PROSECUTING WITNESS.

It being in issue, under the evidence, as to whether there was a variance between the name by which the female alleged to have been assaulted was commonly known and the name set forth in the indictment, it was not error for the court to charge the jury touching this issue in the following language: "I charge you, if you find from the facts and circumstances of this case that the name set out in the indictment is the name by which the party was called, one that she recognized, and one by which she was known, it would be sufficient in law."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

2. STATEMENT OF OPINION.

The extract from the charge above quoted is not open to criticism upon the ground that it expresses or intimates an opinion upon any fact involved in the case.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 770*)—INSTRUCTIONS—OBJECTIONS.

It is not a valid ground of criticism upon a charge correct and proper in itself that it fails to state some other rule or principle of law pertinent to the issues of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 770.*]

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

There was sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Emanuel County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Jim Jackson was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Saffold & Larsen, for plaintiff in error. Alfred Herrington, Sol. Gen., Hines & Jordan, and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BECK, J. The plaintiff in error, Jim Jackson, was charged with the offense of rape, alleged to have been committed upon one Neida Jackson. Upon the trial the jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and defendant excepted.

In addition to the general grounds, complaining that the verdict was contrary to evidence and the law, and without evidence to support it, the motion for a new trial contained a special ground assigning error upon the following charge of the court: "I charge you, if you find from the facts and circumstances of this case that the name set out in the indictment is the name by which the party was called, one that she recognized, and one by which she was known, it would be sufficient in law." As to the name of the female alleged to have been assaulted, she testified: "My name is Nedia Jackson. I go by the name of Nedia Jackson. That is the name I am known and go by—Nedia Jackson. That is the name I answer to. They call me Nedia Jackson, and I answer to it. I took the name of Nedia Jackson, because my mother married him [Jim Jackson]. They don't always call me Nedia Jackson. If anybody meets me, they just call me Nedia; but if they write anything, they call me Nedia Jackson. They address me as Miss Nedia Jackson. People calling me just say, 'Hello, Nedia.' That is the name I answer to. They call me Nedia; but my real name is Nedia Jeeter, and when people call me they always call me Nedia." While the spelling of the Christian name of the party upon whom the assault is alleged to have been made, as reported in the evidence, varies from the spelling of the name in the indictment, we have no doubt but that it is one and the same name with that stated in the indictment, and we think it is clearly a case of idem sonans, though various pronunciations might be given to it by different readers, and in fact there is no contention but that the Christian name of the party assaulted was correctly stated in the indictment. It is insisted, however, that her true name was Nedia Jeeter; but after the marriage of her mother to the accused she took the name of Nedia Jackson, and while she does not state in her testimony that she was universally or generally known by that name, the jury were authorized to find that she was so known, and the charge above quoted stated a correct rule for the guidance of the jury in determining whether there was a variance between the name as stated in the indictment and her real name, or that by which she was known. The criticism upon the charge, complaining that the court should have submitted to the jury the question as to whether the name stated in the indictment was the name "by which she was generally or commonly known," is without merit. The language of the charge itself is sufficiently comprehensive to indicate to the jury that they were to determine whether the name stated in the indictment is the one by which the party was commonly called and known. See, in this connection, Johnson v. State, 46 Ga. 289.

2. The extract from the charge above set forth is also criticised upon the ground that it did not leave the question of the identity of the person alleged to have been assaulted to the jury, and did not leave it for the jury to say whether the Nedia Jackson mentioned in the indictment was identical with the person testifying on the trial, but that the charge takes it for granted, thereby amounting to an expression of opinion upon the part of the court that she is one and the same person. We do not think that the charge contains any expression or intimation of opinion by the court upon any fact in issue.

3. It is not a valid ground of complaint against a charge, correct in itself, that it fails to submit some other issue of fact to the jury, when it correctly submits to them the particular question with which it is dealing; and there is no complaint in the motion for a new trial that the court did not elsewhere in his charge properly submit to the jury the question of the identity of the witness with the person designated as Nedia Jackson in the indictment.

4. The evidence is sufficient to uphold the verdict, and we do not feel authorized to interfere with the discretion of the court below in refusing a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

BUCHANAN v. JAMES, Com'r, et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 1½, * New, vol. 9, Key No. Series)—NATURE OF MOTION.

A motion for a new trial is a means of seeking to have a retrial or re-examination, in the same court, of an issue of fact, or of some part or portion thereof, after decision by a jury, report of a referee, or a decision by the court thereon. It is an application for a retrial of the facts of the case. 2 Thomp. Trials, § 2708; Castellaw v. Blanchard, 106 Ga. 97, 31 S. E. 801; 5 Words & Phrases, 4788 et seq.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 570*)—BAR—NONSUIT.

The grant of a nonsuit terminates the case, without a final passing upon the issues of fact by a jury, referee, or judge. It is a ruling by the judge that the plaintiff, under the evidence presented by him, has not made out such a case as to entitle him to have the jury pass upon the issues of fact. It is a ruling of law by the judge, not a determination of the issues of fact. Under the practice in this state, it does not preclude the plaintiff from bringing another action, and seeking to make out his case by the introduction of evidence on the trial thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1028; Dec. Dig. § 570.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 38*)—GROUNDS—GRANTING OF NONSUIT.

It follows, from the distinction which will appear from the two preceding headnotes, that where the presiding judge grants a nonsuit, and thus terminates the case before a verdict or decision upon the issues of fact, a motion for a new trial is not the proper mode of testing the correctness of such ruling. See Hudson v. Georgia Pacific Ry. Co., 85 Ga. 203 (3), 11 S. E. 605; Central Railroad Co. v. Folds, 86 Ga. 42, 12 S. E. 216; Swain v. Macon Fire Ins. Co., 102 Ga. 96, 103, 29 S. E. 147; Southern Railway Co. v. James, 114 Ga. 198, 39 S. E. 849; City of Atlanta v. Miller, 125 Ga. 495, 54 S. E. 538.

CITY OF DAWSON v. THORNTON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. QUESTION NOT NECESSARY TO DETERMINE.

The extent to which a municipality may constitutionally go in enacting ordinances in regard to a public weigher is a question which need not be determined in this case.

2. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (§ 8*) — ORDINANCES—CONSTRUCTION.

An ordinance passed by the municipal authorities of the city of Dawson, after creating the office of public weigher, provided as follows: "It shall be the duty of said public weigher, in all cases of disagreement between seller and buyer, to weigh all cotton and other products sold by weight, when requested to do so, and give his certificate for the same." This provision did not undertake to compel all persons who bought or sold cotton or other produce to have the same weighed by the public weigher, or to prohibit warehousemen and cotton buyers from employing an agent or clerk to weigh cotton in cases not falling within the duty of the public weigher as above defined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weights and Measures, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (§ 8*)—ORDINANCES—CONSTRUCTION.

While the penal portion of the ordinance employs some broad language, it must be construed in connection with its object, which was to prevent interference with the discharge of his duty by the public weigher. The ordinance provides for weighing by the public weigher only in cases of disagreement between seller and buyer, when he is requested to weigh. If the penal section were construed to impose a punishment on any clerk or other person for weighing cotton under any circumstances or in any capacity, without having been legally elected to the office of public weigher, it would seem that such provision would be invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weights and Measures, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

PINNEBAD v. PINNEBAD.

(134 Ga. 496)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 27*)—GROUNDS—CRUEL TREATMENT BY WIFE—SUITS AGAINST HUSBAND.

That a wife brings suit against her husband and recovers judgment against him for a debt due to her, and that after separation she sues him for temporary alimony and obtains a judgment in such action, does not constitute cruel treatment, or furnish to the husband any basis for a suit for divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 27*)—CRUEL TREATMENT—REFUSAL OF WIFE TO COHABIT.

Mere proof that a wife declined to cohabit with her husband will not authorize the grant of a divorce to him on the ground of cruel treatment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 77; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—DESERTION—REFUSAL OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

Considering willful and persistent denial by a wife of the conjugal rights of her husband, without justification, and with the intention of casting him off as a husband completely and forever, as constituting desertion, although she continue to reside in the matrimonial domicile, under section 2426 of the Civil Code of 1896, such desertion must continue for three years in order to furnish a ground for a suit for divorce. Whitfield v. Whitfield, 89 Ga. 471, 15 S. E. 543.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 111, 128; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Under the rulings in Ring v. Ring, 118 Ga. 183, 44 S. E. 861, 62 L. R. A. 878, Brown v. Brown, 129 Ga. 247, 58 S. E. 825, and Stoner v. Stoner (April 18, 1910) 67 S. E. 1030, the evidence failed to show a case of cruel treatment which authorized the grant of a divorce on that ground; and the evidence of the plaintiff showed that there had been no desertion willfully and continuously persisted in for three years before the bringing of the suit. The verdict finding a total divorce for the plaintiff was therefore unauthorized by the evidence.

KING & CLARK v. MONIAC TURPENTINE CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—INJUNCTION (§ 48*)—GRANT OF TREES—TITLE ACQUIRED—TRESPASS.

The grant conveyed, "for a term of 10 years from January 9, 1907, all the pine, cypress, oak, and other timber and trees, living or dead, standing or lying, of all sizes and dimensions, including stumps, roots, stock, and branches, whatsoever, thereon and thereof, for all uses and purposes, of any character and description, and to be removed and taken off within the time hereinafter stated, excepting therefrom the right and privilege of second party [King & Clark], or his assigns, to cut, box, or hack any living pine trees thereon for turpentine purposes in and upon that tract or body of land located," etc. Held, the exception did not exclude any of the trees from the operation of the grant, but restricted the grantees from cutting and boxing the pine trees for turpentine purposes. The grantees have such an interest in the pine trees during the stipulated period as will support an action to enjoin an insolvent trespasser from cutting and boxing the trees for turpentine use, and to recover such damages as the grantees may sustain from the trespass.

Error from Superior Court, Charlton County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by King & Clark against the Moniac Turpentine Company and Henry Williams. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

King & Clark, copartners, brought suit against the Moniac Turpentine Company and Henry Williams to enjoin them from trespassing upon a certain tract of land, and to recover damages for the trespass already committed. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the owners of all the timber upon the described lots of land, which they had purchased for their own use and profit; that the same was necessary for the successful conduct of the sawmill, cross-tie, wood, timber, and lumber business in which they were engaged; that the acts of the defendants in turpentineing the trees were a continuing trespass, requiring of the plaintiffs a multiplicity of suits, but that the damages therefrom were incapable of being estimated with any degree of certainty; and that the defendants were insolvent and unable to respond in damages. The case came on for trial, and the plaintiffs proved title to the timber, the last muniment of which was a deed from the Charlton Land & Timber Company to the plaintiffs, conveying, "for a term of ten (10) years from January 9, 1907, all the pine, cypress, oak, and other timber and trees, living or dead, standing or lying, of all sizes and dimensions, including stumps, roots, stock, and branches, whatsoever, thereon and thereof, for all uses and purposes, of any character and description, and to be removed and taken off within the time hereinafter stated, excepting therefrom the right and privilege of second party, or his assigns, to cut, box, or hack any living pine trees thereon for turpentine purposes in and upon that tract or body of land located in the First land district of Charlton county, Georgia, and containing four thousand six hundred and thirty-nine (4,639) acres, more or less, and described as follows," etc.

The plaintiffs submitted evidence that the defendants, without the consent and over the protest of plaintiffs, entered upon the land described in the petition, and cut, hacked, boxed, and worked the pine trees thereon suitable for turpentine purposes, and still over the objections of the plaintiffs continued to do so until the present time, and that the working of the trees, outside of the turpentine taken therefrom, has injured and damaged plaintiffs because of the trees being blown down and destroyed by such work, to the extent of at least $500. At this juncture the plaintiffs offered an amendment, alleging that, "while they leased the timber in controversy from the Charlton Land & Timber Company for all purposes for the term specified of 10 years from January 9, 1907, except the turpentine privilege, and held possession of same for said purposes, such turpentine privilege is inconsistent with the enjoyment of said timber during term for said other purposes; that the boxing and working of said timber for turpentine purposes also tends to injure and damage said timber for such other purposes, by subjecting it to destruction by fire and storms, and renders the timber less valuable for such other purposes, including the manufacture of same into lumber and cross-ties; that plaintiffs, holding said timber under said Charlton Land & Timber Company for such other purposes, are in duty bound to protect same against the boxing and working same for turpentine purposes by defendants as trespassers, not only because of the injury and damage caused thereby to said timber for the purposes for which it was conveyed to them, but in protection of the freehold of their lessors, the said Charlton Land & Timber Company;

* * * that while they may not recover of and from defendants damages for the turpentine privilege in and to said timber, they are entitled to recover the amount of the damages claimed as injury to said timber for the purposes for which the same was leased and conveyed to them; and, as such injury and damage is irreparable, they are entitled to enjoin the same, which they pray may be done." They offered to support this amendment by proof. The court disallowed the amendment and granted a nonsuit on motion of the defendants, predicated upon the ground that inasmuch as plaintiffs, under the deed from the Charlton Land & Timber Company to them, had no right or title to cut, box, or hack the trees for turpentine purposes, they were not injured thereby, and could not recover under the pleadings and evidence, and were not entitled to a permanent injunction as prayed. Exception is taken to the disallowance of the amendment and the grant of a nonsuit.

J. L. Sweat and H. F. Dunwody, for plaintiffs in error. Wilson, Bennett & Lambdin, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The plaintiffs showed that their immediate grantor, the Charlton Land & Timber Company, was the owner of the freehold; and their contention is that they are the owners of all the timber granted in their lease by the Charlton Land & Timber Company, during the period of their lease, with the restriction that they should not use the same for turpentine purposes. The defendants, on the other hand, contend that, the turpentine privilege being expressly excepted from the grant, the plaintiffs had no such right or title as would enable them to maintain a suit to enjoin the defendants from working the timber for turpentine purposes. The correctness of the respective contentions of the parties depends upon a construction of the timber deed from the Charlton Land & Timber Company to King & Clark, an abstract of which appears in the statement of facts. A grant of timber to be cut and removed within a specified time passes title to the timber, subject to be defeated upon a failure to cut and remove it within the time stipulated in the grant. Morgan v. Perkins, 94 Ga. 353, 21 S. E. 574. The grant of the timber by the Charlton Land & Timber Company to the plaintiffs was as broad as is possible for words to make it. The grantors in that deed conveyed all the timber for all uses and purposes, "excepting therefrom the right and privilege of second party or his assigns to cut, box, or hack any living pine trees thereon for turpentine purposes." The exception does not operate upon the grant of the trees, but upon the use to which they may be put by the grantees or their assigns. The grant operates upon all the trees conveyed, and the exception does not undertake to except any tree upon the land. The grantees are given the right during the period of the lease to use the timber for any use, except that they may not turpentine it. They may cut the trees and manufacture them into cross-ties or lumber, but they are prohibited by their deed from turpentering the timber. The exception in the lease is more in the nature of a covenant not to put the timber to turpentine use than it is an exception of anything which was granted. A covenant by a lessee to plow the demised premises, except the warren, in due course of husbandry, was held to imply a covenant not to plow the warren. St. Albans v. Ellis, 16 East, 352. The grantees, therefore, had the right to use the timber as restricted by the deed. It was their timber, and the restriction that they were not to use it in a particular way gives no right to an insolvent trespasser to damage or destroy the timber by making use of it in a manner denied the plaintiffs by their grant.

It would make no difference to the defendants if the deed should be construed as reserving to the grantor the turpentine privileges in the timber, because it does not appear from the record that they are assignees or privies in estate with such grantor. So far as disclosed by the record, they are insolvent trespassers, without any claim of title to the land or the timber; and the existence of a right in some one else to do an act would be no justification of themselves to do the same act, which would have the effect to injure the timber of the plaintiffs by making it liable to be blown and destroyed by fire. The court erred in rejecting the proffered amendment, and also in granting a nonsuit.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON, J., disqualified.

BASCH v. FRANKENSTEIN et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

EQUITY (§ 71*)—STALE DEMAND.

The court committed no error in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the equitable petition, on the ground that it undertook to set up a stale demand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 204-211; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Action by S. R. Basch against M. I. Frankenstein and others. From an order sustaining a demurrer, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

The plaintiff in error filed an equitable petition for injunction, reformation of a deed, a decree that the plaintiff have and receive an undivided one-half interest in the land described in the petition, an accounting for rents, and other equitable relief. To the petition the defendants filed a demurrer on the following grounds: "(1) No cause for relief of any kind is set forth in the petition. (2) It appears by the allegations of the petition that petitioner is not entitled to the remedies sought for, or any of them. (3) The claim set up by petitioner is barred, and is also a stale demand, and it appears by the petition that petitioner has been guilty of such delay and laches as will prevent any recovery by petitioner." To the order of the court sustaining the demurrer the plaintiff excepted. The presiding judge, in his opinion appearing in the record, succinctly set forth all the material allegations of the petition, and gave his reasons for sustaining the demurrer. A copy of his opinion is as follows:

"The petitioner's grandfather, Elias Barnett, in 1872 gave to her and her sister, Julia Barnett, and to the survivor of them, the sum of $2,000. They were minors at the time, and the money was paid by the grandfather to their father, Wolfe Barnett, for the benefit of said minors, or the survivor of them. At some time, presumably in 1872, Wolfe Barnett invested the money in the purchase of an undivided one-half interest in a plantation in Bryan county, buying it for the use of the minors or the survivor, but for purposes of the said Wolfe Barnett and one Julius Levkoy, each knowing the interest of the minors in the purchase money, the deed was made to Levkoy, he holding the one half interest in the land in trust for petitioner, the other half being his own. On August 7, 1879, Levkoy conveyed an undivided half interest in the plantation to Leah Frankenstein, the mother of defendants; she fully knowing and understanding that such interest belonged to the petitioner (who was then the survivor of the minors), and the said Leah taking the same in trust, although the deed did not express or describe the trust. About the same time Levkoy transferred his half interest to Jane H. Ellis, who in turn conveyed to W. C. Jackson. Subsequent to this Wolfe Barnett purchased the Levkoy half interest from Jackson for Marcus I. Frankenstein; the deed being made to Leah Frankenstein on a consideration of $2,000, who in turn conveyed it to Marcus I. Neither Levkoy nor his heirs have any claim to the property, nor have they claimed any since August 7, 1879. The defendants are adult heirs at law of Leah Frankenstein, and at all times had knowledge of the alleged trust; that is to say, that, whilst their mother was nominally the owner of said undivided half interest, [she] was really and in truth holding the same as trustee for the sole use and benefit of the petitioner, who on August 7, 1879, was, and has been since, the owner. Wolfe Barnett had great confidence in his sister Leah, and had the title put in her name because at the time he was in financial difficulties and feared the interposition of creditors, even if he appeared as trustee. He used his sister's name in various operations concerning the land, causing her to sign notes and do other things about the management of the property, and she never denied that she had no interest in the land, nor that she was holding the title for the benefit of petitioner. Leah Frankenstein died January 30, 1901, admitting up to the time of her death the interest of petitioner and her own want of interest in the land. Since her death the defendants as her heirs have claimed adversely to petitioner, asserting that they are the owners of the interest, and refusing to recognize the petitioner as owner. All the matters concerning the land were conducted by Wolfe Barnett, and he never told petitioner what her rights in the land were, nor did she know anything concerning the title thereof, and how it had been arranged and held, nor concerning her rights in the premises, until December 19, 1907, when she learned the facts from Wolfe Barnett and immediately asserted her claim, filing this action, as a consequence, on May 9, 1908. The petitioner prays decree that Leah Frankenstein, in her lifetime, held the interest as the trustee, petitioner being the true owner, and that the deed from Levkoy be reformed, a division of the entire holding in kind or by sale, injunctive relief against waste, and an accounting for rents and profits.

"This is the case as presented by the petitioner. Between the deed to Levkoy and the filing of this action 36 years have intervened. When the petitioner became of age does not appear. But if when the money was handed her father by her grandfather she was only a day old, 15 years have elapsed since the attainment of her majority. Manifestly, a strong case must be presented in order to keep a cause in court which is burdened with all these years. There is no conspiracy charged; no fraud; no agreed effort to suppress information. Many people are declared to have known the true history of the transaction. The grandfather knew it; the father knew it; Levkoy knew it; the aunt knew it; the defendants knew it. For all that appears to the contrary, the other cestui que trust knew it. The sole person who during all these years did not know seems to have been the petitioner. There is no declared object of keeping the knowledge from her. The father's object appears to have been to keep the information from his creditors. He is not a defendant here; no fraud is imputed to him; no design to conceal; no present insolvency; no reason why, if he has violated a trust, he is not abundantly able to respond. Whilst it is stated that Leah Frankenstein was only the nominal owner, it only inferentially appears that she did not pay the consideration money named in the deed. For over seven years the defendants have been claiming the property adversely to petitioner. No facts are alleged to account for the failure of the petitioner to know, nor is any diligence on her part declared. She does state that 'all matters concerning said land have been conducted by the said Wolfe Barnett, and he never told this petitioner what her rights in the land were, nor did she know anything concerning the title thereof, and how it had been arranged and held, nor concerning her rights in the premises.' Non constat, but she knew of the gift of the money, and knowing that, it would seem unreasonable to assume that with a fact so extensively known by those who are not charged with fraud or even the effort to conceal, so far as petitioner was concerned, the slightest diligence would have disclosed years ago what was voluntarily told on December 19, 1907. On the contrary, taking, as I am bound to do, the strictest line of construction against the pleader, it would appear that no one so much as undertook to conceal the alleged truth. There is no claim that Elias Barnett did not make it known, and it is distinctly averred that during her lifetime, from August 7, 1879, to January 30, 1901, a period of nearly 21 years, Leah Frankenstein 'admitted that she * * * had no interest in said land, but that your petitioner owned an undivided one-half interest therein.' There was about the transaction, save so far as the creditors of Barnett were concerned, apparently no secrecy. At all events, no facts are pleaded, as would seem requisite from the decisions, which explain why diligence on the part of the petitioner would not have disclosed the main fact long ago. This seems to have been a family affair, and to that extent the rule of law would allow some elasticity in the requirement of diligence. On the other hand, certainly one important witness, Leah Frankenstein, has died, and possibly others, and this tightens the rule again. I sustain the demurrer without going into the other very interesting subjects suggested by the arguments and the investigation. The initial step involved a parol trust concerning personality. The trust in land, whilst expressed so far as words can make it, is not in writing. Resultant or not, as it may have been at some stage, these particular defendants, save in so far as they may be affected by the attitude of their mother, have neither by writing nor words expressed any trust. They have denied it in asserting their own ownership. The responsible party, under these circumstances, seems to me to be Wolfe Barnett.

"Let an order be presented sustaining the demurrer."

Garrard & Meldrim and Osborne & Lawrence, for plaintiff in error. Adams & Adams, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). We think the court committed no error in dismissing the petition on the demurrer thereto. The able opinion rendered by the presiding judge, Hon. Walter G. Charlton, hereinbefore copied, clearly and forcibly sets forth sound reasons why the plaintiff should not be permitted to maintain her action. As therein pointed out, it is not shown from the petition that the plaintiff has not at all times known that her grandfather gave the $2,000 to her father for the benefit of herself and her sister. If she knew this in 1872, no excuse is offered why she did not from that time until the death of her aunt, Leah Frankenstein, in 1901, inquire what disposition was made of the money, and it would seem that if inquiry had been made the truth as to the investment of his money in 1879 would have been given her, as no fraudulent intent on the part of any of the parties is charged. The only statement the plaintiff makes about her age is that she was a minor in 1872. It is impossible to tell what time elapsed after she became of age until she filed suit in 1908. The time which thus elapsed could not have been less than 15 years, and, as far as we know from the petition, may have been 36 years. While it does not appear when the plaintiff became of age, it does appear she had reached her majority when the mother of the defendants died on the 30th day of January, 1901, and defendants thereafter held the land adversely to the plaintiff for more than seven years before she filed suit. The laches of the plaintiff bars her of any right to the relief sought. Civ. Code, §§ 3939, 3775. And see, in this connection, Baker v. Baker, 134 Ga. —, 67 S. E. 541; Reynolds v. Martin, 116 Ga. 495, 502, 42 S. E. 796.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRIAL (§ 47*)—WITNESSES (§ 359*)—EXAMINATION—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—SHOWING PURPOSE OF ADMISSION.

On direct examination a witness was asked: "Did you have any information in the early part of the year 1902 to the effect that John Walker had escaped from the penitentiary?" On objection the court refused to allow the question to be answered. In an exception to this ruling it was not stated that the counsel informed the court what answer was expected, but it was stated that the counsel expected the answer "that he had." Held, the proper practice would have been for the counsel to have stated to the court the answer that he expected. Cesar v. State, 127 Ga. 710 (5), 57 S. E. 66. And the testimony elicited should have related to facts, rather than to mere "information" of the witness. Atlanta Consolidated Street Railway Co. v. Bagwell, 107 Ga. 158, 33 S. E. 191.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 973*)—REVIEW—REFUSAL TO DIRECT VERDICT.

While a trial judge may, within the restrictions prescribed by Civ. Code 1895, § 5331, direct a verdict, this court will in no case reverse a trial court for refusing to do so. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Mote, 131 Ga. 166, 62 S. E. 164.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3846; Dec. Dig. § 973.*]

3. DIRECTED VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Under the doctrines announced in the cases of Wilson v. Allen, 108 Ga. 275, 33 S. E. 975, and Murchison v. Green, 128 Ga. 339, 57 S. E. 709, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702, the evidence was not of such character as authorized the judge to direct a verdict in favor of the applicant. For other cases, see note to Smith v. Fuller (Iowa) 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98.

Error from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Frank Park, Judge.

Petition by Eugenia Scurry for a year's support out of an estate, to which Aaron Scurry, guardian and next friend of Jamie Scurry, filed a caveat. Objections were sustained, and on appeal to the superior court there was a directed verdict for applicant, and the caveator and J. L. Green, administrator, bring error. Reversed.

Eugenia Scurry filed a petition to the court of ordinary, alleging that James Scurry departed this life on December 21, 1906, leaving petitioner (his widow) and two minor children surviving him; and she prayed that a year's support, as allowed under the provisions of Civ. Code, § 3465, be set aside for them out of the estate of the deceased. After the return of the appraisers, Aaron Scurry, as guardian and next friend of Jamie Scurry, filed a caveat objecting to the allowance of the year's support, on the grounds: (a) That caveator's ward was the only heir at law of the deceased; (b) that the petitioner was never the lawful wife of the deceased, and that the minor child referred to in the petition was not the lawful daughter of the deceased; (c) that the amount set apart was excessive. On the hearing of the caveat the ordinary sustained the objections and refused the allowance prayed for by the applicants. The case was appealed to the superior court. On the trial in the latter court Eugenia Scurry testified that she was married to James Scurry in Mitchell county, in November, 1903, and that she had one child, about five years old, that was the child of James Scurry and herself. On cross-examination the witness further testified that her name originally was Eugenia Vick; that she was married to John Walker on January 31, 1897; that John Walker was convicted of murder in Mitchell superior court at the October term, 1901, and was sent to the penitentiary for life; that she heard, about a year after he was sent to the penitentiary, that he was killed while in the penitentiary, this information having been given to her by George Davis prior to the time she married James Scurry; that she did not make any further inquiries as to whether or not it was true that John Walker was so killed; and that James Scurry had by a former wife one lawful son, Jamie, the caveator's ward. The applicant introduced the petition for a year's support, together with the orders of the ordinary and the return of the appraisers setting apart certain property as a year's support, and then rested. The caveator moved that the court direct a verdict in his favor. The motion was overruled, and he excepted. A witness for the caveator testified that he knew John Walker, who had been working on his farm for about a year or two before he was sent to the penitentiary, and that about February, 1902, witness went to John Walker's brother's house one night, and thought he saw John Walker there. He would not be positive that it was John Walker, but to the best of his knowledge it was John Walker. Caveator introduced a certified copy of the "conviction and sentence" of John Walker, showing his conviction in the superior court and sentence to the Georgia penitentiary, dated October 23, 1901; also a certified copy of the marriage license issued to John Walker and Eugenia Vick, with the certificate of the justice of the peace that he married them on January 31, 1897. While J. H. Baggs, a witness for the caveator, was on the stand, he was asked, on direct examination, "Did you have any information in the early part of the year 1902 to the effect that John Walker has escaped from the penitentiary?" counsel "expecting the answer that he had." Upon objection the court refused to allow the witness to answer. Upon the close of all of the evidence the judge, on motion, directed a verdict in favor of the applicant; and the caveator excepted to each of the rulings heretofore stated.

PLEDGES (§§ 21, 26*)—EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—NEW TRIAL (§ 162*)—RIGHTS OF PLEDGEE—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Where there is a valid pledge of property, the pledgee has a special property in the thing pledged for the purposes of the bailment. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2956, 2960.

(a) Where property is thus bona fide pledged to secure a loan of $125, and the pledgee afterwards returns it to the pledgor to sell for the former, taking from the pledgor at the time a receipt as follows: "Received of John B. Wheat [the pledgee] one (1) diamond ring in trust, which I agree to return on August 5, 1907, or pay one hundred twenty-five ($125.00) in cash"—and subsequently to the date named in the receipt the pledgor refuses, after demand, to return the property named in the receipt, or to pay the amount therein stated, the pledgee may maintain an action of trover for such property against the pledgor, who has not sold the property, and who has it in his possession at the time of such demand. See Henry v. State, 110 Ga. 750, 36 S. E. 55, 78 Am. St. Rep. 137; Citizens' Banking Co. v. Peacock, 103 Ga. 171, 29 S. E. 752; Denis on Contracts of Pledge, § 127 et seq.; Jones on Pledges and Collateral Securities (2d Ed.) §§ 40, 43, 44, 45; 31 Cyc. 818, 819.

(b) Upon the trial of such case it was not error to refuse to permit the defendant to prove by the plaintiff's counsel what the latter "learned from the sheriff about the sheriff taking bond, giving up the bond, and accepting the ring from defendant, and later at the sheriff's request taking back the ring and making a new bond." Such testimony was at least subject to the objection of being hearsay.

(c) The verdict being for $125 and interest, the court committed no error in refusing a new trial upon the plaintiff writing off the amount of interest; the evidence showing that the defendant admitted the article pledged and sued for to be of the value of the principal sum found.

ALBRITTON v. TYGART.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 273*) — COURTS (§ 117*)—PAROL EVIDENCE IMPEACHING RECORD—PREREQUISITES TO ADMISSION—SUFFICIENCY OF EXCEPTIONS.

On August 3, 1906, a creditor obtained an attachment against his debtor, returnable to the September term of court. At the trial, during an adjourned session of the September term, 1908, the defendant made an oral motion to dismiss the case, on the ground that the declaration in attachment was not filed at the first term, and moved to be allowed to introduce evidence to support the ground of the motion. The declaration on file purported to have been filed by the clerk at the first term. The plaintiff objected to the motion of the defendant, on the ground that the declaration showed upon its face and over the signature of the clerk that it had been filed at the first term, and before the defendant could attack the entry of the clerk it would be necessary to traverse it in writing and give notice thereof to the plaintiff or his counsel. The court overruled the objection, and, without requiring a written traverse of the clerk's entry, allowed the defendant to introduce evidence to impeach it. The plaintiff "excepted" and assigned the ruling "as error." After evidence was introduced by both parties, the judge granted an order dismissing the case. The plaintiff also excepted to this order, and assigned error on the ground that it was contrary to law and against the weight of the evidence. Held:

(a) The assignment of error upon the intermediate ruling, which allowed the introduction of evidence to impeach the entry of filing by the clerk, without a formal traverse, was sufficient, and it was not cause for dismissal of the bill of exceptions that the assignment of error upon the ruling ordering the dismissal of the case was not more specific. In this connection, see Lyndon v. Georgia Railway & Elec. Co., 129 Ga. 353, 58 S. E. 1047.

(b) As the declaration on the files of the court contained an entry of filing purporting to be signed by the clerk, the entry was presumably true. Before extraneous evidence could be received to impeach it, the record should show a formal traverse in writing denying its truth. Civ. Code 1895, § 4968; Maund v. Keating, 65 Ga. 396; Saffold v. Foster, 74 Ga. 751.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1620-1630; Dec. Dig. § 273.* Courts, Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

2. COURTS (§ 486*)—TRANSFER OF CAUSES—GROUNDS.

The motion to dismiss the bill of exceptions, based on the ground "that the Court of Appeals has no authority to transfer the case to the Supreme Court," cannot prevail. The record discloses that in certifying the bill of exceptions the judge directed the clerk to transmit it and the record in the case to the Court of Appeals. An order was passed by the Court of Appeals, reciting that the case was one of which that court did not have jurisdiction, and directed the clerk to dismiss it from the files and to transmit the bill of exceptions to the Supreme Court, together with a copy of the order, which was done. It appears from an examination of the record that the Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction of the case.

(a) We are requested to review and overrule the cases of Dawson v. State, 130 Ga. 127, 60 S. E. 315, and Mitchell v. Masury, 132 Ga. 360, 64 S. E. 275, in so far as it is held that the Supreme Court will consider a bill of exceptions received by it in the manner indicated in the preceding note; but we decline to do so. The cases above mentioned have since been followed in the case of Jones v. Williams, 132 Ga. 782, 64 S. E. 1081, and Bland v. Bird, 134 Ga. —, 67 S. E. 427.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 653*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SUBSTITUTING CORRECTED BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.

The motion, made in the Supreme Court, "to amend the record," was an effort to vary the original bill of exceptions by substituting a "corrected brief of evidence," certified by the judge and consented to by counsel, to be considered in lieu of that contained in the original bill of exceptions. Several months had elapsed after the filing and service of the original bill of exceptions. The motion must be overruled, and the case decided according to the recitals in the bill of exceptions. In this connection, see Jackson v. Georgia Southern & Florida Ry. Co., 132 Ga. 127, 63 S. E. 841.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 5*)—
SALE OF LAND BY ADMINISTRATOR—SUBSE-QUENT PROBATE OF WILL.

Where letters of administration have been granted by the court of ordinary having jurisdiction upon the estate of a decedent as in case of intestacy, and subsequently a will of the decedent is propounded and admitted to probate, this does not ipso facto render void a sale of land of the decedent by the administrator before the propounding of the will for probate, and under an order of the ordinary, duly granted, authorizing such sale. Patton's Appeal, 31 Pa. 465; Kittredge v. Folsom, 8 N. H. 98; Woerner's American Law of Administration (2d Ed.) §§ 266, 268.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 349*)—
SALE OF LAND—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Such an order of sale could not be collaterally attacked in an action of ejectment brought by the legatee under the will, after its probate, by showing that the administrator knew of the existence of the will when he applied for appointment, and fraudulently concealed it, and obtained the appointment on the ground that there was an intestacy, and that the purchaser at the sale also had notice of the existence of the will. Fraud in the procurement of the order for sale as administrator, and notice on the part of the purchaser, may be available in proper proceedings to set aside such order and sale; but they cannot avail to destroy the judgment of the ordinary and the sale thereunder, upon a mere collateral attack in an ejectment suit by persons claiming as legatees. Davie v. McDaniel, 47 Ga. 195; Bailey v. Ross, 68 Ga. 735; Medlin & Sundy v. Downing Lumber Co., 128 Ga. 115, 57 S. E. 232.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 349*)—
SALE OF LAND—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

The rule above announced is emphasized in the present case, where the ordinary allowed the will to be probated and appointed as executor the person named therein as such (who was the same person that had previously been appointed as administrator), but denied a separate application for an order to revoke the former grant of administration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 32*)—
APPOINTMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK ON DISCOVERING WILL.

The fact that the denial of the application for revocation referred to in the preceding head-note was carried to the superior court by appeal, and that the nominated executor and formerly appointed administrator died, would not alter the rule above laid down. A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, which is not invalid on its face, cannot be collaterally attacked merely because the person in whose favor it was rendered had died or been dismissed from the office of administrator, which he held at the time of its grant. Whitley Grocery Co. v. Jones, 128 Ga. 791, 58 S. E. 623.

MALLOY v. MALLOY et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. April 27, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 161*)—PROCEED-INGS FOR DISCHARGE—APPEAL—JUDGMENT.

An application was made in the court of ordinary for letters of dismission to be issued to a guardian. A caveat was filed thereto, which, among other things, alleged irregularity and fraudulent conduct on the part of the guardian, and also that his original appointment was void, and prayed for a decree declaring it to be so, and that all returns, orders, and decrees of the court of ordinary obtained for and against the estate, and all the actings and doings of the guardian, be canceled and declared void and of no effect, including an order for the sale of realty which had been granted, and under which a sale had taken place, and for such other orders and decrees as might seem meet and proper. The ordinary overruled the caveat, and an appeal to the superior court was entered. When the case came on for trial, counsel for the caveators introduced in evidence the original application and proceedings in the court of ordinary under which the guardian was appointed, and thereupon moved for a decree declaring that the appointment of the guardian was void. It does not appear that any evidence had been introduced by the applicant for discharge, or that the introduction of evidence had closed. The presiding judge granted a decree declaring the appointment of the guardian void, but making no reference to any disposition of the application for discharge. He declined to submit the appeal to the jury or to dismiss it on motion. Held, that such a decree so entered was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 161*)—JURISDICTION—APPEAL FROM COURT OF ORDINARY.

A court of ordinary is not vested with the powers of a court of equity as to cancellation or other like equitable remedies; nor, on appeal from a decision of the court of ordinary in regard to granting letters dismisory to a guardian, has the superior court, as an appellate court, broader powers in reference thereto than the court from which the appeal was taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

3. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 56*)—CERTIFICATION.

After certifying that the recitals in the bill of exceptions as to rulings of the court and how they were made are true and correct, the presiding judge is not authorized afterward to make a certificate conflicting with that which he has already signed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

4. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 56*)—SUPPLEMENTAL CERTIFICATE OF EVIDENCE—CERTIFICATION.

Under the act of 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 84), if there is no brief of evidence on file in the trial court, and the evidence is sought to be brought up in the bill of exceptions, and any material evidence is omitted therefrom, within 20 days from the service of the bill of exceptions the judge may, on proper motion, make a supplemental certificate of the evidence so omitted, and such supplemental certificate, with the evidence so certified, shall be sent to this court and form a part of the bill of exceptions. But the original bill of exceptions, with the evidence included in it, being certified by the judge, the additional evidence must likewise be certified and verified by his signature.

The law does not authorize the presiding judge, where there is no brief of evidence on file, to declare that some evidence has been omitted from the bill of exceptions, describe it in general terms, and leave the clerk to find and identify evidence as that introduced, and send it to this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 532*)—PROCEEDING FOR DISMISSION—APPEAL—RECORD.

Where application was made in the court of ordinary for letters of dismission to be granted to a guardian, and from his decision an appeal was taken to the superior court, this did not carry up the record of the original appointment of the guardian or make it a part of the record of the superior court. If, on the trial of the appeal of the case made by the petition for letters dismissory, the original record of the appointment in the ordinary's court was introduced in evidence, it did not ipso facto become a record of the superior court; nor did the clerk of that court have any authority to certify a copy of such record of the ordinary's court to this court, as a part of the record in the appeal case.

(a) If it is desired to have evidence introduced in the superior court, whether consisting of the record from another court or not, brought to this court, it should be done in the regular modes prescribed by law for bringing up evidence. It cannot be done by ordering the clerk of one court to certify a copy of a record belonging to another court, and to transmit it to this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 532.*]

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County. Frank Park, Judge.

Petition of R. T. Maloy, guardian of S. E. Maloy, for letters of dismission from the guardianship, E. N. Maloy and others filed a caveat to the discharge. The prayer of the caveat was denied, and, from a judgment of the Superior Court on appeal, petitioner brings error. Reversed.

R. T. Maloy filed in the court of ordinary a petition for letters of dismission from the guardianship of S. E. Maloy, alleging that he had fully executed his trust. Citation issued. Thereupon certain persons, who alleged that they were the heirs of S. E. Maloy, and that he died intestate, filed, apparently in the nature of a caveat or objection to the discharge of the guardian, a paper in the form of a petition. It alleged, in brief, as follows: Prior to the death of S. E. Maloy, upon the petition of R. T. Maloy, on November 1, 1904, the ordinary of Decatur county issued to eight named persons a commission, requiring them to inquire into the condition of S. E. Maloy; R. T. Maloy having made affidavit that he was an imbecile from old age and other causes, and incompetent to transact his business. On November 2d, five of the persons named in the commission and another returned a report to the effect that they had made such examination and found S. E. Maloy to be an imbecile from old age and other causes, and not of sound and disposing mind, and that he should have a guardian appointed. (The record shows that six of the eight commissioners made the return.) Thereupon the ordinary appointed R. T. Maloy guardian of the person and property of the alleged imbecile, and fixed his bond, and the appointee qualified. At the same term of court he made application for leave to sell real estate of the ward, which was granted at the next term. There is no record in the ordinary's office of an inventory or return of the estate of the ward, made by the guardian in 12 months after his appointment and qualification, as required by law. He took charge of certain real and personal property set out. By virtue of the order to sell the real estate, it was sold, and another person bid it in for R. T. Maloy, "guardian as aforesaid," for the sum of $1,500, when they both knew the amount was not the value of the real estate. The sale was made by collusion to defraud the estate and the ward by the collection of a certain note payable to the person who bid in the property. While the ward was an imbecile and unable to make a contract, another person persuaded and induced him to sign the note, which was also signed by such other person. The guardian, the payee, and the other maker colluded together, and the payee sued on the note and obtained judgment. The guardian filed no defense, though he knew that the note was executed when S. E. Maloy was unable to make any valid contract. The guardian has made his return to the ordinary, pretending that he paid the money derived from the sale of the land in satisfaction of the execution issued on the judgment, thus expending the entire estate except a very small amount, and applying for final discharge from the guardianship and administration of the ward. The commission appointing eight persons to act as commissioners to examine into the condition of an imbecile from old age and other causes was without authority of law and void. The act of six of such commissioners was unlawful, as no number less than twelve could act in such a case. The ordinary had no authority to appoint a guardian upon such a return. R. T. Maloy has taken charge of all the property stated in his petition, and has made no inventory and return as required by law. All of his actings and doings are void. The petitioners prayed that the appointment of the guardian be set aside and declared void; "that all his actings and doings be so decreed void;" that the sale and order authorizing the sale of the real estate be declared void and of no force and effect; "that all returns, orders, and decrees of the court of ordinary of Decatur county, obtained for and against the said estate of S. E. Maloy, and that all the actings and doings of R. T. Maloy, guardian, be and the same canceled and declared void and of no effect; and such other orders and decrees as may seem [meet] and proper, and will ever pray." Objections to the discharge were also separately filed, on the grounds that the applicant had not accounted by returns or otherwise for the disposition he had made of certain specified personal property, and that, although there was sufficient personal property and income from the estate to support the ward, he had made application to sell the real estate on the day of his appointment, and before making any inventory, so that the ordinary could pass upon the condition of the estate in allowing the guardian to sell a part of it; and that, "said order and application being fraudulently obtained, it should be set aside and declared void."

The ordinary passed an order denying the prayer of the caveat. The case was carried by appeal to the Superior Court. There the following judgment was entered: "This case coming on for trial, the same being an appeal from the ordinary's court, and after impaneling a jury in said cause, and by motion of counsel for the caveators, as set out in the caveat, and in the original appointment of said guardian, R. T. Maloy, the said appointment of said guardian is hereby decreed void and of no effect." Maloy, guardian, excepted. The bill of exceptions recited that: "Before striking a jury to try said appeal, after the call of said case for trial, the attorneys for the appellants moved the court orally for an order or decree voiding the original appointment of R. T. Maloy as guardian of S. E. Maloy, as defective on the grounds set out in the caveat to the dismissal, which motion, after argument had, and after the attorneys for the appellants had exhibited to the court the original proceedings in the ordinary's court under which the said R. T. Maloy was appointed guardian, and which was resisted by the attorney for the appellee, the court granted and entered upon the caveat his judgment decreeing said appointment as guardian void and of no effect, and then and there refused to submit said appeal to trial by jury or dismiss same on motion, when requested by appellee's attorney." Exception was taken "to said judgment of the court and decree so rendered, and to the refusal of the court to permit said appeal to be tried by jury, or dismiss same on motion."

The bill of exceptions was certified on May 31, 1909. On June 15th counsel for the defendants in error apparently sought to have brought to this court, under the act of 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 84), the record of the appointment of a guardian in the court of ordinary, as evidence inadvertently omitted from the bill of exceptions. In the petition filed for that purpose, there were various allegations in regard to the history of the case, some of them in conflict with the recitals in the bill of exceptions previously certified. Among other things, it was stated that: "After a jury was stricken and impaneled to try said cause, these defendants, being the appellants from the ordinary's court, introduced in evidence, without objection, the following evidence: [Reciting the different parts of the record of the appointment of the guardian in the court of ordinary.] After the introduction of these original records of the ordinary's court and upon this evidence, the applicants [appellants?] made a motion to set aside the appointment of R. T. Maloy as guardian, upon the ground that the appointment was void." And the motion was sustained after argument. "Immediately after the court had rendered its judgment, the attorney for the guardian asked leave of the court to make a motion to dismiss the caveat and objections to the discharge of the administrator, to which motion the court replied that he was too late, that his judgment was made, but that the court would hear him and overrule his motion, which the court did." This petition did not set forth in full or in substance the evidence alleged to have been introduced, or have it attached and identified by the judge, but simply referred to it in general terms and asked to have it sent up. On this an order was passed which contained the following: "After examining the foregoing amended bill of exceptions and refreshing my memory as to what was tried and how tried, I hereby certify that this amended bill of exceptions is true, and in that part of the original bill that conflicts with this amended bill of exceptions, the original bill having been certified to inadvertently, I hereby certify that this amended bill is true against the original bill of exceptions, and specifies all the evidence and specifies all the record material to a clear understanding of errors complained of in said cause." The clerk was ordered to make out a complete copy of such parts of the record in said case as are specified "in this bill of exceptions," and certify them and cause them to be transmitted to the Supreme Court. The clerk thereupon transmitted to this court what purports to be a copy of the record of the court of ordinary in reference to the appointment of the guardian, and certifies it as being the parts of the record in the present case specified in "the bill of exceptions," and required by the order of the presiding judge to be sent to the Supreme Court.

R. G. Hartsfield, for plaintiff in error. Ledford & Terrell, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). This case began in the court of ordinary with a petition for letters of dismission to be issued to a guardian. It terminated in the superior court with a decree that the appointment of the guardian was void and of no effect. This decree was rendered by the judge, on motion of counsel for the caveators, after the introduction in evidence by them of the record of the application and proceedings in the court of ordinary leading up to the appointment. The application and caveat involved several questions of fact; but the judge seems to have been of the opinion that, after this evidence was introduced, it was needless to go further. What became of the petition for letters of dismission, which brought the case into court, and which with the caveat was appealed to the superior court, does not distinctly appear. But we presume that the application to be dismissed from the guardianship was treated as absorbed into a decree that the appointment was void.

If the paper filed in the court of ordinary in opposition to the application for the dismissal of the guardian is to be considered as a caveat or legal objection to the discharge, as seems to have been done by the ordinary, it goes far beyond the range of opposition to the grant of the applicant's petition for dismission. If it is to be treated as also a petition seeking equitable relief, the court of ordinary had no jurisdiction to grant such relief, and the superior court, on appeal from the court of ordinary, had none. Hufbauer v. Jackson, 91 Ga. 298 (2), 18 S. E. 159; Mulherin v. Kennedy, 120 Ga. 1080 (6), 48 S. E. 437. In any event, the judge of the superior court could not, as soon as some evidence was introduced by caveators, terminate the case by a decree, rendered on motion, not disposing directly of the application for dismission of the guardian, by granting or denying it, or dismissing it, but simply adjudging that the appointment of the guardian was void. It is not clear exactly what was the procedure adopted. In the bill of exceptions it is recited that the case came on for trial in the superior court, and that "before striking the jury to try said appeal after the call of said case" the record of the appointment of the guardian was exhibited to the judge by counsel for the caveators, and that he then granted the decree on motion. The recitals in the judgment do not seem to be in complete accord with this. Some two weeks after this was certified, counsel for defendants in error sought to bring up this evidence, as having been inadvertently omitted, under the act of 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 84), although the terms of the act were neither substantially nor literally followed, and the clerk was ordered to send up as record in the present case a copy of a record belonging in the court of ordinary, which had merely been introduced in evidence. In the petition which was presented to the judge for this purpose, and which he certified, were contained statements conflicting with those already certified in the bill of exceptions. The judge recognized this, and stated that, in the part of the original bill of exceptions which conflicted with this amended bill of exceptions, the latter was true "against the original bill of exceptions," which had been certified inadvertently.

Section 5528 of the Civil Code of 1895 provides that, when a bill of exceptions is presented, "the judge to whom such bill of exceptions is tendered shall, if needful, change the same so as to conform to the truth and make it contain all the evidence, and refer to all of the record, necessary to a clear understanding of the errors complained of." In section 5536 provision is made by which the defendant in error either in the main bill or cross-bill of exceptions can have additional portions of the record of the trial court transmitted to this court, and by which the court may itself direct additional parts of the record to be transmitted, if in their opinion it is necessary to have this done in order to fully and fairly adjudicate the questions at issue and the alleged errors. By section 5545 it is prescribed that, if the bill of exceptions is not true or does not contain all the necessary facts, the judge may return it to the party tendering it or his attorneys for correction, and, "if the judge sees proper, he may order notice to the opposite party of the fact and time of tendering the exceptions, and may hear evidence as to the truth thereof." Thus provision is made for ascertaining the correctness of a bill of exceptions before signing it. But after the bill of exceptions has been duly certified to be true, there is no provision of law for the presiding judge to certify that it is not correct in part or in whole. Woolf v. State, 104 Ga. 536, 30 S. E. 796. This is not a cross-bill of exceptions, complaining of other rulings, but is an effort by a certificate to change recitals in a duly certified bill of exceptions. In Dyson v. Sou. Ry. Co., 113 Ga. 327, 38 S. E. 749, it was held that: "A bill of exceptions duly and regularly certified according to law will not be vitiated by an additional certificate following the one required by statute. In such a case the additional certificate may be ignored and treated as harmless surplusage." By the act of 1905 the judge was authorized to certify and have sent to this court additional evidence inadvertently omitted from the original bill of exceptions. But it did not authorize a certificate as to the rulings made by him, or how they were made, conflicting with what had already been certified.

It will readily be seen that if a party dissatisfied with a ruling of a trial court should present and have duly certified his bill of exceptions, stating the ruling made, the time when it was made, and the objections or questions which were raised and passed upon, and subsequently, on ex parte application of the other side, the judge should sign a certificate conflicting with the former one in whole or in part, the plaintiff in error might have his status materially altered without his knowledge, and when it was too late for him to obtain a further statement; and a reviewing court might be left in much uncertainty as to what was the question raised in the trial court, how it was made, and what was the exact ruling on it. We have thought it proper to say this much in regard to the practice in tendering and signing bills of exceptions. But in the case before us our ruling would be in effect the same, whether the recitals in the original bill of exceptions or those in the petition presented by counsel for defendants in error should be taken as correct.

Evidence may be brought to this court in either of two ways: (1) Where a brief of evidence has been filed. In order to file such a brief it must first have been approved by the judge. When in due time so approved and filed, it becomes a part of the record, and on exception it can be brought to this court as any other part of the record is brought up. (2) Where no brief of evidence has been approved and filed, and the evidence is not a part of the record of the case, it must be brought up in the bill of exceptions, under the certificate of the judge, or be exhibited thereto, duly identified by the signature of the judge. If the bill of exceptions omits material evidence, the act of 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 84) provides for a supplementary certificate by the judge certifying to the omitted evidence, which evidence and certificate identifying it are required to be sent up by the clerk, and become an amendment to the bill of exceptions. But the law contemplates that evidence must be identified and approved by the judge before it can come to this court; in the one instance by approving the brief, in the other by certifying the bill of exceptions, and identifying exhibits, if there be any, and, in case of a supplemental certificate under the act of 1905, by the judge's certifying to the additional evidence.

In no event does the law provide for the clerk to gather up evidence not contained in the brief of evidence or the bill of exceptions or supplemental petition, and not a part of the record in the case tried, and send it to this court. He has no right to substitute his certificate for that of the judge. Nor has the judge authority to direct him to do so. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5528, 5529, 5537; Acts 1905, p. 84. The introducing in evidence of pleadings or exhibits to pleadings in the case on trial, which are parts of the record, or the bringing up of affidavits used in interlocutory hearings, is not now before us. In the present case, it was sought to have the clerk of the superior court certify and send to this court a transcript of an original record in the court of ordinary, which had been introduced in evidence or exhibited to the presiding judge of the superior court. It was no part of the record in the superior court, and had not become a brief of the evidence, approved by the judge and filed there. The petition to have it sent to this court recites that the appellants introduced in evidence "the original application to appoint a guardian," and other original papers constituting the record of the proceedings for the appointment of the guardian in the court of ordinary. The record of the appointment of the guardian was no part of the record of his application for dismissal, and could not have been lawfully transmitted to the superior court on the appeal in the latter proceeding. The original record of the appointment belonged in the court of ordinary, and not in the superior court. The clerk of the superior court is not authorized to certify to this court a record from the court of ordinary. A clerk of one court cannot certify a record of another court, nor can the judge authorize him to do so merely because the record was used as evidence, but never became a record in the court where the trial was had. The record of the court of ordinary in the proceeding to appoint a guardian is not properly before this court, and cannot be considered by us.

Possibly, if from the whole evidence it appears, without conflict, that the appointment of the guardian was null and void, and there be no estoppel preventing the caveators from setting up that contention, the judge might dismiss the petition to discharge the guardian, on the ground that, if in law there was no guardian, a dismissal of a person as such is not proper; or perhaps a verdict denying the prayers for letters of dismissal might be directed; or the judge might be correctly charged on the subject, as might appear proper under the evidence. If anything is sought which requires a decree of cancellation or setting aside of something which is voidable but not void, this must be accomplished by proceeding in equity, or, in proper cases, by a regular motion to vacate in the court having jurisdiction. On these possibilities we make no decision, as they do not appear to have been clearly passed on in the trial court.

The applicant for letters of dismissal brought the case into court, and occupied the position of a plaintiff. It does not appear that he had introduced his evidence, or that counsel on either side had announced their evidence closed; so that the case was not ripe for final disposition by motion to dismiss, direction of a verdict, or submission of the case to a jury. But at some early stage of the trial the caveators, who occupied the position of defendants in the application for letters dismissory, introduced some evidence and moved for a decree declaring that the original appointment was void, and this was granted. Error was also assigned on the ground that the court refused to submit the appeal to trial by jury, "or dismiss same on motion when requested by appellee's attorney."

We think this case should be returned for a trial on the petition for discharge and any legitimate objections to its grant, that the judgment should dispose of the case arising under such application, and that the entering of the decree by the judge on motion, upon the introduction of some evidence by the caveators, was erroneous.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

FARMERS' BANK OF NASHVILLE v. JOHNSON, KING & CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 138*)—PAYMENT OF CHECKS—DIRECTION ON CHECK.

Where a check was drawn on a bank located in another town than that in which the drawer resided, and immediately following the direction to the drawee bank, which was in the lower left-hand corner of the check, there were stamped, at the time when the check was drawn, the words, "Payable through [a named bank in another city of the same state] at current rate," this was a material part of the direction; and the drawee bank was not required to pay the check when not presented through the bank thus named, but directly by a third bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 424*)—PROTEST ON CHECK—WHEN AUTHORIZED.

Under such circumstances, if the third bank, which held the check, presented it to the drawee bank, and the latter indorsed on it the statement that it would be paid when presented through the named bank, this did not authorize the bank holding the check to have it protested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 424.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 424*)—WRONGFUL PROTEST—LIABILITY.

For the holder of a check to unlawfully cause a protest of it to be made, and notice to be given to the drawer and indorsers, without proper presentation for payment, according to its terms, furnishes a cause of action to the drawer.

4. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 15*)—"CHECK."

A "check" is defined as a draft or order upon a bank or banking house, purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money to a certain person therein named, or to him or his order, or to bearer, and payable instantly on demand.

5. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 138*)—PAYMENT OF CHECKS—"PAYABLE."

The word "payable" is defined as that which may, can, or should be paid; suitable to be paid; that may be discharged or settled by delivery of value; matured; now due. A direction in a check to the drawee bank that it is payable through another named bank means that it is to be paid in that way.

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; W. V. Whipple, Judge.

Action by Johnson, King & Co. against the Farmers' Bank of Nashville. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Johnson, King & Co., a corporation doing business in Macon, brought suit for damages against the Farmers' Bank of Nashville, Ga. The petition as amended alleged as follows: On December 30, 1905, the plaintiff issued a check of which the following is a copy: "Johnson, King & Company, $62.00. No. 1044. Macon, Ga., Dec. 30th, 1905. Pay to the order of Hawley & Hoops, sixty-two and 47/100 $62.47 dollars. Johnson, King & Co., by Jno. C. Holmes. V. P. & Gen. Mgr. To Bank of Nashville, Nashville, Ga. Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate." On the same date the plaintiff issued three other checks drawn on the Bank of Nashville, similar in form to the one above, and differing only as to amount and the name of the payee. The words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate," were stamped on each check. The checks were presented to the Bank of Nashville, at Nashville, Ga., by the Farmers' Bank of Nashville, Ga.; three of them being presented on January 8, 1906, and one on January 8, 1906. Upon presentation the Bank of Nashville entered on the back of the checks, "Will pay when presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Georgia." Thereupon the Farmers' Bank of Nashville caused the checks to be protested, each protest bearing the same date as the presentation for payment; and notice of dishonor was sent to certain indorsers and to the drawer. The Bank of Nashville never refused to pay the checks, but, through its officers, stated to the Farmers' Bank of Nashville that it objected to the manner in which the checks were presented, it being different from the terms expressed on their face, and that they would be honored when presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta. At the time when the checks were drawn, and when presented to the Bank of Nashville by the Farmers' Bank of Nashville, the plaintiffs had a sufficient amount of money on deposit in the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, subject to check for their payment. The plaintiff had au arrangement with the Bank of Nashville by which all checks drawn on that bank would be paid if presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta. The Farmers' Bank of Nashville willfully disregarded the terms of the checks, which were that they were "payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate," and, for the purpose of casting suspicion upon the credit of the plaintiff before the commercial world, protested the checks and thereby damaged the plaintiff. The protest was made for the purpose of causing the plaintiff to become offended with the Bank of Nashville, and of forcing it to become a depositor with the Farmers' Bank of Nashville and its associates. The defendant demurred to the petition. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Bule & Knight, Hendricks & Christian, and E. P. S. Denmark, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Dodson and W. H. Griffin, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). A story is told of a distinguished writer on the subject of negotiable instruments, to the effect that, when he was asked what first suggested to him the idea of preparing such a work, he answered that he became interested in the question as to whether a demand was necessary in order to enforce by suit a promissory note or acceptance payable by its terms at a specified place, and that the extensive inquiry on this subject into which he was led suggested to him the utility of a new work on negotiable instruments. The story further proceeds that, when the inquirer asked him whether such a demand was necessary, he humorously replied that he had forgotten. Whether this is without foundation or not, it serves to indicate the wealth of inharmonious learning which has been lavished upon a question which, at first sight, would appear to be quite narrow. Much of the conflict in authorities has arisen over the question whether, in an action against the maker of a promissory note or the acceptor of a bill of exchange payable at a particular place, it was necessary to aver and prove a demand at such place. In England the authorities were divided on the subject of such acceptances. The Court of King's Bench held that where there was an acceptance payable at a specified place it was not necessary to allege or prove demand at that place, in a suit against the acceptor. The Court of Common Pleas, on the other hand, held that this made a qualified acceptance, and that presentment at the place stipulated must be averred and proved. In 1820 the case of Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & Bing. 165 (6 E. C. L. 83), came before the House of Lords. It was there decided that, where the acceptance named a place of payment, demand at such place must be averred and proved. In the following year an act of Parliament was passed on the subject, declaring that an acceptance payable at a banker's or other specified place, without more, should be deemed a general acceptance; but if it were expressed to be payable at a banker's or other place "only, and not otherwise or elsewhere," it would be a qualified acceptance. This statute did not deal with promissory notes, and some of the decisions make a distinction as to them, where the place of payment was named in the body of them. In this country a contrary doctrine to that declared by the House of Lords was laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet. 136, 10 L. Ed. 95. It was held in that case that in actions on promissory notes against the maker, or on bills of exchange against the acceptor, where the note or bill is made payable at a specified time and place, it is not necessary to aver in the declaration, or prove on the trial, that a demand for payment was made, in order to sustain the action; but, if the maker or acceptor was at the place at the time designated and was ready and offered to pay the money, it is matter of defense, to be pleaded and proved on his part. This decision has been generally followed in America, and the ruling has been adopted in this state. Dougherty v. Western Bank of Georgia, 13 Ga. 287. It was said by this court that the defendant may plead readiness to pay at the place stipulated, or damages sustained by him in consequence of the neglect or omission to make the demand, and, upon proof of his plea, the defendant shall be exonerated to the extent of the damages which he has sustained. It will be observed that the decisions above mentioned have reference to a case in which the acceptor of a bill of exchange or a maker of a promissory note is sued, not to questions involving the liability or release of indorsers or drawers of accepted bills.

In many respects a check is like an inland bill of exchange; but there are some differences. A check has been defined to be "a draft or order upon a bank or banking house, purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money to a certain person therein named, or to him or his order, or to bearer, and payable instantly on demand." 2 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 1566. A check does not have to be accepted upon presentment, but paid, if good and if properly presented. One of the differences between a common check and an ordinary inland bill after its acceptance is in relation to the drawer. In the former, the drawer is the principal debtor, and the check purports to be made upon a fund deposited; in the latter, the acceptor is the principal debtor. The negligence of the holder of a check in not making due presentment, or as to giving the drawer notice of dishonor, does not absolutely discharge him from liability except to the extent to which he may have suffered loss or injury by reason of such negligence.

These principles have been stated because citations have been made of cases which arose under them. They do not, however, fully cover the present case. Here the drawee of a check was a bank in a different place from where the check was drawn and the drawer resided. The direction to the drawee bank was at the left-hand lower corner of the check, and immediately under it were the words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate." The check was not forwarded through the Valdosta Bank, but came into the possession of a bank in Nashville, Ga., the place where the drawee bank was located, and was thus presented to it. Whether the check was deposited with such demanding bank, or sent to it for collection, or how it became the holder, is not stated. On presentment, the drawee bank indorsed on the back of the check these words, "Will pay when presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta." Thereupon the check was protested for non-payment, and suit to recover damages was brought by the drawer against the collecting bank, which caused the protest to be made, on the ground that such protest was wrongful and was maliciously made.

Two questions are involved: (1) Whether the words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta," etc., formed a part of the check, which the drawee bank was bound to regard, or which it had the right to disregard. (2) Whether this direction required payment through the Valdosta Bank, or whether it was merely permissive, so that payment could be demanded through that channel or directly from the drawee bank of Nashville. If the presentment to the drawee was required to be made through the Valdosta Bank, then the drawee had the right to decline payment except upon presentment in that manner; and if the bank holding the paper refused to recognize such reason for nonpayment on presentment by it, and caused the check to be protested, and notice to be given, this was unwarranted.

It was contended that the words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta," etc., followed the signature, and formed no part of the check, but amounted merely to a memorandum, which the holder of the check did not have to regard. In England there is a well-known usage, which has now been made the subject of an act of Parliament, for the drawer or holder of a check to "cross" it with the name of a banker.

In 2 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 1585a, it is stated that the effect of this was, "before the statute which now exists, a direction of the drawee bank to pay the check to no one but a banker; or rather, according to the cases, with only a caution or warning to the drawees that care must be used, in paying it to any one else."

In 1 Morse on Banks & Banking (4th Ed.)

§ 245, it is said: "In this country the system of 'crossed checks,' strictly so called, is unknown. But of late the germ of a similar custom has begun to manifest itself. Occasionally checks have stamped or written upon them some form of words which is intended to secure their payment exclusively through the clearing house. No especial form has as yet been generally accepted, and the legal effect of none of those in use has ever been passed upon. It is safe to say, however, that there is no question but that the drawer could embody in his order a direction to his bank to pay only upon presentation of the instrument in the usual course through the clearing house, and that such a direction would be as valid and as binding upon the bank as a direction to pay only to the order of a particular person. If the check be payable to the order of A. B., it is probable that the privilege of including such instructions in his order, when indorsing over, might be accorded to him, certainly indorsements in this form are very frequent, and no bank would be safe in disregarding them. Supposing the direction to be properly given, the collecting and the paying bank must both respect it, and the English cases above mentioned would be precedent directly in force. It would amount to an express designation by the drawer, or the payee, of the manner alone in which payment is authorized to be demanded or made."

A check being in the nature of an order on a bank or banker to pay a certain sum purporting to be on deposit, there would seem to be no reason why the drawer could not direct the bank to pay only when presented through a specified channel or by a particular person or bank. The drawer is not compelled to make the check payable to bearer or order. Likewise, no sound reason is perceived why, in giving direction to the bank of deposit, he cannot make an addition to the mere order for payment. If the person to whom the check is delivered is not willing to accept it with such direction, he can reject it; but if he accepts it payable only through a particular bank, or through a particular banker, he cannot insist that the bank on which it is drawn must disregard this direction given to it by its depositor on the face of the paper. No ground has been suggested why such a direction by one to his banker, in ordering the latter to pay money, is illegal or unreasonable; the banks being in the same state and not far distant from each other. The case in hand does not present the question of whether the drawer of the check has been wholly or partially discharged by negligence or delay in presentation, but whether, in giving direction to his banker to pay the check, he can lawfully direct payment to be made through a certain medium, and whether the bank, when so instructed, is bound to disregard such direction at the demand of another collecting bank.

In Nazro & Green v. Fuller, 24 Wend. 374, it was held that an alteration of a promissory note by the payee thereof, so as to make it purport to be payable at a particular place, vitiates it in the hands of an indorsee, so that he cannot recover upon it in an action against the maker; and that, if it be doubtful whether it be an alteration of a note or a mere memorandum by the payee indicating where demand for payment should be made to charge him as indorser, the question, it seems, should be submitted to a jury.

In Warrington v. Early, 2 Ellis & Black. (75 E. C. L. 763), a promissory note was made payable six months after date, "with lawful interest." After it had been signed, without the assent of the maker, but with the assent of the holder, there was added, in the corner of the note, "Interest at six per cent. per annum." It was held that this addition materially altered the contract, and that the holder could not recover on the note against the maker.

As to alterations in written contracts in this state, see Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3702, 3703; Gwin v. Anderson, 91 Ga. 827, 18 S. E. 43; Hotel Lanier v. Johnson, 103 Ga. 604, 30 S. E. 558; Pritchard v. Smith, Stewart & Co., 77 Ga. 463. See, also, Woodworth v. Bank of America, 19 Johns. 391, 10 Am. Dec. 239; Polo Mfg. Co. v. Parr, 8 Neb. 379, 1 N. W. 312, 30 Am. Rep. 830; Farmers' Bank of Kentucky v. Ewing, 78 Ky. 264, 39 Am. Rep. 231; Wait v. Pomeroy, 20 Mich. 425, 4 Am. Rep. 395; 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) §§ 149, 150, pp. 173, 174, and citations; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 137 (11), 140; McCalla v. McCalla, 48 Ga. 502; Mayor and Council of Griffin v. City Bank of Macon, 58 Ga. 534.

It is commonly stated that the contract must be collected "from the four corners" of the document, and no part of what appears there is to be excluded; and Mr. Daniel, in his work on Negotiable Instruments, has somewhat broadly declared that, as indorsements are made on the back of a negotiable instrument, it might be said that the purport of the instrument is to be collected from "the eight corners." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. (5th Ed.) § 151, p. 175. A distinction is sometimes made between an entry upon a note or check at the time when it is made, and which is intended as a part of it, and a mere memorandum made by some person for convenience, and forming no part of the instrument. In the case before us the direction immediately follows the name of the drawee bank. From the allegations of the petition it appears to have been placed there when the check was drawn, as a part of the direction to the bank. It was a material part of such direction, and the drawee bank had the right to decline to disregard it.

It was argued that the statement that the check was "payable" through the Valdosta Bank did not indicate the exclusive method of collection, but gave to the holder an option to present it through that medium or through any other medium to the Nashville Bank. If a negotiable instrument is payable at one of two banks, it may be presented for payment to either. The word "payable" has been defined as follows: "That may, can, or should be paid; suitable to be paid; that may be discharged or settled by delivery of value; matured; now due." Webster's Dictionary. As commonly employed in commercial paper or contracts, in stating the time or manner of payment, the word "payable" does not give to the debtor an option or privilege of paying at such time or in such manner, but signifies that payment is to be thus made. If it should be stated in a note or bill of exchange that the amount mentioned was payable in 30 days, clearly the expression would mean that such amount was to be paid at that time, not merely that the debtor might then pay it. So if an obligation should be declared to be payable in gold coin of a certain fineness, it would mean that it was to be thus paid. And numerous illustrations might be given. A direction in a check to the drawee bank that it is "payable" through another named bank means that it is to be paid in that way. City of Alma v. Guaranty Savings Bank, 60 Fed. 203, 80 C. C. A. 564; Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191, 194; Johnson v. Dooley, 65 Ark. 71, 44 S. W. 1032, 40 L. R. A. 74; Easton v. Hyde, 13 Minn. 90 (Gil. 83); Webster v. Cook, 38 Cal. 423. Taken in connection with the direction from the drawer of the check to the drawee bank to pay a certain sum, the addition meant that the sum was to be paid through the Valdosta Bank.

It follows, from what has been said, that, under the allegations of the petition, the drawee bank had a right to decline to pay the checks until presented through the Valdosta Bank, and that, upon its entering upon the back of the check that it would pay when so presented, the collecting bank was not authorized to cause the check to be protested and notice to be given. It was therefore not erroneous for the trial judge to overrule the demurrer to the petition. We have not discussed the motive which it was alleged actuated the collecting bank in causing the protest to be made, as without it we hold that the petition set out a cause of action. Atlanta National Bank v. Davis, 96 Ga. 334, 23 S. E. 190, 51 Am. St. Rep. 139; Hilton v. Jesup Banking Co., 128 Ga. 30, 57 S. E. 78, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 224; State Mutual Life Association v. Baldwin, 116 Ga. 855, 43 S. McCULLOUGH BROS. et al. v. SAWTELL.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 271*)—SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

Where two fruit dealers jointly contract with the owner of a cold storage plant for the storage of apples, in a suit by the former against the latter to recover damages occasioned to the apples by causing a lower temperature than provided in the contract, the testimony of an employé of the defendant that the defendant, in the presence of one of the plaintiffs, instructed him to obey and carry out the orders of this particular plaintiff as to the regulation of the temperature, is not open to objection that such amounted to a self-serving declaration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1087; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 249*)—ADMISSIONS—JOINT CONTRACTORS.

Where two persons jointly sue to recover damages for an alleged breach of a contract between them and the defendant, the admissions of one of the plaintiffs affecting the terms of the contract are admissible against all.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 965; Dec. Dig. § 249.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 210*)—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—CREDIBILITY OF IMPEACHED WITNESS.

Where a witness is sought to be impeached by proof of contradictory statements alleged to have been previously made by the witness, which are relevant to his testimony and the case, it is not error to charge, in connection with the law relating to the impeachment of witnesses, the following: "If a witness swears willfully and knowingly falsely, his testimony ought to be disregarded entirely, unless corroborated by circumstances or other unimpeached evidence. It is for the jury to determine the credit to be given his testimony when impeached by contradictory statements out of court."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 490-494; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—IRRELEVANT CHARGE.

An irrelevant instruction will not vitiate a verdict where it is reasonably clear that such instruction was not harmful to the losing party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by McCullough Bros. and others against T. R. Sawtell. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Westmoreland Bros., for plaintiffs in error. E. V. Carter, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. McCullough Bros. and Hancock & Kolb sued T. R. Sawtell for damages for the breach of an alleged contract to furnish the plaintiffs with cold storage for a large quantity of apples which the plaintiffs owned in common. According to the petition, the plaintiffs contended that the defendant agreed to keep the temperature of the cold storage room not less than 30 nor more than 34 degrees Fahrenheit, and furnish the labor and material and all things necessary for the cold storage at his expense. The defendant in his answer admitted that he contracted with the plaintiffs to store their apples, but denied the terms of the contract as alleged in the petition. He averred that under the agreement the defendant was to have no control over the temperature of the room; but that the plaintiffs should inspect same daily, and that the defendant's servants were under the direction and control of the plaintiffs at all times for the purpose of regulating the temperature of the room. The apples stored by the plaintiffs were frozen because of the temperature's falling below 30 degrees, and damages were claimed for the loss thus occasioned. The evidence was voluminous on both sides, and sharply conflicting. The trial eventuated in a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiffs filed their motion for a new trial, complaining of the ruling of the court as to the admission of certain evidence and of certain instructions to the jury, the motion was denied, and the plaintiffs excepted.

1, 2. The court allowed one employé of the defendant to testify: "I heard a conversation between Mr. Sawtell and Mr. Hancock with reference to the temperature of the room after some of the apples had been put in the storage room in the latter part of September, 1905. Mr. Sawtell told Mr. Hancock that he would not have anything to do with it; that I would act under Mr. Hancock's directions, and I would carry it as near as I could. If he said carry it down, I was to carry it down, and if he wanted it up, I was to let it go up. That conversation occurred right in the building within 15 or 20 feet of the storage room. Mr. Sawtell said that to Mr. Hancock. Mr. Hancock said then, 'That is all right, and me and Roberts [the witness] can make that all right. We can get along all right.'" Another employé was permitted to testify: "I never received any instructions from Mr. Sawtell in reference to those apples, only to obey and carry out Mr. Hancock's orders about the temperature. Yes, sir; Mr. Hancock was present when I was so instructed. Yes, sir; Mr. Sawtell gave me those instructions in the presence of Mr. Hancock, in reference to those apples and the room in which they were stored." Another employé testified: "The only thing I know about the storing of apples at that plant by McCullough Bros. and Hancock & Kolb during the winter of 1905 and 1906, they had an amount of apples stored there, and Mr. Hancock, that gentleman there [indicating plaintiff], gave me instructions about the temperature. He told me a few times how he wanted the temperature carried, what degree to carry the temperature in the room. Yes, sir; he did request me to run it to a certain degree. He told me on one occasion, I think. He came out there on one Sunday. I was down in the engine room working on the dynamo, and he came down there, and he said he had been down in the room, and he told me what the temperature was. If I am not mistaken, he said it was 32 or about 33, and I said something about it, that I probably thought that was about low enough for fruit; and he said no, it wouldn't hurt at that, but it wouldn't hurt to run it to 26 or 27, but not to keep it there too long; he said for a short period. Yes, sir; Mr. Hancock said that to me. That was some time along about the 15th or 18th of December, 1905. Yes, sir; that was while those apples were stored in that plant." It is contended that this evidence was inadmissible, because the statement of the defendant in the presence of one of the plaintiffs as to the regulation of the temperature is but a self-serving declaration made subsequently to the contract; that the various occurrences do not amount to admissions, and, even if they do amount to admissions, they only bound Mr. Hancock, the plaintiff alleged to have made the admissions; and that the court erred in not restricting the scope of this evidence, if admissible, as affecting the party who made them. None of these objections are meritorious. "Where the parties to a suit, either as plaintiffs or defendants, set up in a joint suit a joint claim, resting on one and the same contract, with an issue applying to them jointly, the declarations or admissions of one are evidence against his coplaintiff or codefendant." Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 545.

3. Testimony was offered that a witness had previously made contradictory statements relevant to his testimony and to the case on trial. The court instructed the jury as to the credibility and impeachment of witnesses, and, among other things, said: "A witness may be impeached by contradictory statements previously made by him as to matters relevant to his testimony in the case. Before contradictory statements can be proven against him, his mind shall be called with as much certainty as possible to the time, place, and circumstances attending the former statement. When a witness is successfully contradicted as to a material matter, his credit as to other matters is for the jury; but, if a witness swear willfully and knowingly falsely, his testimony should be disregarded entirely unless corroborated by circumstances or other unimpeached evidence. It is for the jury to determine the credit to be given his testimony when impeached by contradictory statements out of court." The criticism upon this charge is that there was no evidence that any witness had sworn willfully and knowingly falsely. The Code provides how a witness may be impeached, and one of the modes of impeachment is by proof of contradictory statements previously made by the witness as to matters relevant to his testimony and to the case. The Code further provides that: "When a witness is successfully contradicted as to a material matter, his credit as to other matters is for the jury. But if a witness swear willfully and knowingly falsely, his testimony ought to be disregarded entirely unless corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence. It is for the jury to determine the credit to be given his testimony when impeached for general bad character or for contradictory statements out of court." Civ. Code 1895, § 5295. This section of the Code underwent analysis in Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 19, 29 S. E. 309, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277, and it is unnecessary to reproduce or paraphrase that analysis. The effect of the charge was an instruction that, if the witness had been successfully impeached, his testimony should be disregarded by the jury. Successful impeachment of a witness may afford an inference that the impeached witness may have knowingly delivered false testimony; and, according to the reasoning in the Powell Case, the charge complained of was not erroneous for the reason assigned.

4. The court charged: "If the defendant contracted to furnish space and cold storage for the apples of the plaintiffs, and under that contract made no restriction of his liability, then he was bound to exercise all ordinary care in furnishing a reasonably good storage room, and furnishing the proper refrigeration. The assignment of error is that the suit is upon a contract, and that the charge is irrelevant to any issue made by the pleadings. We agree that the charge complained of was irrelevant. Both parties insisted that there was a parol contract, but they differed as to the essential terms of the contract. The defendant's liability depended upon the plaintiffs establishing by evidence the contract alleged in their pleadings; he was sued upon an express contract, and was not sought to be held bound either upon an implied contract or in tort. However, from a careful reading of the voluminous evidence, the jury could not have been misled by this inapplicable instruction. The evidence submitted by the plaintiffs tended to show the existence of the contract pleaded in their petition, while that of the defendant tended to establish the contract averred in his plea. The issues were so sharply drawn that it is clear that the jury were not misled by the instruction complained of.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

ATHENS MUT. INS. CO. v. R. H. LEDFORD & SON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. INSURANCE (§ 378)—KNOWLEDGE OF AGENT IMPUTABLE TO INSURER.

Knowledge by one employed as a solicitor of fire insurance, who delivered the policy of insurance to the insured and received the premiums, of material facts relative to the state of the title and the use to which the property was put at the time of the issuance of the policy, is imputable to the company; and knowledge of the state of the title to the property, although it appears that the interest of the insured was other than "unconditional and sole ownership," will estop the company from setting up a defense based upon a provision in the policy that it should be void if the interest of the insured be "other than unconditional and sole ownership."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 968; Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ERRORS CURED BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

Even if the charge of the court complained of, laying down certain rules whereby the agency of an alleged agent of an insurance company might be tested, was not the correct rule under the facts in the case, yet, where the judge in his charge, in submitting to the jury the question as to whether certain material alterations in the policy sued on were made by one authorized to make them, instructed the jury that the person whose agency, relatively to any authority to make such alterations, was challenged, was without authority to make them, and that the policy was not binding upon the company unless they were made by a named individual who was admittedly the agent of the company and had the authority to make such alterations, or by direction of the latter, the company was not harmed by the charge complained of.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by R. H. Ledford & Son against the Athens Mutual Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

R. H. Ledford & Son brought suit against the plaintiff in error upon a policy of fire insurance, attaching a copy of the policy to their petition. The company in its answer admitted having issued a policy to R. H. Ledford individually, similar to the one sued on, except that in the policy so issued it was stated that Ledford was the owner of the premises described therein; whereas, petitioners alleged that they merely held a bond for title to the property. The company pleaded that it had never issued any policy to R. H. Ledford & Son, and that, if the words "& Son" now appear in the policy after the name of R. H. Ledford, they were inserted after the policy was issued and by some one not authorized by the company to make such alterations. The company also contended that in the policy which it issued it was stated that the building was occupied by Ledford for feed, for hitching, and for storing vehicles; whereas, in fact it was occupied as a livery stable and a barber shop and by a dealer in soft drinks. The company further defended upon the ground that the policy contained a provision that it should be void if the interest of the insured "be other than unconditional and sole ownership," or "if the subject of the insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple."

Upon the trial R. H. Ledford testified that one Morgan solicited him to take out insurance on the building in question, that he told Morgan he did not own the property, but that he and his son held a bond for title, and that Morgan stated that would make no difference, and he would have the policy issued. Ledford told him to have it issued in favor of R. H. Ledford & Son. When Morgan afterwards brought the policy, it was in favor of R. H. Ledford, who refused to pay for same, stating that his son had an equal interest in the property with him, and instructed that the policy be changed so as to read in favor of R. H. Ledford & Son. Morgan took the policy, and in two or three days returned with it with the change so made, and Morgan said the words "& Son" were inserted with indelible pencil in Atlanta. Ledford took the policy and paid Morgan the premium. Ledford further testified that, when Morgan was writing out the policy, there was a barber shop and cold drink stand in the building, and a blacksmith shop, and that Morgan saw them. Ledford had no dealings with any one except Morgan. The secretary of the defendant company testified that Morgan was not the company's agent, that he had no connection with the company, that N. O. Williams was the company's agent in Atlanta, and that he was authorized to issue such policies. Williams acknowledged that he himself was the company's agent in Atlanta, that he issued the policy in its original form as alleged, and that Morgan was a solicitor of insurance for him. He testified that when he signed and sent out the policy it did not contain the words "& Son"; that he did not authorize any one to make that addition, and did not know it had been made, and had never made any report of such change to the company; that the words "& Son" looked like Morgan's handwriting. In rebuttal the plaintiffs introduced evidence to the effect that Williams had acknowledged, after the fire occurred, that the change in the policy by the insertion of the words "& Son" was made by Morgan at the direction of Williams. The jury found for the plaintiffs, and the company excepted to the refusal of a new trial.

T. S. Mell and Tye, Peeples, Bryan & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. Howard & Bolding and Westmoreland Bros., for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above).

1. The policy sued on contained certain clauses providing that it should be void if the interest of the insured "be other than unconditional and sole ownership," or "if the subject of the insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple," and that in any matter relating to the insurance "no person, unless duly authorized in writing, shall be deemed the agent of this company." And it was further provided in the policy that no officer, agent, or other representative of the company should have power to waive any provision or condition of the policy, except such as by its terms might be the subject of agreement indorsed thereon or added thereto, unless such waiver were in writing attached to the policy. Under the evidence in the case, the insured, who were in possession of the property insured, held the same under a bond for title at the time of the issuance of the policy, but did not have such ownership as that required by the terms of the policy; and the defendant company insists that by reason of the provisions in the policy quoted above the policy was void. The evidence in the case further shows that one Morgan solicited the insurance on the building in question, and that he was informed by Ledford that the insured did not own the property, only through a bond. "I [Ledford] had a bond and would not own it until it was paid for, and the payment would not be due until the latter part of 1909. I told him I didn't have any deed for the property at all, and that I paid partial payments. I told him I didn't have deeds for it, and he said it would make no difference. I agreed to take the insurance for R. H. Ledford & Son. He was to issue the policy. He did not bring it with him then; he brought it back. When he brought it back, I was to pay the premium. When he brought it back, I told him it was just marked R. H. Ledford, and I told him I would not pay the premium until it was made to R. H. Ledford & Son; that my son had as much interest in it as I had. He took it and kept it for two or three days, and brought it back with R. H. Ledford & Son added to it. He said it was done with an indelible pencil in Atlanta. When he brought the policy with the '& Son' added to it, I paid him for the policy." The uncontradicted evidence in the case is that Morgan was a solicitor of insurance, employed by the company or its agent, and in the course of his employment he delivered the policy in question and received the premium; though the evidence raises an issue as to whether the words "& Son" were in the policy when it was taken from the office of the company's agent in Atlanta, and as to whether these words were subsequently inserted. Under the ruling in the case of Springfield Fire Insurance Co. v. Price, 132 Ga. 687, 64 S. E. 1074, knowledge by Morgan that the insured did not own the building and the land upon which it was situated was notice to the company, and the latter will not be heard, in defending an action on the policy, to set up the noncompliance by the insured with the condition in the policy in reference to ownership of the property. In the case cited it was said, dealing with a defense in every way similar to the defense now under consideration, based upon provisions in the policy practically identical with those quoted from this policy: "The insurance company defends its refusal to pay the amount of damages done to the property, because the buildings were upon ground not owned by the insured. In Johnson v. Aetna Insurance Co., 123 Ga. 404, 51 S. E. 339, 107 Am. St. Rep. 92, it was held that: 'Where a policy of fire insurance contained a stipulation that it should be void "if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple," but at the time the application for insurance was made the company, through its agent, knew that the applicant did not own the land on which the building sought to be insured was situated, it will not be heard, in defense to an action on the policy, to set up the noncompliance of the plaintiff with this condition of the contract.' Restrictions inserted in the contract upon the power of the agent to waive any condition, unless done in a particular manner, do not apply to those conditions which relate to the inception of the contract, where it appears that the agent has delivered it, and received the premiums, with full knowledge of the actual situation. Wood v. American Fire Ins. Co., 149 N. Y. 382, 44 N. E. 80, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733; Mechanics' Insurance Co. v. Mutual Bldg. Ass'n, 98 Ga. 262, 25 S. E. 457; Johnson v. Aetna Ins. Co., supra; 3 Cooley's Briefs on Ins. 2651."

Under the doctrine above laid down, the jury having found adversely to the company upon the issues raised as to the knowledge of the company, through its soliciting agent, of the state of the title to the property insured, that part of the defense of the company based upon want of title in the insured was met and overcome. And the same is true of the defense based upon the contention that the property was put to other uses than those set forth in the application for insurance.

2. But the insurance company contends further that, if Morgan was such an agent of the company as made his knowledge of the state of the title and the use to which the property was put at the time of the application and issuance of the policy, he was not such an agent as had authority to make a change of the persons to whom it was payable; and that, as the policy when it left the office of the company's agent was payable, in case of loss, to R. H. Ledford, the insertion of the words "& Son" after the name of R. H. Ledford, whereby the policy was made payable to the firm of R. H. Ledford & Son, was unauthorized, even if made by Morgan, and vitiated the contract of insurance; and that it was error for the court to charge the jury, touching the question of agency, in the language of section 2054 of the Civil Code, as follows: "Any person who solicits in behalf of any insurance company, or agent of the same, incorporated by the laws of this or any other state or foreign government, or who takes or transmits, other than for himself, any application for insurance or any policy of insurance to or from such company, or agent of the same, or who advertises or otherwise gives notice that he will receive or transmit the same, or who shall receive or deliver a policy of insurance of any such company, or who shall examine or inspect any risk at any time, or receive or collect or transmit any premiums of insurance, or make or forward any diagram of any building or buildings, or do or perform any other act or thing in the making or consummating of any contract of insurance for or with any insurance company, other than for himself, or who shall examine into or adjust or aid in adjusting any loss for or in behalf of any such company, whether any of such acts shall be done at the instance or request or by the employment of such insurance company, or of, or by, any broker or other person, shall be held to be the agent of the company for which the act is done or the risk is taken." It is insisted by the plaintiff in error that this charge was error, because, "as between the insurer and insured, in determining the liability of the insurer to the insured as to who is to be deemed agent of the insurer so as to bind the insurer by knowledge of such agent, or by the act of such agent, said charge is not applicable." As to whether this contention of counsel for plaintiff in error is sound or not, it is unnecessary to decide here; for, even if the charge quoted is an incorrect statement of the rule for determining the question of agency between the insured and the company, when we consider other portions of the charge, the defendant was not harmed by this part of the court's instructions to the jury. As we have observed above, in a limited sense—that is, in so far as to make knowledge by Morgan, of material facts relative to the ownership of the property and the uses for which it was employed at the date of the policy, notice to the company—the latter was the company's agent; but, when we come to consider the question of whether the change in the name of the policy holder was made by a duly authorized agent or not, we find that the court below did not submit that question as one which could be answered in the affirmative in case the change had been made by Morgan; and he was an agent of the company, under the definition of agency contained in the above extract from the charge. In submitting this last question to the jury, the court required them to apply a stricter and more specific test, and one of which it would seem the plaintiff in error can scarcely complain; for, in submitting the question as to whether the words "& Son" were rightfully inserted after the name of R. H. Ledford in the policy, the court employed this language: "If Morgan was the solicitor of the agent of the company, and he took from the agent of the company a policy of fire insurance, with direction or authority to deliver it, and if he tendered it to the insured, and it was rejected, then he could not, without the consent of the company, acting by its proper officer or its agent, be authorized to make a material alteration in it; and, if he made such alteration without authority, then it would void the policy, and the plaintiff could not recover. If Morgan returned the policy to Williams, the agent, and Williams by himself changed it, or Morgan by direction of the agent changed it, and the policy so changed was retendered to the insured and accepted by him, then the policy would be binding on the company." The only change or alteration in the policy to which this charge could have had reference was to the insertion of the words "& Son" after the name of R. H. Ledford, and this charge made the validity of the policy, so far as that validity was attacked upon the grounds of an alteration in the name of the insured is concerned, turn upon the question as to whether or not that alteration in the policy was made by Williams himself, who was unquestionably the agent of the company, or by Morgan at the direction of Williams; and under the evidence in the case the jury were authorized to find that the alteration, by the addition of the words "& Son" in the policy, was at the direction of Williams.

3. The rulings made above are controlling in the case; and, while certain other parts of the charge are excepted to, they relate to such immaterial questions that their inaptness cannot be treated as harmful, requiring the grant of a new trial.

DELKIN v. McDUFFIE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 99*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—ENFORCEMENT.

A., having an equity of redemption in two tracts of land, agreed with B. that the latter should pay the amount claimed by the holder of the title and take a deed to both tracts, the title to one of which should be retained by B. in consideration of the money expended by him, and the other tract should be conveyed by him to A. The contract was performed to the extent of B.'s paying the amount due to redeem the land and taking from the creditor of A. a deed to both tracts. B. refused to comply with his agreement to convey one of the tracts to A. Held, that the title to the tract agreed by B. to be conveyed to A. was affected with a trust in favor of A., which equity will enforce by proper decree. Horne v. Mullis, 119 Ga. 534, 46 S. E. 663.

Where the plaintiff and defendant in an action like that described in the preceding note sustain the relation of nephew and uncle, and it is alleged that the nephew reposed confidence in the uncle, who wielded great influence over him, and the nephew made the contract with his uncle because of his trust in him, and there is no change in the character of the possession of the land, or in the relation of the parties with respect thereto, a failure of the nephew to sue the uncle until five years had elapsed is not such laches as will bar his equitable remedy.

TRESPASS (§ 52*)—CUTTING AND REMOVAL OF TIMBER—DAMAGES.

Error from Superior Court, Houston County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Action by R. E. Smith and others against A. E. Ingram. Verdict for plaintiffs for less than the amount claimed, and they bring error. Affirmed.

R. N. Holtzclaw, for plaintiffs in error. H. A. Mathews, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. The plaintiffs and defendant were adjoining landowners, and the agents of the latter crossed over her line and cut 107 pine trees on the plaintiffs' land and manufactured them into lumber. The plaintiffs alleged that the trespass was willful, and sued for the value of the timber as converted into lumber. It was shown on the trial that the 107 trees were worth 35 to 40 cents per tree, that they produced between 40,000 and 50,000 feet of lumber, which was worth $1 per hundred feet. The jury returned a verdict for $42.80, and the plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which was refused, and they except.

The contention of the plaintiffs is that the evidence demanded a larger verdict. "Where plaintiff recovers for timber cut and carried away, the measure of damages is: (1) Where defendant is a willful trespasser, the full value of the property at the time and place of demand or suit brought, without deduction for his labor or expense. (2) Where a defendant is an unintentional or innocent trespasser, or innocent vendee from such trespasser, the value at the time of conversion less the value he or his vendor added to the property." Civ. Code 1895, § 8918. The court instructed the jury accordingly. Under the evidence the jury were not bound to find that the trespass was willful. They were authorized to find that the trespass was unintentional, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the accretion of value to the trees produced by their manufacture into lumber. The value of the timber at the time of the conversion was from 35 to 40 cents per tree, and the verdict is for the equivalent of 107 trees at 40 cents per tree.

As no error of law is complained of, the judgment refusing a new trial will not be disturbed.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Action by Mary Read against E. W. Gould. From an order sustaining a general demurrer to the petition, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Mrs. Mary Read brought suit against E. W. Gould, and alleged that he was indebted to her in the sum of $400. She averred that on or about June 6, 1904, she sold to him certain lands, and that as part of the consideration for the sale he agreed to allow her hunting, fishing, and pasturage privileges on the lands, or, in default thereof, to pay her $400 in addition to the price already paid for the land. The agreement referred to was embodied in a writing dated June 6, 1904, signed by the defendant, in which it was stipulated that, in consideration of the sale of the lands, describing them, Mary J. Read should have the right to pasture upon said lands during her life for not exceeding 20 head of cattle and 60 head of hogs, and that if the defendant, his heirs or assigns, should at any time choose to do so, he should have the right to terminate the agreement as to pasture and hunting privileges, upon the payment to plaintiff of the sum of $400 in addition to the purchase price of said lands. The petition contains the further averments that on or about February 4, 1908, the defendant sold the lands to Mrs. Ophelia Phillips; that the deed conveying the lands to Mrs. Phillips conveyed in express terms the right to pasture and hunting on said lands; that, since the sale of the lands by the defendant to Mrs. Phillips, petitioner has attempted to exercise the right of pasture and hunting thereon, and has been denied the right by Mrs. Phillips; and that by reason of the foregoing facts the defendant has elected to terminate the rights of petitioner as to pasture, etc.; and petitioner prays judgment in the sum of $400. A general demurrer to the petition was sustained, and the petitioner excepted.

R. S. Wimberly, for plaintiff in error. L. D. Moore, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). The deed from petitioner to defendant, conveying the lands in question, is not set forth in full or in substance in the petition, nor is it exhibited. The sale of the lands by petitioner to defendant is alleged to have been made on or about the 6th day of June, 1904. The date of the agreement is June 6, 1904; and it is impossible for this court to determine, from the meager averments of the petition, whether the written agreement signed by the defendant, touching the rights of pasture, etc., was executed prior to the deed, and merged in the deed executed subsequently, or whether the written agreement was executed subsequently to the deed conveying the lands in fee simple, without reservation or exception. But, construing the petition and the agreement executed by the defendant in the light of the meager averments of the petition, and the language of the agreement itself, reciting that the granting of the right to pasture upon the lands and the privilege of hunting and fishing thereon was a part of the consideration for the sale of the lands, in the absence of special demurrer calling for a more specific statement of the terms of the conveyance of the lands to the defendant, and as to the relative time of the execution of that conveyance and the instrument in writing, referred to as an agreement in the petition, we take it that the two papers were executed simultaneously, and are to be construed as parts of one and the same transaction, and do so construe them, though the facts of the case as they may appear upon the trial may require an entirely different construction. Thus construing the written agreement signed by the defendant, we think the petition was good as against a general demurrer.

Considered as a whole, the defendant undertook to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $400 whenever he should "terminate this agreement" relative to the rights and privileges of the petitioner as to pasture and hunting upon said lands; and when he sold the lands to a third person, and expressly conveyed the rights of pasture and hunting, generally and without limitation, he will not be heard to say that he has not brought about the contingency upon the happening of which the $400 was to become due to petitioner. Petitioner has herself, by filing this suit, elected to treat her rights and privileges of pasture and hunting upon the lands as terminated and extinguished; and we are of the opinion that the amount of $400, which the defendant obligated himself to pay upon the termination of the rights and privileges referred to, is due, and that plaintiff is entitled to a judgment therefor, unless other facts not appearing upon the face of the petition, affecting or destroying the validity of the binding effect of the agreement signed by the defendant, should appear upon the trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. PLANTERS' FERTILIZER CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 128*)—JUDGMENT—EQUITABLE RELIEF—INJUNCTION.

The defendant in a case pending in a justice's court, who had filed a meritorious defense, was not present at the court when, at a regular term thereof, the case was called for trial and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff. This omission to attend the court was because of an agreement with the plaintiff that the case should be continued to a subsequent term, and that the plaintiff should inform the court of the agreement, which he neglected to do. The defendant did not learn that the judgment had been rendered until the term of the court to which the case was agreed to be continued. He then filed an equitable petition, praying that the judgment be set aside and its enforcement enjoined until the final hearing. Held, that the court erred in refusing the injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. J. Kinsey, Judge.

Action by the Southern Railway Company against the Planters' Fertilizer Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

John J. Strickland, Ed. Quillian, and C. R. Faulkner, for plaintiff in error. B. P. Gailard, Jr., for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. The Planters' Fertilizer Company sued the Southern Railway Company in a justice's court to recover for an alleged overcharge of freight and for loss of goods. The defendant filed a plea under oath, setting up a meritorious defense. By agreement between the president of the plaintiff corporation and the attorney of the defendant the case was continued to the May term of the court, and again was continued by agreement between the parties to the June term. Prior to the June term the president of the plaintiff corporation and the attorney of the railroad company orally agreed to continue the case until the July term, and that the president of the company should notify the court of the agreement, which he neglected and failed to do. Relying upon the agreement to continue the case and the promise of the president of the plaintiff company to communicate it to the court, the railroad company did not appear by counsel or otherwise at the June term, and judgment was entered against it for the full sum sued for. The defendant was not aware of the failure of the president of the plaintiff company to communicate the terms of their agreement to the court, nor of the judgment which was rendered at the June term, until he appeared at the July term, pursuant to the terms of his agreement, ready to try the case. The railway company filed its petition to set aside the judgment and enjoin further proceedings in the justice's court until the final hearing. The court refused the injunction, and the railway company excepted.

The railway company had filed its defense to the fertilizer company's action at the return term of the case. The court had previously continued the case for two terms by consent of the parties, and the railway company's attorney could reasonably act on the assumption that the last agreement would have been respected by the court, if the court had been informed of it. At all events, good faith would have required the president of the fertilizer company to have apprised the court of the agreement to continue. The defendant was shut off from a hearing on its plea, not because of any ruling of the court respecting the agreement to continue, but because the fertilizer company's president neglected to inform the court of it. The fertilizer company should not be permitted to take advantage of its adversary's omission, based on reliance upon the oral promise of its president. 23 Cyc. 920. The latter's failure to acquaint the court of the agreement according to his promise, and allowing a judgment to be rendered, in the absence of any representation on the part of the defendant, amounts to the perpetration of a fraud in the procurement of the judgment. The Code declares that equity will set aside a judgment of a court having jurisdiction, where the person was prevented from making his defense by fraud or accident, or the act of the adverse party unmixd with fraud or negligence on his part. Civ. Code, § 8988. It was certainly not negligence for the railroad company to act upon a convention with the adverse party stipulating for a continuance of the case, and a promise by the adverse party to notify the court of the convention. As the plaintiff, under the undisputed evidence submitted on the hearing, was entitled to have the judgment set aside, the court should have enjoined any further proceeding in the justice's court until the final hearing. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by Mercer Fain against M. W. Reid. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

The action was by Mercer Fain, as assignee of the landlord, W. Jones, against M. W. Reid, tenant, to recover damages on account of breach of contract and abandonment of the premises by the tenant. From the petition it appears that on March 8, 1906, M. W. Reid entered into a written contract with W. Jones for the lease of a certain storehouse for the term of five years, commencing April 1, 1906, for which premises Reid agreed to pay Jones $150 per month in advance. The lease contained this stipulation: "In the event that a retail liquor license cannot be procured by said second party [tenant] for this storeroom, this lease will be void." The tenant also stipulated in the lease not to sublet the premises or any part thereof without the written consent of the landlord. On May 14, 1906, Jones transferred in writing to petitioner all his right, title, and interest in and to the lease, and directed the lessee, Reid, to pay to petitioner or his order the accruing rentals. Reid acquiesced in the transfer, ratified the same, and treated the assignee as landlord, and paid to him the monthly rentals accruing under the lease up until September 1, 1907, since which time Reid refused to pay to petitioner the monthly rentals as they accrued under the contract, and refuses to comply further with the terms and covenants of the lease, and has wholly abandoned the leased premises. On account of the breach of the contract and abandonment of the premises, petitioner claims damages in the sum of $6,450. There was also an allegation and prayer to recover attorney's fees. The lease contract and its assignment were attached to the petition. The plaintiff demurred on the grounds: (1) That the attached contract shows upon its face that it is not assignable. (2) That plaintiff is not entitled to recover attorney's fees, as the statutory notice to claim attorney's fees is not alleged to have been given to the defendant. (3) Because the petition omits to allege that a retail liquor license could be procured by the defendant; and, before the plaintiff can recover, he must allege and prove that this defendant could procure a retail liquor license for the operation of a retail liquor business in the storeroom covered by the lease. (4) Inasmuch as by act approved August 6, 1907, the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors was prohibited after January 1, 1906, the plaintiff in no event could recover for any part of the term covered by the lease subsequent to January 1, 1908. (5) The suit was filed on November 9, 1907, and rent for the month of December, 1907, could not be recovered in this action. The court sustained grounds 2 and 4 of the demurrer, and overruled grounds 1, 3, and 5. Both sides excepted pendente lite. In his answer the defendant denied that he acquiesced in the transfers of the lease or treated the plaintiff as landlord and recognized him as such. He admitted his refusal to pay rents for any time after September 1, 1907. He further answered that on October 1, 1906, he assigned his lease to H. J. Fite, who transferred his lease in June, 1907, to A. S. Crumpton, and that W. Jones, the landlord, accepted the several assignees as tenants instead of the defendants; also, that he was unable to procure a license for the operation of a retail liquor business in the storeroom for the term beginning September 1, 1907; that by reason of his failure to procure such license the lease contract by its terms became void; and that the defendant did not occupy the leased premises any time subsequent to September 1, 1907. Both sides submitted evidence, and the court directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $659.50. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was refused. He assigned error upon this ruling, and upon his pendente lite exceptions.

J. D. Kilpatrick, for plaintiff in error. H. W. Dent and W. R. Hammond, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege that the defendant was able to procure a retail liquor license for the conduct of a retail liquor business in the rented storeroom. The verbiage of the contract demonstrates, and the occupation by the tenant of the storeroom for several months before abandoning his lease illustrates, that the clause in the lease relating to the procurement of a retail liquor license by the defendant was not intended as a condition precedent, but as a condition subsequent or defeasance, which would terminate the lease. The contractual obligation of the tenant to secure a retail liquor license implies a reasonable effort in good faith to get such a license. The lease is not to be defeated by his non-action, or colorable attempt in that direction. The lease became operative from the time it purported to go into effect, and the tenant had a present interest in the same; but the lease was subject to shorter termination if the tenant after performing an act should fail to accomplish a particular result. The rule of pleading is that "when the interest or estate passes presently and vests in the grantee and is to be defeated by matter ex post facto, or condition subsequent to the condition to be performed in the affirmative or negative, or to be performed by the defendant or any other, then the plaintiff may count generally without showing any performance; this shall be pleaded by him who is to take advantage of it." 5 Bacon's Abr. Tit. Pleading, 337; Murphy v. Lawrence, 2 Ga. 257.

2. Where a lessee repudiates his lease and abandons the rented premises, the lessor may sue for a breach of the contract before the expiration of the term, and the damages are to be measured by the difference between the rent stipulated in the lease and the actual rental value of the balance of the term. Minn. Baseball Co. v. City Bank, 74 Minn. 98, 76 N. W. 1024. In his ruling on the demurrer the court held that the enactment of the prohibition law interdicting the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquor in the state after January 1, 1908, restricted and limited the term of the lease to that time. No crossbill of exceptions was sued out by the plaintiff, and this ruling of the court is res adjudicata as to that point. The court directed a verdict for the plaintiff for $659.50, the stipulated rent for the months intervening September 1, 1907, and January 1, 1908, with interest thereon. The defendant admitted in open court that the plaintiff was entitled to recover this sum, unless he sustained by a preponderance of evidence his plea of avoidance of the contract. Taking all the evidence submitted on this subject, the only verdict which could properly be rendered was that directed by the court.

3. The defendant offered in evidence certain written assignments of the lease, viz.: One by him to Fite, dated October 1, 1906; one by Fite to Crumpton, dated June 7, 1907; and an indorsement by the original landlord, Jones, consenting to these transfers, dated June 7, 1907. These writings were rejected from evidence, and error is assigned on their exclusion. The defendant has no just cause of complaint for the exclusion of this evidence. The ordinance of the city of Atlanta required of each applicant for a liquor license to submit proof that he is the true owner of the premises, or holds in his own name and right a lease on the building wherein he proposes to conduct the liquor business before any license shall be granted. The defendant's application for license was made after his assignment of his lease. By his own voluntary act in assigning his lease, he put it out of his power to comply with the municipal regulation for obtaining a license in his own name. It is true that the ordinance was passed intervening the defendant's transfer to Fite and his application for a license. But the rejected evidence shows that the landlord assented to the transfer after the passage of the ordinance and before the defendant's application for a license was refused by the council.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

BRACEWELL v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 33*) — ACTION AGAINST — VENUE.

Where a railroad company incorporated in another state operates a line of railroad in this state, and a cause of action arises by reason of a tort here committed, section 2334 of the Civil Code, providing that "all railroad companies shall be sued in the county in which the cause of action originated," etc., applies to a suit brought on account of such a tort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 71; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

2. ACTION AGAINST RAILROAD—VENUE.

As to the point decided in the previous headnote, this court declines to reverse the decisions in the cases of Mitchell v. Southern Railway Company, 118 Ga. 845, 45 S. E. 703, Hazlehurst v. Seaboard Air Line Railway, 118 Ga. 858, 45 S. E. 703, and Cockley v. Southern Railway Company, 120 Ga. 960, 48 S. E. 372.

Case Certified from Court of Appeals.

Action by H. A. Bracewell against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brought error to the Court of Appeals, which set five settled questions to the Supreme Court. Questions answered.

Guerry, Hall & Roberts and H. L. Grice, for plaintiff in error. Harris & Harris, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. The Court of Appeals certified to this court the following question: "Does section 2334 of the Civil Code relate to suits against nonresidents or foreign corporations? (In connection herewith it is to be noted that counsel for plaintiff in error asks leave to review and question the correctness of Mitchell v. Southern Ry. Co., 118 Ga. 845 [45 S. E. 703]; Coakley v. Southern Ry. Co., 120 Ga. 960 [48 S. E. 372]; Hazlehurst v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 118 Ga. 858 [45 S. E. 703]."

In Mitchell v. Southern Ry. Co., 118 Ga. 845, 45 S. E. 703, it was held that "Civ. Code, § 2334, fixing the venue of suits against railroad companies, applies to foreign as well as domestic corporations." In Hazlehurst v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 118 Ga. 858, 45 S. E. 703, it was held that: "For any cause of action arising in this state foreign railroad companies are subject to suit by attachment or in personam, but the trial in every such case must be in the county designated by Civ. Code, § 2334." In Coakley v. Southern Ry. Co., 120 Ga. 960, 48 S. E. 372, it was held that: "An action for personal injuries against a railroad company, foreign or domestic, * * * must be brought in the county in which the cause of action originated, if such company have an agent in that county; and a judgment rendered in any other county is utterly void. Civ. Code, § 2334." Each of these decisions was concurred in by all of the justices. It is evident, therefore, that, unless these decisions are reviewed and reversed, they furnish an answer to the question propounded by the Court of Appeals as to suits against nonresident or foreign corporations for injuries committed by them in this state. In Reeves v. Southern Ry. Co., 121 Ga. 561, 49 S. E. 674, 70 L. R. A. 513, it was held that a foreign corporation doing business in this state, and having agents located therein for this purpose, may be sued and served in the same manner as domestic corporations upon a transitory cause of action, though originating without the state. If suit may be thus brought on account of a cause of action originating in another state, and not in any county in this state, it follows that as to such a case the provision contained in section 2334 of the Civil Code, that all railroad companies "shall be sued in the county in which the cause of action originated," cannot apply.

The real question raised is whether this court will reverse the ruling in the three cases first mentioned. The suit was brought in Bibb county for a tort alleged to have been committed by the agent of the Southern Railway Company, a Virginia corporation, in Pulaski county; the defendant operating a line of railroad and having an agent in each county. Counsel for plaintiff in error urged that, in the light of the history of the legislation which has now become codified and embodied in section 2334 of the Civil Code, the decisions first above cited were erroneous, and should be reversed. The same counsel who presented this argument before us was also counsel for plaintiff in error in the Mitchell Case, and it would seem that he then urged the same historical argument. Mr. Justice Turner, in delivering the opinion, said, at pages 847, 848, of 118 Ga., page 704 of 45 S. E.: "We have read the interesting history which counsel for plaintiff in error gives of this section of the Code and the ingenious argument which he bases on that history; but we think that this section declares the policy of the state as to suits against all railroad companies, foreign as well as domestic." It was said that the court saw no reason why the General Assembly could not regulate the venue of such suits, and that, if there was any reason why it should be provided that suits against domestic railroads for injuries should be brought in the county in which the cause of action originated, the same reason would seem to apply to all railroads doing business in the state. It was added: "Whatever significance may attach to the reason of the law, the plain words of the statute embrace all railroads. We do not feel at liberty to make an exception where the General Assembly has made none." It will thus appear that the history of the legislation on the subject and the argument to be derived therefrom were considered by this court in deciding the Mitchell Case, and that the conclusion reached was not the result of accident or oversight, but of the fact that the court could not concur in the argument made by counsel or the result at which he arrived. It is true that the members composing the court are now mostly different from those who presided when that decision was made. It is also true that, if even a court of last resort determines that it has made a clear and palpable error, it will correct such ruling. But the doctrine of stare decisis is an important one. It affects the stability and the certainty of the decisions of the court. A decision concurred in by the entire bench after argument and careful consideration, and followed in other cases, will not readily be overturned, unless clearly erroneous. Especially is this true where it has stood for a number of years (in this case for nearly seven years) unquestioned, and where the Legislature, with knowledge of the rulings thus made on the subject of venue, have not deemed it proper to make any change in that regard. Even if the original ruling were somewhat doubtful, which we do not mean to assert, this court would be inclined to be conservative in regard to overturning it in such a case. The very purpose of making decisions is to solve questions of doubt. The Mitchell Case has been followed not only in the other cases above mentioned, but also in Southern Railway Co. v. Grizzle, 124 Ga. 735, 739, 53 S. E. 244, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191. In that case an action for damages was brought against the railway company and its engineer running the trolleys which caused the injury. The suit was brought in Gwinnett county. The railway company filed a petition to have the case removed to the United States court, alleging that the engineer was merely a nominal party, joined for the purpose of preventing a removal of the case; that there was a separable controversy between the plaintiff and the company; that the plaintiff was a resident and citizen of Georgia, and the railway company was a corporation under the laws of Virginia, a resident and citizen of that state, and a nonresident of the state of Georgia. This court sustained a refusal to pass an order removing the case to the United States court. In doing so it was held that a foreign railroad company operating in this state and an engineer in its employment might be jointly sued in the county in which the cause of action originated, even though the residence of the engineer were in another county in this state. Again, in Harvey v. Thompson, 128 Ga. 147, 154, 57 S. E. 104, 107 (9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 765, 119 Am. St. Rep. 373), Mr. Justice Cobb said: "A foreign railroad company operating a line of railroad in this state and having agents and a place of doing business within the state, upon whom, under the general laws of the state, process may be served, is a resident of this state, subject to suit under the same rules and regulations where other residents may be sued"—citing the Cases of Reeves and Grizzle. In Southern Railway Co. v. Brock, 115 Ga. 721, 42 S. E. 95, section 2334 of the Code was treated as applying to the same company now involved. See, also, Ball v. Mabry, 91 Ga. 781, 18 S. E. 64; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Du Pont, 122 Ga. 251, 50 S. E. 108; Tatum v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 128 Ga. 813, 58 S. E. 465; Brooke v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 3 Ga. App. 492, 60 S. E. 218.

Under what has been said, we do not deem it necessary to enter at length into a discussion of the common law on the subject of venue, or various acts of the Legislature and decisions of this court. But it may be profitable to mention some facts in relation to the origin of the section of the Code under consideration. In Davis v. Central Railroad, etc., Co., 17 Ga. 323, it was held that the act of the 20th of February, 1854, "to define the liabilities of the several railroad companies of this state for injury to or destruction of live stock, killed or injured," etc., was not in violation of the Constitution of the state or that of the United States. On page 333 Benning, J., said: "It is clear that what shall be the place of residence of a corporation is a question over which the Legislature has power"—referring to the residence for the purpose of venue. That decision was rendered in 1855. By the act of March 5, 1856 (Acts 1855-56, p. 154), it was declared that: "The several railroad companies of this state shall be liable to be sued in any county in which the cause of action originated, by any one whose person or property has been injured by them, their officers, agents, or employes, in or by the running of their cars or engines," etc. In Southwestern R. Co. v. Paulk, 24 Ga. 356 (decided in 1858), it was held that in a suit for damages for the killing of a person by a railroad the action should be brought in the county where the principal office of the corporation was kept, and that the provision of the act of 1856 in regard to an action for a homicide was prospective in character. By the act of December 13, 1859 (Acts 1859, p. 48), which soon followed the decision just cited, it was declared that no suit against a railroad company in this state should thereafter be dismissed for want of jurisdiction of the court in the county in which the suit might be pending or thereafter brought, if the road of the company was located in or ran through such county, and if the cause of action arose, or the contract was made or to be performed, in the county where the suit was instituted. When the original Code (1861), which took effect on January 1, 1863, was compiled, the provision in regard to the venue of suits against railroad companies was embodied in section 3317. As there contained, it was stated that: "All railroad companies shall be liable to be sued in any county in which the cause of action originated," etc. Here the expression "all railroad companies" took the place of "the several railroad companies of this state" in the act of 1856. That Code was adopted by act of the Legislature. In the Code of 1868 this provision was included in section 3329. Here again the expression, "all railroad companies," was used. It has been declared that the Code superseded all previous legislation inconsistent with it, and this was said in dealing with another section of the act of 1856 and its repeal by a later act. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co. v. Oaks, 52 Ga. 410, 414. The provision as to venue was contained in section 3329 of the Code of 1868, where the words "all railroad companies" were again used. This Code was recognized by the Constitution of 1868. Code 1873, § 5145. The same expression was repeated in the Codes of 1873, 1882, and 1895, the last of which was formally adopted by the Legislature. In 1869 the Legislature amended section 3329 of the Code of 1868 so "as to embrace all causes of action against railroad companies." Acts 1869, p. 14. In the same year an act was passed to repeal the third section of the act of 1856. Acts 1869, p. 157. This was the act dealt with in the case of Georgia Railroad, etc., Co. v. Oaks, supra. On December 20, 1892, an amendment was made to section 3406 of the Code of 1882, which contained the provision under consideration, by striking out the words "liable to be" and the word "any," and adding a clause to the section. Acts 1892, p. 59. Though the Legislature were dealing with a section of the Code which then declared that "all railroad companies shall be liable to be sued," etc., and were making the provision mandatory instead of permissive, they not only did not alter the words beginning the section so as to confine them to domestic railroads, but declared that the section, when amended, should read thus: "All railroad companies shall be sued in the county in which the cause of action originated," etc. This was not merely a recognition of the broad language of the section, but a re-enactment of it. As incorporated in the Code of 1895, which was adopted by the Legislature, the section now reads as follows: "All railroad companies shall be sued in the county in which the cause of action originated, by any one whose person or property has been injured by such railroad company, its officers, agents, or employes, for the purpose of recovering damages for such injuries; and also on all contracts made or to be performed in the county where suit is brought; any judgment rendered in any other county than the one in which the cause so originated shall be utterly void. But if the cause of action arises in a county where the railroad company liable to suit has no agent, then suit may be brought in the county of the residence of such company." That section was again amended by the act of December 21, 1898 (Acts 1898, p. 50). The amendment provided for the venue of a suit to set aside and annul an unlawful acquisition of the line of a competing railroad company incorporated under the laws of this state. In dealing with this question, the act amended specifically named "a railroad company incorporated under the laws of this state," but made no change in the language with which the section began.

The argument was made that in the original act of 1856 the language employed was "the several railroad companies of this state"; that this referred only to domestic railroad companies; that the language employed in the Code was merely an abbreviation of that in the act, and was not intended to change its meaning so as to include foreign railroad corporations; and that the original meaning continued through the various Codes. From what has been said above, it will appear that the Legislature, both in adopting several of the Codes and in amending the section and re-enacting it as amended, employed the broad language, "all railroad companies." The language of Benning, J., in Davis v. Gen. R., etc., Co., 17 Ga. 323, in discussing the act of 1854, may be appropriately quoted. He said: "The principle of this state is that in certain suits against the railroads the venue of the suit shall be the venue of the wrongful act. This principle is certainly not a novel one. It is the principle of the common law. It is a principle sanctioned and affirmed by a statute as old as the time of Richard II. It is a principle which lies at the foundation of the doctrine of venue, as practiced in England up to this day. The principle rests upon the maxim that, 'Vicini vicinorum facta præsumuntur scire'—a maxim that makes the suit seek the witnesses, rather than the witnesses seek the suit."

It was urged that the decision in Hazlehurst v. Seaboard Air Line Railway, supra, was inconsistent with itself, in that by treating a foreign railroad as a resident it would cease to be liable to attachment. But, while the Legislature may fix the venue of a suit against a foreign corporation, this does not make it for all purposes a domestic company, or prevent the Legislature from giving the right of attachment against it. It was further urged that the decision in Coakley v. Southern Railway Co., supra, was inconsistent with the law and with other decisions; and that, if service could be had by a second original, it would seem that there was no good reason why the original process would not lie in the same county against the same person. If the Legislature has power to fix the venue, and has done so, and if the company has no agent in the county where the cause of action originated, but has one in another county, on the subject of service, in addition to the Coakley Case, see Mitchell v. Southwestern Railroad, 75 Ga. 398; Devereux v. Atlanta Railway & Power Co., 111 Ga. 855, 36 S. E. 939; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 608, 609, 13 Sup. Ct. 444, 37 L. Ed. 292.

We have carefully considered the argument of counsel for plaintiff in error. But we do not think that the decisions which we have been requested to review should be overruled on the point under consideration. All the Justices concur.

All necessary parties, either in person or by counsel, acknowledged service of the bill of exceptions before it was filed in the court below. 2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 411*)—JUDGMENT (§ 576*)—ESTOPPEL—INTERLOCUTORY ORDER.

A creditor of an intestate, claiming to be secured by bill of sale to certain property for advances, filed an equitable proceeding against the administrator and certain other creditors, alleged to be asserting claims, some on cotton and some on mules, seeking to have the status determined, and the rights of all parties decreed. One of the defendants, alleged to have a claim to cotton as a purchaser, demurred to the petition, on the ground of misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. Before a determination of the demurrer, an order was granted directing a sale of the mules by the administrator. Later the demurrer was sustained, and the demurrant dismissed from the case. After this a decree was taken between parties remaining in the litigation. Still later, but before distribution, the administrator filed a petition in the nature of a bill to marshal the assets of the estate, alleged to be insolvent, making creditors of the decedent parties, including those claiming under the former decree, and the same person who had been alleged to be a purchaser of cotton, but had been dismissed from the former suit; he being now made a party on account of a general judgment, held by him as surviving partner of a firm, against the decedent. Injunction was prayed. On the hearing the court refused the injunction against the complainants in the former proceeding, directed the administrator to pay over the fund raised from the sale of a mule to them in accordance with the decree, and enjoined proceedings against the other funds. The surviving partner last named excepted. Held, that such interlocutory order was erroneous, in excepting from the injunction the complainants in the former proceeding and directing the funds to be paid to them on account of the decree.

(a) The entry of a nunc pro tunc order in the first litigation, some months after the demurrer of the alleged purchaser of cotton had been sustained and he had been dismissed from the litigation, and after the entry of the decree in the case, in which order certain recitals were made as to an intimation of the court in regard to the demurrer filed, and statements by the demurrant as to having no claim in regard to the mules, said order not appearing to have been entered after notice, could not in the present case affect the status of the demurrant by way of estoppel on account of such recitals.

(b) The evidence did not show an estoppel on the plaintiff in error as to the general judgment held by him as surviving partner.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 24*)—CREATION OF DISTRICTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The act of August 23, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 425), as amended by the act of August 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 61), declares that within 30 days after the passage of the act, or as soon thereafter as practicable, it shall be the duty of the county board of education of each county in Georgia to lay off the county into school districts, and directs the manner in which the lines shall be defined. It then provides that, "within ninety days after the board of education has laid off the county as required in section 1, the said board of education shall order the citizens of the several school districts to hold an election for the purpose of electing three trustees for each district in the county. It further provides for the ordering by the ordinary of an election in any school district in a county not levying a local tax for educational purposes, upon petition of one-fourth of the qualified voters. It then declares that, "in those districts which levy a local tax for educational purposes, the board of trustees shall make all rules and regulations to govern the schools of the districts," and that the secretary of the board of trustees of the district, with the aid of the county school commissioner of the county, shall make a digest, and a levy of the local school tax shall be based thereon. Held, that under the provisions of this act the county board of education is required to lay off the county into school districts, and, "after the board of education has laid off the county as required," the school trustees are to be elected for each district in the county. There is no authority of law for a board of education of a county to disregard these positive requirements, and to merely arbitrarily lay off a school district in one part of a county, leaving the balance of the county undivided. A school district thus sought to be created is not lawful, and the authorities cannot proceed to have an election therein to determine the question of levying a local tax for school purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 24*)—CREATION OF DISTRICTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The county board of education of Columbia county, on May 7, 1907, adopted the following resolution: "After discussing at length the school district situation, motion was carried that each white school in the county be regarded as the center of the various school districts. The school districts thus regarded shall comply with the requirements of section 1 of the McMichael act, as amended 1906.

Whenever the white citizens of any school district want to supplement the said school funds by levying a special school tax, the boundaries of said district or districts shall be definitely fixed by the county surveyor under the direction of the county board of education. It was ordered that the Harlem school district be surveyed by the county surveyor and plat made." Under this resolution a district was laid off under the name of the "Harlem school district." At other times two other school districts were laid off. But the county was never divided into school districts, and a large part of it remained undivided, including long and irregularly shaped strips of territory intervening between the districts thus laid off. Held, that this was neither a literal nor a substantial compliance with the law; that the Harlem district, thus established, was not a lawful school district; and an election within such district for the determination of the question of imposing a local tax therein was illegal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 111*)—ILLEGAL CREATION—INJUNCTION OF TAX ELECTION.

Upon due and proper application by citizens and taxpayers of the district in which it was sought to levy a local school tax by virtue of an election held as indicated in the preceding headnotes, an injunction should have been granted.

WHITE et al. v. CITY OF ATLANTA et al. (Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. STATUTES (§ 8½*)—ENACTMENT—LOCAL BILLS—ADVERTISEMENT.

The question of preliminary advertisement of a local bill is for determination by the General Assembly before its passage. Burge v. Mangum, 134 Ga. —, 67 S. E. 857.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 8½.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 90*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—INCORPORATION OF CITIES—AMENDMENT.

The law embodied in Pol. Code 1895, § 683 et seq., is not such a general law in regard to the incorporation of cities as to render it unconstitutional for the Legislature, which had previously chartered a city, to amend such charter so as to extend the corporate limits. Benning v. Smith, 108 Ga. 259, 33 S. E. 823.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 99; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

3. STATUTES (§§ 120, 141*)—SUBJECTS AND TITLES.

The act of August 14, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 534), providing for the extension of the municipal limits of Atlanta, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it contains matter not covered by the caption, or because it does not set out or describe the act to be amended. Town of Poulan v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 123 Ga. 605, 51 S. E. 657; Mayor, etc., of Macon v. Hughes, 110 Ga. 795, 36 S. E. 247.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 168–172, 209; Dec. Dig. §§ 120, 141.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 107*)—SUBJECTS AND TITLES.

Such act is not unconstitutional as a whole, or as to the extension of the municipal limits, on the ground that it contains more than one subject-matter. Smith v. Mayor and Council of Macon, 129 Ga. 227, 58 S. E. 713; Mayor and Council of Americus v. Perry, 114 Ga. 871, 40 S. E. 1004, 57 L. R. A. 230; Stapleton v. Perry, 117 Ga. 561, 48 S. E. 996.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 34*)—EXTENSION OF TERRITORY—POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

While the Legislature may provide for an election to determine whether unincorporated territory contiguous to a municipal corporation shall be annexed thereto and the corporate limits extended so as to include such territory, they are not obliged to do so, but may extend the limits without the consent of those residing or owning property in the added territory. Toney v. Macon, 119 Ga. 83, 46 S. E. 80.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 98–101; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 36*)—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—LIABILITY FOR TAXATION.

Where the Legislature amends the charter of a municipality so as to extend its corporate limits and include therein contiguous territory previously unincorporated, all the inhabitants and their property within the limits so fixed are subject to taxation to raise municipal revenue for all legitimate purposes, without respect to the time when some of the liabilities arose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 109; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 36*)—ANNEXATION—LIABILITY FOR DEBTS.

Under such circumstances, unless otherwise provided by law, debts of the corporation contracted before the limits were extended are chargeable upon the city as enlarged by the territory added, as well as upon that included in the boundaries before they were extended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 107; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 190*)—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 859*)—ANNEXATION—LIABILITY FOR INDEBTEDNESS—STATUTES—RETROACTIVE EFFECT.

Such a provision in the act extending the limits is not unconstitutional on the ground that it is retroactive or retrospective as to the municipal indebtedness already incurred (Civ. Code 1895, § 5730); nor on the ground that this would amount to binding the new inhabitants by a previously incurred debt without their having voted to incur it (Civ. Code 1895, § 5893).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 531-533; Dec. Dig. § 190;* Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1841; Dec. Dig. § 859.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 36*)—ANNEXATION DEBTS. AND ASSETS OF ANNEXED TERRITORY.

The charters of Oakland City and Battle Hill were repealed by separate acts (Acts 1909, p. 1201; Acts 1908, p. 407), and they were taken into the extended limits of the city of Atlanta. It is denied in the answer that there was any bonded indebtedness of those municipalities, or that the city of Atlanta assumed any such; and it was alleged that there was only a comparatively small amount of outstanding liabilities on the part of Oakland city, to counterbalance which there was a greater amount of municipal assets. Held, that in becoming incorporated as a part of the city of Atlanta, in the absence of any contrary provision, such public assets and liabilities both passed to that city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 106, 107; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 859, 868, 870, 957*)—VALIDITY OF STATUTE—ANNEXATION TO CITY—AID TO CORPORATION—PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS.

The act of 1909 is not unconstitutional on the ground that it seeks to loan the credit of Atlanta to Oakland City (Civ. Code 1895, § 5891), or that it causes the incurring of a new debt without a vote (Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5893, 5897), or that it will cause a tax in the city of Atlanta to pay the debt of Oakland City.

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 957*)—VALIDITY OF STATUTE—ANNEXATION TO CITY—TAXATION.

The act above mentioned is not unconstitutional on the ground that the inhabitants of the added territory will be taxed for the support of the public schools of Atlanta, as to the establishment of which they had no vote.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2015-2022; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

12. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 46*)—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE—NECESSITY OF DETERMINATION.

If there be some special provisions of the act of 1909 which are unconstitutional, they are not such integral parts of it as to render the whole invalid. Nor is it necessary to pass upon them until some person affected by them shall seek appropriate relief in regard thereto. They furnished no ground to declare the extension of the limits of the city of Atlanta illegal for the reasons urged against it in the present suit, or to authorize an injunction against the inclusion of the territory where the plaintiffs reside or hold property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 43-45; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

13. STATUTES (§ 64*)—VALIDITY OF STATUTE—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

If there be an inaccuracy in stating the corporate name of a railroad company whose right of way forms for a short distance one boundary of the extended limits, but which is so named as to be readily recognized and located, as averred in the sworn statements of the answer, this furnishes no ground for declaring the entire act void or for granting an injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by H. M. White and others against the city of Atlanta and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Robt. L. Rodgers and J. D. Kilpatrick, for plaintiffs in error. Jas. L. Mason and W. D. Ellis, Jr., for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. By the act of August 14, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 534), the corporate limits of the city of Atlanta were extended. Some of the residents and taxpayers of the territory which had previously been outside of the corporate limits, and which by the act was included therein, filed an equitable petition to enjoin the city and its officers from putting the act into effect so as to include such new territory. The injunction was denied. Numerous grounds of objection were raised. Most of them are controlled by decisions of this court heretofore rendered, and require no discussion beyond the rulings made in the headnotes.

It was contended that the act was unconstitutional on the ground that it contained matter different from and not included in its title. Civ. Code 1895, § 5771. An inspection of the act shows that its caption covers four pages and a fraction of printed matter, referring to the amendment of the city charter by extending the corporate limits, the extending of jurisdiction over the new territory, the redistricting of the city so as to include the additional territory in the different wards, the authorizing of the making of such changes, and the passing of such ordinances as might be necessary or advisable in readjusting the city limits as extended (which are described at length), and terminating with the cabalistic words "and for other purposes." The body of the act covers somewhat more than seven pages. So that it will appear that the caption not only covers the act legally, but to a considerable extent is sufficient to cover it physically, applied by the rule of square measure. If subject to criticism at all, it would be rather for plethora than minimization.

The Legislature has the power to extend the corporate limits of a city. In doing so they may provide for the holding of an election to determine whether or not the extension shall be made, but they are not compelled to do so. Beyond the publication required by the constitution to be made before the introduction or passage of a local act, there is no requirement for giving notice or obtaining the consent of persons residing in the unincorporated territory which is to be added to the city. When included within the city by legislative enactment, they take the advantages of being residents or taxpayers of the municipality, and they become subject to the corresponding proportionate burden, in the absence of lawful provision to the contrary. Receiving such benefits as may arise to residents of a city in connection with police protection, lighting, water, sewers, or the like, there is no injustice in requiring that they should share with other residents or taxpayers of the city in proportionately carrying the municipal burdens. Nor is it in violation of the constitutional provisions against the incurring of debts by counties or municipalities except by an election held for that purpose that the new residents become an integral part of the municipality, and as such may be subject to taxation to assist in paying debts already incurred. By way of illustration, suppose a system of waterworks had been established by means of the issuance of bonds, and residents of the added district were allowed, as the pipes could be extended, to make water connections therefrom to their property, certainly they ought not to be allowed to receive the benefits of the established system without assisting in the discharge of the burden entailed by it. To endeavor to keep separate accounts for different portions of a city might create great confusion. While to a certain extent the Legislature may make distinctive provisions legitimate in connection with adding the new territory to the city, an effort to make permanent discriminatory provisions as to different parts of a municipality would be more likely to raise constitutional questions than to allay them. We need not discuss the extent to which the Legislature may go in that direction. What we now hold is that the inhabitants in the newly added territory have not raised any valid constitutional objection to the act on the ground that the new inhabitants of the city and their property will be proportionately subject to taxation to meet the liabilities already existing. Cash v. Town of Douglasville, 94 Ga. 557, 20 S. E. 438; Toney v. Mayor and Council of Macon, 119 Ga. 83, 46 S. E. 80; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 185; Wade v. City of Richmond, 18 Grat. (Va.) 583; Washburn v. City of Oshkosh, 60 Wis. 453, 19 N. W. 364; Cheaney v. Hooser, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 330; 28 Cyc. 184, 220 (G), 221, 222.

The repeal of the charters of Battle Hill and Oakland City, which corporations were situated just outside the limits of Atlanta, and including those places in the extended limits of the last-named city, furnished no ground for objection on the part of residents of certain other territory which was also included in the extended limits. Nor did it render the act unconstitutional that Oakland City had certain public property and owed a small amount of floating indebtedness, and that the Legislature provided that these should be taken over by the City of Atlanta as enlarged. Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 25 L. Ed. 699.

That there are some unusual features in the act of 1909 must be conceded. Several of its provisions are vigorously attacked by the plaintiffs in the present case, such as the making of a legislative provision in regard to a single police officer in Oakland City, and exempting him from certain requirements applicable generally to the police force of Atlanta, of which he becomes a part; a provision restricting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the newly acquired territory by a rule different from that applicable under the general law to justices within the original limits; and certain provisions in regard to the election of aldermen and councilmen. The time for holding the election has long passed, and this is not a proceeding either to prevent the election or to test it. We do not deem it necessary to pass upon the validity of these points raised by the plaintiffs. If any of the provisions of the act complained of are invalid or unconstitutional, they do not form such an essential part of the entire act as to render it all void. If any one or more of them should be held invalid, they could be eliminated, and the act still left to stand as a whole. They furnish no reason for declaring the entire act void and granting an injunction, so that the plaintiffs may remain outside the city.

None of the other grounds of attack were such as to require a holding that the judge erred in refusing the injunction sought.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

McGLAMERY et al. v. JACKSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 3, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ACTION ON THE CASE (§ 4*)—DECLARATION.

Lack of an ad damnum clause in a declaration in trespass on the case is an omission of matter of substance and cannot be disregarded on a demurrer to the declaration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action on the Case, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 433*)—AIDED BY VERDICT.

When a demurrer has been interposed for such a defect, it is neither waived nor cured by the verdict.

3. WASTE (§ 12*)—WHEN ACTION MAINTAINABLE—RIGHTS OF REMAINDERMAN.

Trespass on the case in the nature of an action for waste may be maintained by a reversioner, vested with the remainder in fee simple, against the life tenant, for injury done to the estate in remainder by the cutting of timber on the land.

4. DEEDS (§ 133*)—CONSTRUCTION—NATURE OF ESTATE.

A deed by which the grantor, reserving to himself a life estate in the land, grants and conveys, to his granddaughters, for and in consideration of natural love and affection and $5 in money, "the remainder in fee simple after the life estate therein" of himself, vests a present estate in remainder in the grantees.

Error to Circuit Court, Greenbrier County.

Action by Cora McGlamery and others against James W. Jackson. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Henry Gilmer, for plaintiff in error.
Charles S. Dice, for defendants in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. In an action of trespass on the case for timber cut and removed from certain land, Cora McGlamery and Josie Winifred McGlamery, claiming estates in remainder in the land, recovered a judgment for $637, against James W. Jackson, the life tenant, in the circuit court of Greenbrier county. As the declaration contains no ad damnum clause, its sufficiency was challenged by demurrer, and, the demurrer having been overruled, there was a motion in arrest of judgment, because of the defect in the declaration, which motion was likewise overruled.

Propriety of the remedy is not denied; but, if it were, that question has been settled. An action of trespass on the case in the nature of an action for waste is available to the reversioner against the life tenant. Rogers v. Boom & Driving Co., 41 W. Va. 593, 23 S. E. 919, 26 S. E. 1008; Moses v. Old Dominion Co., 75 Va. 95.

If there had been no demurrer to the declaration, the verdict would have cured the defect, or, to be more accurate, the defect would be harmless because the declaration could be amended by the writ, which is treated as a part of the record for purposes of amendment. Stevens v. White, 2 Wash. (Va.) 203; Palmer v. Mill, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 502; Hook v. Turnbull, 6 Call (Va.) 85. As the declaration is susceptible of amendment by the record, it is plausibly insisted that the defect is not prejudicial; but this reasoning carries on its face an admission of the materiality of the omitted matter. If the ad damnum clause were mere matter of form and not of substance, no amendment would be necessary. The omission thereof could be ignored on a demurrer. As an amendment is necessary, in order to make the declaration sustain the judgment, it necessarily follows that the allegation, when in, is one of substance. Therefore it is not dispensed with by section 20 of chapter 125 of the Code of 1900, saying the court shall not regard, on demurrer, any defect or imperfection in the declaration, unless there be omitted something so essential to the action that judgment according to law and the very right of the cause cannot be given. Injury and damage constitute the very gist or gravamen of an action of trespass on the case, just as the promise constitutes the basis of an action of assumpsit. The claim of damages may perform a very important function. It apprises the defendant of the amount of the claim. If it be but a hundred dollars, he may not wish to defend; but, if it be a thousand dollars, he may desire to do so. Whatever the reason may be for its materiality, no decision of this court or the Virginia court goes so far as to authorize omission of the ad damnum clause. On the contrary, its materiality is admitted and confessed in the assertion that the effect of its omission can be cured by amendment. Moreover, none of them say it can be disregarded on demurrer. If there had been no demurrer, the defect would be cured by section 3 of chapter 134, saying no judgment shall be reversed for any defect, imperfection, or omission which might have been taken advantage of on a demurrer but was not so taken advantage of.

In Craighill v. Page, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 446, 457, Judge Tucker said: "It is not necessary to lay damages in the declaration in an action of debt." This may be true, inasmuch as the declaration in debt demands a certain sum of money, and the gist of the action is nonpayment thereof. For this reason, it may be distinguished from trespass on the case and others sounding in damages, wherefore the decision is not a precedent for the omission in one of this class. Allison v. Bank, 6 Rand. (Va.) 204, relied upon here, was also an action of debt. In 5 Ency. Pl. & Pr. p. 707, a number of decisions are cited for the proposition that the declaration can always be amended as to the damages by the writ, and that therefore the defect is unavailing in an appellate court; but an examination of these decisions shows that none of them were actions of trespass on the case. Some were actions of assumpsit and treated very much like actions of debt. Farley's Adm'r v. Nelse, 4 Ala. 185; Proctor v. Crozier, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 268. One was an action of debt. McWhorter v. Standifer, 2 Port. (Ala.) 519. Others approve and justify the allowance of amendment by the trial court before judgment, in respect to such defect. Eaton v. Case, 17 R. I. 429, 22 Atl. 943; Merrill v. Curtis, 57 Me. 152; Burleigh & Co. v. Merrill, 49 N. H. 35. In some of these cases, there was no demurrer, and the defect was declared to have been cured by the statute of jeofails. Like our own decisions, all of these assert the materiality of the allegation of damages, by declaring the necessity of an amendment to supply the omission thereof, or waiver by failure to demur on account thereof. In those instances in which demurrers have been interposed, the ad damnum clause has been held to be matter of substance. Brownson v. Wallace, 4

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Blatchf. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 2042; Deveau v. Skidmore, 47 Conn. 19; Sedberry v. Verplank (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 242; Goodall v. Harrison, 2 Mo. 153; May v. Bank, 9 Ind. 235; Webb v. Thompson, 23 Ind. 431.

That the amendment can be made by the record, when a demurrer has been interposed and erroneously overruled, as easily as when the objection was not so made, constitutes a strong argument against reversal for such omission, it must be admitted; but there has been no waiver of the defect, nor has the amendment been made. The defendant was entitled to a sufficient declaration before proceeding to trial, and could have compelled dismissal of the action for lack thereof, on refusal to amend. He did everything in his power to avail himself of this right and it was denied to him. In view of this, we do not see how he can be precluded from insisting upon it here. The motion in arrest of judgment should have been sustained.

As the case may come up for trial on an amended declaration, it becomes necessary to pass upon another objection, namely, that the plaintiffs, having no right to possession of the land, since they take in remainder after a life estate, under the deed conferring their title, cannot recover damages for timber cut from the land. A remainderman can recover damages for injury done to his estate. Jordan v. City of Benwood, 42 W. Va. 312, 26 S. E. 266, 36 L. R. A. 519, 57 Am. St. Rep. 859.

It is also urged that the deed does not vest any present estate in the plaintiffs. The defendant is the grantor therein. For and in consideration of natural love and affection and $5 in hand paid, he conveyed the land to the plaintiffs, his granddaughters, subject to a life estate reserved to himself. The granting clause is as follows: "The party of the first part does by these presents grant and convey unto the said party of the second part the following real estate, viz.: The remainder in fee simple after the life estate therein of the said James W. Jackson, which he hereby expressly reserves, in one hundred and thirty acres of land, a portion of said James W. Jackson's home place." After the description of the premises, a clause was inserted by which the grantor covenanted for good title and right to convey and against incumbrances, and warranted the title generally. The deed was acknowledged and admitted to record. The contention that it does not vest any present estate in the grantees, but is in fact a testamentary paper, intended to have no effect and to pass no title until after the death of the grantor, cannot be sustained, in view of what is said in Lauck v. Logan, 45 W. Va. 251, 31 S. E. 986, of a deed containing a clause purporting to limit the effect thereof until after the death of the grantor. Here an estate is granted by words, purporting to make it take effect at once, and unattended by any inconsistent clause or terms. The intent to pass an estate in present is clear beyond the shadow of doubt.

For the reasons stated, the judgment will be reversed, the verdict set aside, the demurrer sustained, and the case remanded, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend their declaration.

THACKER COAL & COKE CO. v. NORFOLK & W. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 3, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COMMERCE (§ 89*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE — SCHEDULE OF RATES — JURISDICTION OF STATE COURT.

A court of equity of this state has no jurisdiction to enjoin a railroad company engaged in interstate transportation from filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission a schedule of its rates for transportation of coal from a point in this state to a point in another state, on the ground that such rates are unreasonable, unfair, and discriminatory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

2. COMMERCE (§ 85*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE — POWER OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

It is the exclusive power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the first instance, to pass on the fairness and reasonableness of rates contained in the schedule of rates fixed by an interstate carrier on articles transported in interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 138; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mingo County.

Bill by the Thacker Coal & Coke Company against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Vinson & Thompson, for appellant. Holt & Duncan, Joseph I. Doran, and Theodore W. Reath, for appellee.

BRANNON, J. The Thacker Coal & Coke Company brought a suit in equity in the circuit court of Mingo county against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company to enjoin the railroad company from filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission a schedule of rate charges for transportation of coal from the mines of the coal company, in the state of West Virginia, to points on the lakes in the state of Ohio and other states, which schedule increased the rates over those existing; the railroad company alleging that lower rates were accorded to other railroad carriers carrying coal from Pennsylvania and Ohio in competition with West Virginia coal, and that the rates proposed by such schedule were discriminatory, unjust, and unreasonable, and would entail irreparable injury and probable ruin upon the Thacker Coal Company. Upon its bill a temporary injunction was granted, and, this injunction having been dissolved, the Thacker Coal Company appeals.

The case is one purely of interstate commerce. Its solution rests upon that act of Congress known as the "Interstate commerce act." U. S. Comp. St. 1901, vol. 3, p. 3153. We must follow federal decision upon this act. We know that the great subject of interstate commerce has been committed to the power, the vast power, of Congress by that provision of the national Constitution declaring that "the Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states." Under this grant of power was passed the interstate commerce act, touching, controlling, and regulating, to large extent, and in material respects, commerce passing state lines. A leading feature of that act, one controlling this case, is that it establishes a commission of weighty jurisdiction over interstate commerce, a jurisdiction to supervise, regulate, we may say dictate, interstate commerce, called in the act the "Interstate Commerce Commission," and it gives carriers engaged in such commerce right to fix rates in the first instance, and requires them to do so, and to print schedules of such rates, and file the schedules with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and requires the carrier to conform to the rates fixed in such schedule under severe penalties for over or discriminative charge. The act, in section 13, gives any one complaining of anything done or omitted by a carrier to his injury in contravention of the act, right to file a complaint with the commission stating the wrong, and provides for notice to the carrier and a full hearing of the complaint, and section 15 provides that if upon such hearing the commission shall be of opinion that the rates demanded or collected, or any act, regulation, or practice by the carrier touching such rates, are unjust, unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of the act, the commission shall determine what will be the just or reasonable rates to be thereafter observed, and what regulation or practice in respect to transportation is just, fair, and reasonable, to be thereafter followed, and to make an order that the carrier shall cease and desist from such violation. U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, § 15, amended page 900. Supp. 1909, p. 1158. As stated, section 13 of the original interstate commerce act gives a party injured right to complain to the commission, and section 14 gives power to investigate and make order in the premises, and section 16 as amended in 1887 gives power to the commission to render judgment that the carrier pay the party injured damages, and in case of nonpayment the party may file a bill in the United States Circuit Court to enforce the order or judgment of the commission. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8165, Supp. 1907, p. 902. Section 12 gives the commission latitudinous authority to inquire into the business of carriers, and keep itself informed of their conduct, and demand information of the carriers, and commands it to enforce all the provisions of the act, and it is given authority itself to institute legal proceedings and call upon district attorneys to prosecute proceedings, under the direction of the Attorney General, for the enforcement of the act and for punishment for its violation.

In this statement of some of the provisions of this voluminous act, we see that Congress has assumed jurisdiction over interstate commerce; that it has made regulations as to it, particularly as to the matter in hand, rates of transportation; that it has created a tribunal for testing the character and fairness of such rates, with wide powers to judge them, and with power to modify them so as to conform to right and reasonableness. We see that there is nothing more distinctly committed to the jurisdiction of this tribunal than the matter of rates—the schedule of rates. This schedule must go at once to this commission, the only authority to deal with it, at least in the first instance, if the act is obeyed; a tribunal created by Congress under its exclusive power over interstate commerce, and given a subject-matter for its action. Yet a state court is asked to grant a perpetual injunction to debar a great interstate railroad from fixing rates and filing them with the commission. A state court is asked to say that this schedule shall never reach that commission. It does seem to me that the very statement of the proposition is its own refutation. But we are not without authority to support this position. I consider that a decision of the United States Supreme Court, in principle, does so. Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Abilene Co., 204 U. S. 426, 27 Sup. Ct. 350, 51 L. Ed. 553. The Abilene Company sued the railroad company for charges claimed to be unreasonable and unjust rates, though they did not exceed the rates specified in a schedule filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was held that such schedule was final until changed by the commission. This was so because it rested with the commission to say, and the schedule was the rule until its action deprived the schedule of force. The court held that: "The interstate commerce act was intended to afford an effective and comprehensive means of redressing wrongs resulting from unjust discriminations and undue preference, and to that end placed upon carriers the duty of publishing schedules of reasonable and uniform rates; and, consistently with the provisions of that law, a shipper cannot maintain an action at common law in a state court for excessive and unreasonable freight rates exacted on interstate shipments where the rates charged were those which had been duly fixed by the carrier according to the act and had not been found to be unreasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission." This court followed the Abilene Case in Robinson v. B. & O. R. Co., 64 W. Va. 406, 63 S. E. 823. Its principle decides this case.

As will be suggested to the mind at once, and as pointed out in those cases, if such action could be maintained, then a jury and state court would hold one rate to be proper, and the commission another. Which shall prevail? If the state court's rate, then of what force the act of Congress and the judgment of the commission under it? The federal power, in a matter which nobody will deny to be within its constitutional jurisdiction, would be nullified. One state one rate, another another, the federal tribunal another, and confusion worse confounded! Just the same may be said in our case. If we stop that schedule on its way, and thus prevent any action on it by the commission, do we not nullify the act of Congress and render the jurisdiction of the commission abortive? In Central Stock Yard Co. v. L. & N. R. Co. (C. C.) 112 Fed. 823, it is held that a complaining shipper must go to the commission for relief, as the remedy given by the act through it is exclusive. So in American Union Coal Co. v. Pa. R. Co. (C. C.) 159 Fed. 278, and Great Northern Co. v. KallsPELL, 165 Fed. 25, 91 C. C. A. 63. Counsel refer to KallsPELL L. Co. v. Great Northern (C. C.) 157 Fed. 845. That was not a suit to enjoin the filing of a schedule, but against enforcement of one filed pending a decision by the commission. The cases Kiser v. Central R. Co. (C. C.) 158 Fed. 193, and Macon v. Atlantic R. R. (C. C.) 163 Fed. 738, cannot be regarded, as they were Circuit Court decisions, and contrary to the decision in the same circuit in the Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlantic Coast Line v. Macon Co., 166 Fed. 206, 92 C. C. A. 114, above. In Jewett v. Chicago Co. (C. C.) 156 Fed. 160, it is held that no injunction lies, as a court cannot pass on a rate in advance of action of the commission. This denies our right to pass on the rates involved in this case.

Counsel for the coal company say that the Abilene Case does not apply in this case; their theory being that that case was to recover damages for unfair rates imposed under established rates; that is, to recover for charges as unfair, though rates had been established by a schedule on file with the commission, and had not yet been condemned by it; whereas, this suit is to prevent the filing of a schedule of unfair rates, to arrest these rates on their way, and thus prevent their establishment. But such injunction would be for the state court to fix rates by condemning them as unjust; that would be for the state court to exercise a jurisdiction not vested in it, to pass on rates; that would be to deny the national tribunal its functions under the interstate commerce act. Judge McCormick, in delivering the opinion in Atlantic, etc., Co. v. Macon Grocery Co. (In Circuit Court of Appeals) 166 Fed. 217, 92 C. C. A. 114, thought that there would be less reason, if possible, for entertaining an injunction than an action to recover back charges. So I think, and for the reason that action to recover back is not to prevent establishment of rates, not stopping the commission from action; whereas, an injunction would forestall all action by the commission, and deprive the public and carrier of the benefit of the schedule. It would be a tedious, protracted litigation, a barrier to urgent commerce. But we are not without authority for the particular question of this case, that no injunction lies to arrest a carrier from filing its rate schedule with the commission. The case just mentioned is one wherein the Circuit Court of Appeals held that shippers cannot maintain a suit in equity to prevent the filing or enforcement of a schedule of rates. The case of Columbus Iron & Steel Co. v. Kanawha & Michigan Co. (C. C.) 171 Fed. 713, is a case in which the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of West Virginia denied a shipper an injunction to prevent a railroad company from filing with the commission its schedule of rates, on the principle that it must first go before that commission for its action. I shall only refer to the able and laborious opinion filed in that case by Judge Keller as a strong support for the position which we hold. Judge Keller's decree was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fourth Circuit, February 14, 1910.¹ An advance opinion written by Judge Pritchard is before me in which he approves strongly the following conclusion enunciated in Judge Keller's opinion: "I conclude, therefore, that a proper construction of the act of February 4, 1887, forbids the exercise of jurisdiction in a case like the present, because it is inconsistent with the purposes of that act as expressed therein, and as construed and expounded by the Supreme Court of the United States in the leading cases of Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U. S. 426 [27 Sup. Ct. 350, 51 L. Ed. 553]; Southern Ry. Co. v. Tift, 206 U. S. 428 [27 Sup. Ct. 709, 51 L. Ed. 1124]." And Judge Pritchard says: "This is a clear and concise statement of the question to be determined. In other words, is the relief sought by the appellant compatible with the act to regulate commerce? Does the interstate commerce act, as it now stands, contemplate that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have, primarily, exclusive jurisdiction over matters pertaining to fixing rates and determining as to whether the rates filed by the railroads are fair and just? From an examination of the interstate commerce act it is apparent that the carrier alone can initiate the proposed rate. A rate thus proposed, after having been filed in the office of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the term of 30 days, becomes effective, and at that time the Interstate Commerce Commission assumes complete jurisdiction over the subject-matter. It has been repeatedly held that the fixing of rates is a legislative and not a judicial function, and, in this instance, Congress has provided that the carrier shall, in the first instance, establish the rate. In the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 101 Fed. 779, 42 C. C. A. 12, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit passed upon this question. The fourth section of the syllabus in that case reads as follows: "It is not within the legitimate province of a court of equity, in a controversy between interstate carriers and shippers, to interpose and fix a maximum freight rate, either upon an independent consideration of what is a reasonable charge or by relation to some other rate then or theretofore in force, and thereupon enjoin the carrier from demanding more than the rate so established, inasmuch as such an order effectually deprives an interstate carrier of the right to fix its rates in the first instance, and to change the same, which power, as it seems, is conceded to the carrier by the interstate commerce act." The judge then made an extensive extract from the case of B. & O. R. Co. v. United States ex rel. Pitcairn (decided by the Supreme Court January 10, 1910) 215 U. S. 481, 30 Sup. Ct. 164, 54 L. Ed. —, as supporting the decisions.

The Circuit Court of Appeals on the same date in two other cases held the same. Houston Coal & Coke Co. v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 178 Fed. 266, and Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 178 Fed. 266. I here refer to B. & O. R. Co. v. U. S. ex rel. Pitcairn Coal Co. (decided by the Supreme Court of the United States January 10, 1910) supra, holding the same doctrine. Great reliance is placed by counsel for the coal company upon the case of Southern Ry. Co. v. Tift, 206 U. S. 428, 27 Sup. Ct. 706, 51 L. Ed. 1124. We find in its syllabus that, "Although an action at law for damages to recover unreasonable railroad rates which have been exacted in accordance with the schedule of rates as filed is forbidden by the interstate commerce act (Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Co., 204 U. S. 426 [27 Sup. Ct. 350, 51 L. Ed. 553]), the Circuit Court may entertain jurisdiction of a bill in equity to restrain the filing or enforcement of a schedule of unreasonable rates or a change to unjust or unreasonable rates." The question presented in this case was not before the court, and the matter contained in that syllabus was not decided, and the proposition is erroneous. The opinion said, after referring to the Abilene Case: "We are not required to say, however, because an action at law for damages to recover unreasonable rates which have been exacted in accordance with the schedule of rates as filed is forbidden by the interstate commerce act, a suit in equity is also forbidden to prevent a filing or enforcement of unreasonable rates or a change to unjust or unreasonable rates." That was no express decision that an injunction would lie to prevent the filing of the schedule. It was not necessary to decide it in the case. It will be seen in Judge Keller's opinion in the Columbus Coal Company Case, supra, that he regards this Tift Case as supporting the proposition that an injunction will not lie to arrest the filing of a schedule with the commission. I so regard the Tift Case when properly construed. The force attributed to the Tift Case cannot be sustained in view of the comment upon it by the United States Supreme Court in B. & O. Co. v. U. S. ex rel. Pitcairn (January 10, 1910) supra; the opinion saying: "Nor is there anything in the contention that the decision in Southern R. Co. v. Tift, 206 U. S. 428 [27 Sup. Ct. 706, 51 L. Ed. 1124], qualifies the ruling in the Abilene Case, and is an authority supporting the right to resort to the courts in advance of the action by the commission for relief against unreasonable rates or unjust discriminatory practices which, from their nature, primarily require action by the commission." I would also refer to the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Ill. Central R. Co. (decided by the United States Supreme Court January 10, 1910) 215 U. S. 452, 30 Sup. Ct. 155, 54 L. Ed. —, as supporting our position. It is useless to prolong this opinion by further reference to these cases, as they are accessible to all.

Brief of counsel relies upon the claim of unlawful combination between the Norfolk & Western Company and other railroads as contrary to the Sherman anti-trust law; but we do not think that that act will sustain this injunction bill. It seems that a person injured by a conspiracy contrary to that act may recover damages; but he cannot have an injunction, as that is a remedy to be used only by the government. Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 194 U. S. 48, 24 Sup. Ct. 598, 48 L. Ed. 870. This principle will be sustained by Southern Ind. Express Co. v. U. S. Express Co. (C. C.) 88 Fed. 659, affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, 92 Fed. 1022, 35 C. C. A. 172. See, also, Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Miami S. S. Co., 86 Fed. 407, 30 C. C. A. 142, and Greer, Mills & Co. v. Stoller (C. C.) 77 Fed. 1.

RYAN et al. v. NUCE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONTRACTING WRITTEN CONTRACT.

A contract when reduced to writing becomes the repository of the common intentions of the parties, all prior or contemporaneous negotiations becoming merged therein, and it can not be contradicted by extrinsic evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1719, 2030; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 37*)—PLEADING—OFFER TO RESTORE BENEFITS.

A bill to cancel a contract for fraud in its procurement should as a general rule allege plaintiff's willingness and ability to do so, and tender to defendants all property and rights derived under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 37*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—PLEADING.

As a general rule a bill to cancel a contract for fraud in its procurement should specifically allege the facts constituting the fraud; and where false representations are relied on such representations must not only be averred, but it must also be alleged that they were in fact false, were relied on by plaintiff and that plaintiff did not know the falsity thereof, and was injured thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. EQUITY (§ 362*)—AMENDMENT TO BILL—DISMISSAL.

Where a good case for relief is shown by the evidence but the facts are not sufficiently pleaded in the bill, the court should not dismiss the bill without first giving plaintiff an opportunity to amend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. § 759; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monongalia County.

Bill by Ross F. Ryan and others against David C. Nuce and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Lazelle & Stewart and M. E. Gorman, for appellants. C. C. Rose, for appellees.

MILLER, J. Ross F. and Rebecca Ryan, by their bill seek cancellation and annulment of a contract, made December 7, 1906, with David C. Nuce, whereby, in consideration of one hundred and fifty dollars, evidenced by their three notes, each for fifty dollars, made payable to Nuce's wife, in four, eight and twelve months respectively, with interest, Nuce undertook to grant to plaintiffs "the sole and exclusive right to sell 'Lotts Steam Washer' in Monongalia county, W. Va., during the life of the patent and all improvements thereon, and to purchase same at the regular wholesale price of $5.00, $6.00 and $8.00 each from the Chicago Hardware Foundry Company, North Chicago, Illinois." The bill also prays that plaintiffs have judgment for the amount of their notes mentioned in the contract, and a note for $12.00 given Nuce by Ryan, growing out of the same transaction, on which latter note the bill alleges suit was then pending against Ryan before a justice, and that said suit be enjoined.

The ground of relief is that defendant, David C. Nuce, by fraud and fraudulent representations induced and procured plaintiffs to enter into said contract, and to execute said notes. The particular acts of fraud relied on, but we think not sufficiently pleaded, are, first, that before and at the time of entering into said contract, Nuce, to induce plaintiffs to enter into said contract, falsely and fraudulently represented to them that he owned the right to sell said washers in Preston county, and agreed to give plaintiffs the right to sell in a certain part of that county also, but that after plaintiffs had sold some machines there and ordered them shipped from Chicago, to fill these orders, they learned by letter, alleged to be exhibited with the bill, but not found in the record, that Nuce did not own the right to sell said washers in Preston county, and that such right was owned by other parties; second, that as a further inducement to plaintiffs to enter into said contract said Nuce also falsely and fraudulently represented to them that he had procured four certain contracts in writing with other persons for the sale and purchase of said washers, which he exhibited, and agreed to and did turn over to plaintiffs, and which he falsely and fraudulently represented were as good as the money, and that all that was necessary for them to do was to deliver the washers and receive the money; but they allege that on presentation of said contracts to the parties whose names were signed thereto, three of them, Anderson, Brushel and Mundell pronounced them forgeries, and each refused to take the washers; third, that as another inducement to enter into said contract said Nuce gave plaintiffs the names of twelve prospective buyers, representing to them that he had talked to all, and to all of them washers could be sold, but they charge that a part of said prospective purchasers when seen by them represented that they had not seen Nuce, nor talked to him on the subject; that to one of them, Otto Sigwart, Nuce, after the contract with plaintiffs, had sold a machine and himself had collected the money therefor.

With respect to said $12.00 note it is alleged that plaintiff Ross F. Ryan was induced to execute said note to said David C. Nuce by the false representation of said Nuce, shortly after ordering twelve machines, that said hardware company required an advance of one dollar on each machine, which said Nuce loaned to plaintiff and took his note therefor.

Defendants did not demur to, but answered the bill. The answer we think substantially denies all the material allegations of the bill, except that allegation respecting the four contracts in writing for machines turned over to plaintiff, and if the facts in relation thereto were well pleaded in the bill we think plaintiffs on the evidence would be entitled to relief.

While the bill charges that these four contracts were turned over to plaintiffs to induce them to enter into said contract, and that the persons whose names were signed thereto, denied signing the same, the bill does not distinctly allege that these persons did not in fact sign said contracts, or that the alleged representations of the defendant Nuce were false, or that plaintiffs were at the time of entering into said contract ignorant of the facts, and relied on the false representations of said Nuce. The same general criticism will apply to other allegations of the bill relied on, one of which, however, that relating to the right to sell machines in Preston county, we do not think presents good ground for the relief. The right to sell in Preston county is not covered by the contract. Nuce denies that he sold or proposed to sell that county or any part of it. Plaintiffs admit the subject was discussed prior to the execution of the contract, and that he knew it was not covered by contract before he signed it. The contract having been afterwards reduced to writing became the repository of the common intentions, and all prior or contemporaneous negotiations become merged into it, and it can not now be contradicted by extrinsic evidence. Home Gas Co. v. Window Glass Co., 63 W. Va. 286, 61 S. E. 329; Page on Cont. § 1189.

A question presented by the evidence, but not specifically covered by the pleadings, is whether defendant Nuce did not undertake to sell plaintiff what he had no right to sell him, namely, the exclusive right to sell in Monongalia county "during the life of the patent, and all improvements thereon." He exhibits with his answer his contract with the patentee and manufacturer. As we now see it his contract was a mere agency, authorizes him to sell and to appoint sub-agents, and on whose sales he was to have a commission. This contract by its terms, however, if certain conditions therein were broken, was terminable at the end of a year. Where then did Nuce get his right to sell plaintiffs the exclusive right to sell during the life of the patent and all improvements thereon? We do not decide the question but in view of the disposition we shall make of the case we suggest it in furtherance of the ends of justice, and to avoid unnecessary litigation.

The bill is also defective we think in failing to tender to defendant Nuce all the property and benefits derived under the contract, particularly pay for the washer and wringer previously purchased, the contract for which was surrendered to them at the time the contract they ask to have cancelled was made. The evidence of Ryan shows that he is willing on cancellation of his contract and notes to make proper restitution to defendant, but the bill does not allege this as we think it should. Hogg's Eq. Prin. § 60; Worthington v. Collins, 39 W. Va. 406, 19 S. E. 527; Christian v. Vance, 41 W. Va. 754, 24 S. E. 596; Engeman v. Taylor, 46 W. Va. 669, 713, 33 S. E. 922.

Generally a bill to cancel or rescind a written contract on the ground of fraud in its procurement must specifically allege the facts constituting the fraud. And the authorities hold that where false representations are relied on such representations must not only be averred, but it must also be averred that they were in fact false, were relied on by plaintiff and that plaintiff did not know of the falsity of the false representation, and was injured thereby. 1 Hogg, Eq. Proc. § 115; Burley v. Weller, 14 W. Va. 264, 273. The bill in this case plainly does not come up to these requirements.

We take it from the saving in favor of plaintiffs in the decree appealed from, the court below dismissed the bill on the theory that there was adequate remedy at law, and that equity did not have jurisdiction to grant relief. If so we think the court was in error. Cancellation of instruments because of fraud is a specific ground of equitable jurisdiction. Hogg's Eq. Pr. § 48, and many cases cited. In Nease v. Insurance Co., 32 W. Va. 283, 9 S. E. 234, Judge Snyder says: "The well settled general rule, that equity has no jurisdiction, where there is a plain and adequate remedy at law, does not of itself afford a sufficient test of the jurisdiction. * * * It is safe to say however, that, where it is doubtful, whether or not there is an adequate and complete remedy at law, a court of equity will take jurisdiction." Hogg's Eq. Pr. § 3. To deny equity jurisdiction because of remedy at law the legal remedy must not be partial, but must be adequate, and as complete and efficacious as that given by equity. Corney v. Barnes, 56 W. Va. 581, 49 S. E. 423. We do not think plaintiffs' remedy at law as adequate and complete as in equity. Besides the contract there are their notes outstanding, which the evidence we think shows are simply in the bank for collection, and if still owned or under the control of defendants should along with the contract be surrendered and cancelled. A court of equity, all parties being before it, may in one suit dispose of all matters involved and put an end to litigation.

The bill being defective, however, in the particulars indicated, but the evidence showing good grounds for relief, should the court have dismissed the bill? We think not, without giving plaintiffs an opportunity to amend their bill so as to present by pleadings the case as proven. For such error we may reverse the decree, remand the cause, and give the plaintiffs leave to amend their bill. Blue v. Campbell, 57 W. Va. 34, 49 S. E. 909; Lamb v. Laughlin, 25 W. Va. 300; Doonan v. Glynn, 26 W. Va. 225, 228; Gilchrist v. Oil Co., 21 W. Va. 115, 45 Am. Rep. 555; Van Winkle v. Blackford, 33 W. Va. 573, 11 S. E. 26; Rigg v. Parsons, 29 W. Va. 522, 2 S. E. 81.

Being of opinion that a case calling for relief is shown in the evidence we will reverse the decree below and remand the cause, giving leave to plaintiffs to amend, if they desire to do so.

STATE v. BARKLEY.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.

For syllabus, see State v. Miller, 66 W. Va. 436, 66 S. E. 522.[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Jackson County.

W. H. Barkley was indicted for an illegal sale of liquor. From an acquittal, the State brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., and D. E. Matthews, for the State.

BRANNON, J. In the circuit court of Jackson county seven indictments were found against W. H. Barkley for selling intoxicating liquors and soliciting and receiving orders for sale of such liquors. A jury was waived and all the cases submitted to the court upon facts agreed between the parties, and the court acquitted the defendant and rendered one judgment in all the cases finding the defendant not guilty and discharging him from the indictments. The facts agreed show that Barkley sold no liquor in Jackson county, but that in September, 1905, he did solicit and receive orders from seven persons in that county for the sale to each of one gallon of liquor; he acting only as solicitor or agent for the Old Cannery Company, a company engaged in selling liquor in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, and that the orders were sent to the Cannery Company, and that the liquors were to be and were shipped from Cincinnati to the purchasing parties in Jackson county. No license appears.

The cases are controlled and governed by the case of State v. Miller, 66 W. Va. 436, 66 S. E. 522. We reverse the said judgment of the circuit court, and find upon the facts agreed that the defendant is guilty as charged in the indictments. We cannot here render final judgment, because we do not consider that this court should fix the punishment to be imposed upon the defendant, and therefore we remand the cases, and each of them, to the circuit court of Jackson county, with direction to that court to fix the punishment therefor in each of the cases, and render judgment in favor of the state.

Error to Circuit Court of Kanawha County.

Action by J. Q. Barker and others, partners, as the Kanawha Hardwood Company, against Samuel Stephenson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

S. B. Avis, J. W. Kennedy, and Morgan Owen, for plaintiffs in error. Chilton, McCorkle & Chilton, for defendants in error.

MILLER, J. Plaintiffs, as Kanawha Hardwood Company, sued defendants in trover and conversion for the value of about 250,000 feet of lumber, which, they allege, while they were in the actual possession thereof and in the act of branding and inspecting the same, defendants with force and arms and without their consent and against their protest seized, carried away and converted to their own use, damaging them in the sum of $15,000.

On the trial, concluded March 17, 1906, defendants offering no evidence, the court below, on motion of defendants excluded the plaintiffs' evidence and directed a verdict for defendants. Plaintiffs excepted, and moved the court to set aside said verdict and grant them a new trial, which motion was overruled, they again excepted. No judgment, however, was pronounced on the verdict until the September term following, when on October 6, 1906, plaintiffs moved the court to arrest the judgment. This motion being overruled, they again excepted, and final judgment was then pronounced that plaintiffs take nothing by their action, and that defendants go hence without day and recover their costs. Plaintiffs again excepted, and were given thirty days from the rising of the court within which to prepare and have signed proper bills of exception.

A term of court having been begun according to law before the thirty days expired, the bills of exception were not signed and made a part of the record in vacation, but the record shows that by an order entitled in the cause, entered December 12, 1906, in term, plaintiffs tendered their bills of exception numbered one and two, which were signed, sealed and certified, and properly identified and ordered to be made parts of the record.

Defendants interpose two objections here to a consideration of the case upon its merits. First, that judgment of March 17, 1906, directing a verdict, and overruling plaintiffs' motion to set aside that verdict and grant them a new trial, was a final judgment, and that no bills of exception having been taken or signed during that term, or within thirty days after the adjournment thereof, the court was without jurisdiction thereafter to certify the evidence, and make the same a part of the record. Second, that if wrong in their first contention, the statute, section 9, c. 131, Code 1906, giving the court in vacation, within thirty days after adjournment of the term, authority to make up and sign bills of exception and certify the same, is exclusive, and that a special or a regular term occurring within thirty days after such adjournment cuts off the time given by statute and precludes the court at a succeeding special or regular term from any action on such bills of exception.

The first proposition is specifically negatived by numerous decisions of this court: Damron v. Ferguson, 32 W. Va. 33, 9 S. E. 39; Hannah v. Bank, 53 W. Va. 82, 44 S. E. 152; Bank v. Bee, 60 W. Va. 386, 55 S. E. 380; De Armit v. Town of Whitmer, 63 W. Va. 300, 60 S. E. 136; Kirk v. Camden Interstate Ry. Co., 66 S. E. 683. The judgment of March 17, 1906, was not final. It contained no judgment of nisi capiat; therefore no writ of error would lie thereto. Kirk v. Camden Interstate Ry. Co., supra, citing Riley v. Jarvis, 43 W. Va. 44, 26 S. E. 366; Parsons v. Snider, 42 W. Va. 517, 26 S. E. 285; Buehler v. Chevront, 15 W. Va. 479. The statute (section 1, c. 135, Code 1906) gives no right to a writ of error in cases like this except to a final judgment. The ninth clause thereof does give a writ of error to a judgment granting a new trial, but none is given from a judgment or order overruling a motion for a new trial. Until there has been a final judgment or decree, from which an appeal or writ of error will lie, the whole matter of controversy remains in the breast of the court. Wickes v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 14 W. Va. 157, 105, citing 1 Rob. (Old) Pract. 638, and 3 Tho. Co. Lit. 323. Until such final judgment a complete trial has not been had. Section 2, c. 159, Code 1906, provides that "a person indicted for felony shall be personally present during the trial therefor." In State v. Stevenson, 64 W. Va. 392, 399, 62 S. E. 688, following State v. Parsons, 39 W. Va. 464, 19 S. E. 876, we held this meant from arraignment to judgment inclusive.

But it is argued on the authority of Crowe v. Corporation of Charles Town, 62 W. Va. 91, 57 S. E. 330, and Jordan v. Jordan, 48 W. Va. 600, 37 S. E. 556, that the trial was had at the term at which the order of March 17, 1906, was entered, and that according to these decisions the court was without jurisdiction, except during that term or within thirty days after its adjournment, to make up and sign bills of exception. The first point of the syllabus of Crowe v. Charles Town does say: "Bills of exceptions are required to be signed at the term at which the trial is had, or within thirty days after the adjournment thereof, and after the expiration of such time, there is no jurisdiction to sign such bills." But Jordan v. Jordan, as do many previous decisions, decides that bills of exception may be signed, either during the term at which final judgment is rendered or within thirty days after its close. State v. Strayer, 58 W. Va. 676, 52 S. E. 862; Wetly v. Campbell, 37 W. Va. 797, 802, 17 S. E. 312; State v. McGlumphy, 37 W. Va. 806, 17 S. E. 315; Griffith v. Corrothers, 42 W. Va. 59, 24 S. E. 569. The case of Crowe v. Charles Town does not mean to depart from the prior decisions. Manifestly it was intended simply to reaffirm the rule of the previous decisions. "At the term at which the trial is had" according to Jordan v. Jordan, and the other decisions, means at the term at which final judgment was rendered.

The second proposition has been fully negatived by two decisions at the present term, not yet officially reported, namely, Layne v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 67 S. E. 1103, and Jacobs v. Williams, 67 S. E. 1113. Point one of the syllabus of the first case holds: "Bills of exception may be signed, certified and made a part of the record of a trial, at any time within thirty days after the adjournment of the term at which the judgment in the action was rendered, either in vacation or in a special or regular subsequent term of the court, occurring within said period of thirty days." Point four of the syllabus of the latter case is as follows: "Intervention of a special term in the thirty day period, allowed for taking bills of exception after adjournment, does not shorten said period nor deprive the court or judge of power to allow such bills. Within said period, they may be allowed either in court or in vacation." We must dispose of the case, therefore, on its merits.

Did the court err in excluding the plaintiffs' evidence and directing a verdict for defendants? The lumber in controversy, or that which it represents, was manufactured by defendants from timber taken from a tract of land originally containing something over ten thousand acres. This tract was in 1868, by decree of the federal court, partitioned among the owners, five thousand acres thereof falling to those under whom defendants claim, and a triangular piece containing, exclusive of claims of prior occupants, about 1320 acres, and designated on the plat and in the record as the "Cole and Chapman" tract, going to Maria Byrne, under whom plaintiffs claim. The controversy here does not seem to involve title, but the true location of the original dividing line between the Byrne, or Cole and Chapman 1320 acres, and the five thousand acres, designated on the plat of surveyor Mathews, who made the survey in the partition suit, as the line "F. L. D." Mathews was a witness for plaintiffs on the trial and was examined and cross-examined with reference to the true location of this line as reported to the court in said partition suit. He proved what seems to be conceded, that his report called for eight dogwoods at the corner at "F"; "thence north 33° west 575 poles crossing same branch of Coal Fork to a white oak and black oak in a line of the Banks survey at D." Mathews swears positively that the eight dogwoods found on the ground by Johnson, one of plaintiffs' vendors, from the information furnished by him, and afterwards shown to him, are the identical dogwoods called for in his report in the partition suit, and are located on the ground at the point claimed by plaintiffs as the corner at "F." Other witnesses, including Johnson himself, corroborate Mathews on this material fact. It is conceded that if this line is where plaintiffs claim it, this lumber, or that which it represents, was the product of timber belonging to them or to Burdett Brothers and Johnson, their immediate vendors. Evidence was brought out on cross-examination of plaintiffs' witnesses tending to show that plaintiffs, or their immediate vendors, had recognized another line, substantially the line claimed by defendants as the true dividing line between the five thousand acre tract and the Cole and Chapman 1,320 acre tract, but it is explained by them that this was merely a trial line run when they were trying to find the correct line.

The timber from which the lumber in controversy was manufactured is the same as that involved in the chancery cause of Stephenson & Coon v. Burdett, and others, decided here in October, 1904, and reported in 56 W. Va. 109, 48 S. E. 846, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748. In that case jurisdiction in equity to determine the matters in controversy was denied and injunctions obtained by both parties were dissolved, and the bill and answer on which the injunction had been awarded were dismissed and relief denied. Pending that suit in the court below, two orders in evidence in this case, were made therein in June, 1902, the last being a consent order in modification of the first. By the first order the plaintiffs therein, Stephenson & Coon, on their motion and upon a bond of $20,000, with security, and conditioned as prescribed, were authorized to proceed with the manufacture and sale of the timber and lumber covered by the temporary injunction theretofore awarded upon the answer of Burdett Brothers and Johnson, and instead of paying the proceeds thereof to the parties designated in a prior agreement as trustees, to pay the same into the hands of the general receiver of the court. The second order provided that the "plaintiffs shall leave on the mill yard of A. W. Moses, manufactured and in condition for market and properly" assorted, stacked and sticked, 250,000 feet of lumber coming off the territory in dispute as between plaintiffs and defendants Burdetts and Johnson, or to be substituted for lumber coming off said disputed territory by lumber from elsewhere said 250,000 feet of lumber to be of like kinds, grades, and of equal market value in the average, as that taken from said disputed territory, said 250,000 feet to be left and to be and remain on said mill yard subject to the defendant's said injunction, and to the future order of the court; but nothing either in the said order entered on the ——— day of June, 1902, as aforesaid, or in this order, shall be construed as deciding or affecting in any wise, any question or rights as between plaintiffs and defendants Burdetts and Johnson, or of any of the parties to this suit, on the merits of the case; any violation of the terms of this order on the part of plaintiffs shall be taken and construed as a violation of said defendants Burdetts and Johnson injunction heretofore awarded against the plaintiffs in this cause." It was clearly contemplated by the parties to this agreement that their rights would be adjudicated in that cause. But the court denying jurisdiction in equity to do so, and the bill being dismissed the parties were thereby left to their legal rights.

The plaintiffs in the present action claim right and title to the lumber in controversy derived immediately from Burdett Brothers and Johnson by contract in writing dated October 28, 1901; also by a verbal contract, the exact date of which is not shown, but confessedly after the 250,000 feet had been cut and stacked on the mill yard, and before the decision of said chancery suit by this court. By the original or written contract in evidence Burdett Bros. & Johnson, after reciting their purchase from Cole and Chapman, of a certain boundary of timber on Coal Fork branch of Cabin Creek, and that they were desirous of selling the product of said timber, of the kinds and grades thereafter mentioned to the plaintiffs, thereby, in consideration of one dollar and other valuable considerations thereafter mentioned, sold and agreed to deliver to them on board cars Kanawha Railway Company, the poplar, red and white oak, basswood, ash and yellow lin of the grades and at the prices therein named, and not necessary to recite herein. This contract further provided that the prices named were subject to a discount of two per cent for cash, when loaded on cars by order of the purchasers, but that should they desire said lumber to remain on stick longer than should be necessary for it to dry, then the value of such lumber was to be estimated in car lots of each grade and thickness and payment made, subject, however, to final measurement and grade when loaded on cars at the time of shipment, said lumber to be cut to their order as to length and thickness, and should the sellers desire it the contract provided that they should have the privilege of disposing of their cull oak and poplar for local building purposes.

The oral contract, as testified by Barker, who signed the written contract on behalf of plaintiffs, covered the 250,000 feet of lumber on the mill yard. He says plaintiffs were thereby to take the lumber, accept it on the yard, and that while there engaged in grading, measuring and branding it, and after they had been thus engaged with their inspector from Thursday to some day in the following week, defendants, Stephenson and Coon, with their men went upon the mill yard and seized the lumber. Barker seems to admit, however, that neither their written contract nor their oral contract covered all the lumber to be taken off the land, but only certain grades specified in the written contract. On the other hand J. F. Burdett, one of the vendors, and a witness for plaintiffs, states that there was no modification of the written contract by the oral, except that plaintiffs were to take and accept the lumber on the mill yard in place of delivering it on the cars, and he explains that the written contract covered or was intended to cover all the lumber that was to be manufactured from the land, to be paid for according to the prices stipulated for the different grades.

No deeds showing title to the land or the various boundary lines thereof were offered in evidence. Plaintiffs apparently relied on the common source of title, their written and alleged oral contract for the timber and lumber, shown in evidence, and the evidence introduced by them on the true location of the division line between the two tracts of land, and upon this evidence rested their case. The question is did they make out a prima facie case, one entitling them to have the case submitted to the jury?

The position of defendants' counsel on this question is, first, that by their written executory contract with Burdett Brothers and Johnson, plaintiffs did not buy the timber in place, but the lumber to be manufactured and delivered by the sellers on cars at the railway, and by which they acquired no legal title to the lumber on the mill yard on which they could maintain this action. The oral contract they say was simply to bolster up plaintiffs' case, and besides, that according to the evidence of Barker this contract changed the written contract, and that at most the oral contract according to his evidence was conditioned on the 250,000 feet of lumber being decreed to Burdett Brothers and Johnson, and that as the court did not in the chancery suit so decree the condition failed, and that their title to the lumber, by the very terms of the contract, failed also; that Burdett Brothers and Johnson might have sued but plaintiffs could not do so.

In each of these positions we think counsel are in error. It is true plaintiffs did not buy timber, but lumber to be delivered. The contract did provide, however, that if plaintiffs should desire the lumber to remain on stick longer than should be necessary for it to dry, the value thereof should be estimated and paid for subject to subsequent inspection on delivery. But this is not important. The parties were competent to waive delivery on cars at the railroad, and accept delivery on the mill yard. Their evidence uncontradicted is that they did by their oral contract do so, and had actually taken possession of the lumber, and were engaged in inspecting, measuring and branding it, and had been so engaged for several days when defendants seized it. J. F. Burdett says plaintiffs not only accepted the lumber on the mill yard, but that by the oral contract they agreed to take the mill culls not covered by the written contract, and that there was no other modification of the written contract, except that they were to pay all expenses of delivering the lumber on board cars. He does not say what prices were to be paid for mill culls. One difficulty in the way has been the want of satisfactory evidence of the amount of the different grades of lumber called for in the original contract upon which the jury, by reference to the prices stipulated in the original contract, might have arrived at the proper verdict. We have concluded, however, that the jury might from the evidence reasonably have found some damages, and that the lack of more certain evidence did not warrant the court on this ground in directing a verdict for defendants.

We see little force in the argument that the oral contract was conditioned on a decree in favor of Burdett Brothers and Johnson. The parties to the contract evidently contemplated that their rights would be finally adjudicated in the chancery suit. The new conditions created by the two decrees therein called for a modification of the first contract, which they undertook to cover by their oral contract. Plaintiffs' rights under both contracts so far as the lumber to be stored on the mill yard by defendants was concerned necessarily depended on the right of their vendors to the lumber, which it was assumed would be finally adjudicated in the pending suit. Failing to obtain an adjudication of their rights in that suit the parties to these contracts have attempted to adjust the respective legal rights thereunder to the conditions in which they were left by the result of the previous litigation. Burdett Bros. and Johnson affirm that plaintiffs are entitled under their contracts to the lumber in controversy, or at least to such rights there to as but for the contracts they would have had. With what consistency then can defendants deny plaintiffs the right which they practically concede Burdett Brothers and Johnson would have. With this right we do not see that the question of possession, much discussed by plaintiffs' counsel in their brief, is important.

The record shows but the one side of the case, and we express no opinion on the merits, but we are clearly of opinion that on the evidence submitted plaintiffs were entitled to have the case go to the jury, and that the court below erred in directing a verdict for defendants. We need not burden the opinion by citation of decisions previously decided by this court prescribing the rule in such cases. The judgment will therefore be reversed and plaintiffs granted a new trial.

LUDWICK v. JOHNSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 81*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—PROOF TO ESTABLISH.

In the case of a conveyance of land to a wife, a parol trust therein in favor of her husband may be established by proof that the latter paid the purchase money in pursuance of an oral agreement between them, antedating or contemporaneous with the conveyance, that he should do so and that the wife should take the legal title in trust for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 115-118; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 81*)—CONVEYANCE TO WIFE—PRESUMPTION OF GIFT—RESULTING TRUSTS.

Prima facie, such a conveyance is a gift from the husband to the wife; but the presumption of donation, arising from mere payment of the purchase money by the husband, is rebuttable.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Bill by Jacob M. Ludwick against John W. Johnson and others. Decree for complainant, and certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. M. Murphy, W. R. D. Dent, and Dent & Dent, for appellants. J. Hop Woods, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. The nature and object of this suit are fully disclosed by the opinion in Johnson v. Ludwick, 58 W. Va. 484, 52 S. E. 489. After the cause was remanded, an amended bill, substantially the same in its allegations as the original bill, was filed. To this the defendants demurred, and, their demurrers having been overruled, filed an answer. Depositions were taken and filed, and, on the hearing, a decree was pronounced, granting to the plaintiff the relief prayed for in his bill. It was adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the full equitable title to the tract of land in question was in the plaintiff, and the defendants were required, within 10 days from the adjournment of the term of the court at which the decree was pronounced, to convey and release to the plaintiff, by an apt and proper deed, their interest in the land, which is here construed to be the legal title inherited from plaintiff's deceased wife, and it was further ordered that, on their failure to do so, such deed should be executed by a commissioner who was appointed by the decree for the purpose. From this decree, the defendants have appealed.

As the sufficiency of the original bill, differing in no substantial respect from the amended bill, was declared by this court on the former appeal, and the evidence, adduced in support of its allegations, adheres to the theory of the bill, no separate discussion of the demurrer is necessary. What is to be said of the sufficiency of the evidence and the nature of the case made by it will fully suffice.

The evidence consists almost wholly of proof of oral declarations on the part of the wife, the grantee in the deed, that, though the deed was to be taken in her name, because, in that way, the land could be purchased for $100 less money, she was wholly unable to pay the purchase money, that the same was to be paid by her husband, the plaintiff, and that she was to convey the land to him later, and proof of her inability, and his ability, to pay it, and actual payment thereof by him. Many of these declarations were made before the deed was executed, while others of subsequent date recognize and admit the trust and express intention to execute it. The circumstances disclosed by the evidence indicate that the husband did, in fact, pay the purchase money. The purchase price was $250, of which $200 was paid on the delivery of the deed. Of this cash payment, $150 was borrowed of Isaac Martin on a note, executed to him by the plaintiff and his wife. The wife of Isaac Martin testifies that the plaintiff paid the note, her husband giving him receipts for the payments and indorsing the same on the note. A paper is filed in the record which purports to show copies of these receipts, indicating payment by the plaintiff. A witness testifies positively to the admission by one of the grantors of his receipt from the plaintiff of a steer and other property in part payment of the note, held for the remaining $50 of the purchase money, and another witness to the payment by the plaintiff of a balance due on that note. In view of some controversy as to the relative financial ability of the husband and wife to make payment, their assessments for purposes of taxation are put into the record and disclose pronounced superiority of the husband in this respect.

There is some contradiction between his testimony, and that of some of the defendants, respecting alleged admissions on his part, as well as his ability to pay for the land and the impecuniousness of the wife at the time it was bought. A letter from him to one of the defendants, in which he proposed to purchase their interests, is also put in evidence; but he insists his proposition was an offer to compromise and get rid of their claims, and the letter bears some evidence of that on its face. In one place he says: "If I can buy you out, and if I can't it will be something else." The letter is by no means a disclaimer of title. Witnesses for the defendants say the plaintiff had nothing at the time of his marriage, and that the wife had, in addition to her household goods, some horses, cattle, and sheep; but others say she had no stock or other property of any substantial value. One of the defendants, a sister of the deceased wife, testifies that she told her she would not convey the land to her husband; but her evidence cannot be considered, since she is a party to the suit, interested in the event thereof, and the subject-matter is a personal communication with a deceased person under whom she claims.

As the declarations of the deceased wife, put in evidence, are plain, clear, and unequivocal, certain as to the beneficiary of the trust, the consideration upon which it is founded and the subject-matter, and consistent with the surroundings and circumstances disclosed, and the evidence preponderates in favor of the plaintiff, we are unable to see that the trial court erred in its finding upon the issue of fact.

The remaining and important inquiry, therefore, is whether the statute of frauds excludes the claim thus set up, and this question seems to be foreclosed by our decisions. Johnson v. Ludwick, 58 W. Va. 464, 52 S. E. 489; Currence v. Ward, 43 W. Va. 367, 370, 371, 27 S. E. 329; Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567. Taking these cases in their inverse order, they hold as follows: "But if a party obtains a deed without any consideration upon a parol agreement that he will hold the land in trust for third parties, such a trust so proven will be enforced in a court of equity, as to permit a party to hold the land so obtained for his own use would be to permit the grantee to commit a fraud." Troll v. Carter. "Where one buys land under executory agreement, and afterwards, before legal title passed, verbally agrees that if another will pay the purchase money he shall have the land, and that other does so, the trust is enforceable in equity." Currence v. Ward. "But where land is purchased and paid for by the husband, and the conveyance taken in the name of the wife, pursuant to an understanding and agreement between them at the time of the purchase and conveyance, that the land is to be held by the wife for the benefit of the husband, this creates an express trust which will be enforced in favor of the husband." Johnson v. Ludwick. The doctrine of these cases seems to be sustained by the text and cases cited in 28 A. & E. Ency. Law, 872.

A purchase by the husband in the name of the wife would be regarded, on the face of the transaction, as a gift to the wife; but this is only a rebuttable presumption, which can be overthrown by evidence to the contrary. Johnson v. Ludwick, cited. Here the evidence is amply sufficient, in our opinion, to accomplish this result.

For the reasons stated, the decree will be affirmed.

CAMDEN CLAY CO. v. TOWN OF NEW MARTINSVILLE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PLEADING (§ 222*)—OVERRULING DEMUR-RER—LEAVE TO REPLY.

When a demurrer to a plea is overruled, the plaintiff cannot reply in point of fact unless he withdraws the demurrer; but leave to withdraw the demurrer will be conceded as of course and answer in point of fact then allowed. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 570; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 412*)—DEMURRER—DEMURRER TO PLEA—WITHDRAWAL—REPLY.

Though a demurrer to a plea is not formally withdrawn after it is overruled, the defendant will be held to a recognition of its implied withdrawal if he permits an issue of fact to be joined by replication to the plea without objection on his part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1394; Dec. Dig. § 412.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 863*) — EX-PENDITURE OF CURRENT REVENUES—"CON-TRACT DEBTS."

A town may expend its current revenues and accrued funds, and may make contracts to that end. To do so is not to "contract debts" within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 863.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1520, 1521.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 864*)—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

If the contracts and engagements of a municipal corporation do not overreach the dependable current resources for which provision exists at the time the contracts and engagements are assumed, no lawful objections to them can be interposed, however great the indebtedness of the municipality may be.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1828; Dec. Dig. § 864.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1035*)—IN-VALIDITY—EXCESS OF INDEBTEDNESS.

A party to assert successfully the invalidity of a contract made by a municipal corporation, on the ground that it has assumed an indebtedness beyond that which it could legally assume by the contract, must establish by clear evidence all facts necessary to show the alleged invalidity.

Error from Circuit Court, Wetzel County.

Action by the Camden Clay Company against the Town of New Martinsville. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Thos. P. Jacobs and Hall & Hall, for plaintiff in error. H. P. Camden, Dan B. Leonard, Rankin Wiley, and Thomas H. Cornett, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, P. The Town of New Martinsville, a municipal corporation, on June 11, 1902, entered into a contract with C. Skidmore for the paving of particularly named streets. For doing the work in the manner specified, Skidmore was to receive stated prices for the curbing, excess excavating, and brick paving necessary to complete the contract. The work was to be completed by November first, of that year. Payments were to be made to Skidmore every thirty days, upon estimates of eighty per cent. of the work completed. Final payment was to be made at the completion of all the work and its acceptance. Just here it may be observed that the contract was to be performed and the work paid for during the current municipal fiscal year of 1902 within which it was made. The contract does not relate to future years, nor does it pretend to bind future levies for its payment.

Skidmore completed the work. The municipal authorities accepted it. They accounted with him and fixed the amount to which he was entitled. Then Skidmore assigned to the Camden Clay Company the amount remaining due to him from the town. Many payments were made by the town to this assignee. But later a balance of $10,000 remained unpaid, and the town refused to make further payment. This suit followed. The town in defense claimed that the work had not been done according to the contract, and that, in any event, the debt was an illegal and invalid one because the legal limit to which the municipality could incur indebtedness was exceeded in the making of the obligation. From a judgment for $11,700, upon the verdict of a jury, this writ of error was obtained.

Though many exceptions were presented in the original assignments of error, the brief of counsel for the town relies upon but two points. The neglected assignments, however, have been considered by us. Finding them not well taken, we overrule them. This written opinion may well be devoted to the two points raised in the brief.

Two special pleas were interposed by the defendant town. One of the pleas alleged a breach of the contract by Skidmore and averred that defendant was damaged by that breach to the amount claimed by plaintiff. The other plea denied the validity of the contract upon the averment that the town undertook to incur an indebtedness payable out of revenues for years other than the one as to which the contract was made. Plaintiff demurred to each plea, but the court overruled the demurrers. Then plaintiff replied generally to each plea. Issues were thus joined, without objection on the part of defendant. Now, defendant insists that when plaintiff failed in the demurrers to the pleas the issues presented by the pleas were thereby finally settled against plaintiff. In other words, it is submitted that plaintiff could not reply to the pleas after the demurrers thereto were overruled unless the demurrers were withdrawn. True it is that at the common law the plaintiff could give one answer, either of law or of fact, but no more, to each plea. 4 Minor's Inst. (3d Ed.) 1167. This common law rule is changed by our statute only in one particular. More than one answer in point of fact to a special plea is now allowed—more than one replication. But this common law rule which applies to the plaintiff has not been altered further in his behalf, as a similar rule of pleading in relation to the defendant has been changed. The defendant may demur and also plead fact. He "may plead as many several matters, whether of law or fact, as he shall think necessary," except in a single instance named in the statute. The plaintiff, however, has not been given such privilege. He must still answer the defendant's plea by demurrer, or answer it in point of fact by replication. He cannot demur and reply. He must choose one course or the other. If he chooses the latter course, then, to any special plea, he "may plead as many special replications as he may deem necessary." Code 1906, c. 125, § 20. But the inconvenience in being compelled to choose between a demurrer or a replication may be evaded by the plaintiff. If a demurrer to a plea be overruled, leave to withdraw the demurrer will be conceded as of course and an answer in point of fact then allowed. 4 Minor's Inst. (3d Ed.) 1167. In the case at hand, plaintiff did not expressly withdraw the demurrers upon which it failed, but it was permitted to reply in point of fact without protest or objection on the part of defendant. In substance and practical import, this course was a withdrawal of the demurrers. Defendant must be held to a recognition of the implied withdrawal of the demurrers, since no objection on its part was made to the replications. Defendant recognized the demurrers as withdrawn when it acquiesced in the filing of the replications. Applicable here are words of the Virginia court: "In this case, although the record does not show that the demurrer was withdrawn, the court and parties must have so considered it, otherwise the replication could not have been filed and a trial had upon the issue of fact raised by it. The demurrer having been treated in the trial court as waived or withdrawn, it must be so considered here." Railway Co. v. Bank, 92 Va. 495, 23 S. E. 935, 44 L. R. A. 449.

The court instructed the jury that the evidence was insufficient to justify a finding that the contract was an illegal and invalid one. This instruction was a proper one in the premises. Defendant did not prove that at the time the town entered into the contract it thereby assumed an indebtedness which, with other liabilities then existing or assumed, overreached the dependable resources of the municipality for the current year. Were resources provided at the time the contract was made, sufficient according to reasonable expectation, to meet all existing liabilities of the town for the current year including the indebtedness under the contract? If so, the contract was not illegally made. Defendant failed to prove that such provision was not made. Evidence clearly establishing the fact that no such provision existed was primarily essential to an overthrow of the contract for illegality on the ground alleged. The contract and the indebtedness which it represents are presumed to be legal. Armstrong v. County Court, 41 W. Va. 602, 24 S. E. 993. It is presumed that all steps necessary to the legality of the contract were taken. It is presumed that legal provision was made for the payment of the indebtedness when the same was assumed. That presumption prevails and sustains the legality of the contract until the presumption is clearly overthrown by evidence. It was not overthrown in this case. The burden was on the town to prove the illegality of the contract by clear and defined evidence—so to prove that the provided resources of the town were exceeded by the indebtedness under the contract at the time it was made. That the dependable resources may have been overreached during the current year is not enough. If this contract did not overreach them, no part of it is invalid, though liabilities assumed after its execution may have overreached those resources. The constitutional provision does not inhibit the making of current engagements which may be met with moneys on hand and the current revenues provided at the time the engagements are made. A town may expend the current revenues and accrued funds and may make contracts to that end. To do so is not to contract debts within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition. Davis v. County Court, 38 W. Va. 104, 18 S. E. 373. Principles which we approve have been enunciated in the following language: "If a city has money on hand, or provides at the time a present means of raising it otherwise than by loan, it may contract for expenditures without restriction, as there is no constitutional limitation on municipal expenditure, provided the city pays as it goes. What is prohibited is the incurring of debt. If a contract made by a city pertains to its ordinary expenses, and is, together with other like expenses, within the limits of its current revenues and such special taxes as it may legally and in good faith intend to levy therefor, such contract does not constitute the incurring of indebtedness within the meaning of a constitutional provision limiting the power of municipalities to contract debts. If means are adopted which in good faith, according to reasonable expectation, will produce a sufficient fund to pay, a contract entered into on the faith of them should not be held unlawful on account of an unintentional miscalculation, or an accidental and unexpected failure to produce the full result." Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. City of Corry, 197 Pa. 41, 46 Atl. 1035, 80 Am. St. Rep. 812. The evidence in this case does not disclose that these legal principles were violated in the making of the contract which is the basis of this action.

The only issue of fact submitted for the determination of the jury related to the alleged breach of the contract by Skidmore—to his failure to do the work contemplated by it in the manner stipulated. That issue the jury, on conflicting facts and circumstances, determined in favor of plaintiff. Their finding is warranted by the evidence. Nothing appears by which we can overthrow it.

The record plainly calls for an affirmance of the judgment. It will be so ordered.

DUNBAR et al. v. DUNBAR et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EQUITY (§ 452*)—BILL OF REVIEW—LIMITATIONS.

The limitation for a bill of review from a decree made before chapter 40, Acts 1900, took effect, reducing the limitation to one year, is three years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Dec. Dig. § 452.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 279*)—VENDOR'S LIEN—ENFORCEMENT—PARTIES.

In a suit in equity to enforce a lien for purchase money reserved in a conveyance of land, persons not parties to the conveyance, between whom and its parties there is no equity, and who claim title adversary to that of the parties to such conveyance, cannot be made parties to such suit, and their rights cannot be adjudicated against them in it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Bill by H. A. Dunbar and others against W. S. Dunbar and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Sanders & Crockett, J. W. McCreery, and File & File, for appellants. Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay and W. L. Ashby, for appellees.

BRANNON, J. W. S. Dunbar and wife conveyed to D. S. Courtney, E. T. Crawford, and W. L. Ashby, (1) all the right, title, and interest formerly belonging to John Cook and Mary A. Cook in lands of which Lemuel Jarrell, Sr., died seised, which interest was purchased by W. S. Dunbar at a sale under a decree; and (2) all the right, title, and interest of said Dunbar and wife in the land of Lemuel Jarrell, deceased. This deed contained a covenant of general warranty and a covenant for further assurance, and reserved a lien for deferred purchase money. Lemuel Jarrell died seised of 10 tracts of land in Raleigh county. W. S. Dunbar brought a chancery suit to enforce against the realty conveyed by him by that deed to Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby the lien for purchase money reserved in the deed. Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby defended the suit by an answer setting up that by various conveyances from other parties they had become owners of all of the shares or interests in the various tracts of land of which Lemuel Jarrell died seised, and that afterwards W. S. Dunbar claimed that said purchasers had not acquired all such interests, and that he still owned the Cook interest, and that, in order to get rid of this claim of W. S. Dunbar, they purchased of him the said Cook interest and all the interests of Dunbar in said Jarrell land. And said answer further states, in effect, that two interests had been conveyed by heirs of Jarrell to H. A. Dunbar, and that, the deeds being defective, those two heirs had made second conveyances of those interests to W. S. Dunbar, thus making conflicting claims to those interests between H. A. Dunbar and W. S. Dunbar. The answer further stated that H. A. Dunbar had conveyed to Michael Lilly and Isabella Lilly a boundary of 250 acres of said land and to William H. Jarrell by one deed 16½ acres and by another deed 62 acres. The answer further alleged that H. A. Dunbar was in possession of, and claiming, some 700 acres or 800 acres of the Jarrell land. How claiming is not stated. The answer further stated that Michael Lilly and C. N. Dunbar had entered on the land books in their names 18 acres and 104 poles of said land, and that C. N. Dunbar had entered on the land books 11 acres and 5 poles, such entries importing a claim of title, but how the answer does not certify. The answer further stated that by deed Stephen Williams had conveyed to Henry A. Williams 60 to 70 acres of the land, and had fenced a portion of it and was in possession thereof, and that W. H. Jarrell was claiming another part of the land containing about 80 acres, and that C. P. Stover somehow claimed 30 acres of the said land, and alleged further that said adverse claimants were in possession. After this answer was filed, W. S. Dunbar filed an amended bill making such adverse claimants, H. A. Dunbar, Michael S. Lilly, Isabella Lilly, W. H. Jarrell, C. N. Dunbar, Henry A. Williams, Stephen Williams, Jack Williams, Daniel Williams, and C. P. Stover, party defendants, and assailing their titles and claims as bad, and asking that their rights be adjudicated, and that their deeds be canceled and set aside as a cloud upon the titles of the land, and that they be required to surrender possession to Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby. These adverse claimants, the said new parties, did not appear, and the amended bill was taken for confessed against them. They did not answer the answer of Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby. Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby answered the amended bill, asserting their own title to be good and alleging that the title or right or claim of H. A. Dunbar and other adverse claimants above named were bad, and added that Jack Williams and Daniel Williams and Henry A. Williams were also asserting title to a portion of the land; and this answer alleged that their titles were worthless, and asked that the rights of all such claimants be adjudicated, and, if found valid, that there might be a reduction of the purchase money. A decree was made of sweeping character declaring that the title of Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby to all the said 10 tracts of land of which Lemuel Jarrell died seised was superior and paramount to any claim or title of said adverse claimants H. A. Dunbar, Michael and Isabella Lilly, William H. Jarrell, C. N. Dunbar, and C. P. Stover, and setting aside the deeds from H. A. Dunbar to W. H. Jarrell and the deed from H. A. Dunbar to Michael S. Lilly and Isabella Lilly, and awarding Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby a writ of possession against such claimants, and decreeing that Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby pay W. S. Dunbar the purchase money for which the lien was reserved in the deed from W. S. Dunbar to said purchasers, and subjecting the land to sale therefor.

Afterwards H. A. Dunbar, Michael S. Lilly, Isabella Lilly, and W. H. Jarrell filed a bill of review, assigning errors of law in the said decree, and praying that the same be reversed. Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby entered a demurrer to the said bill of review, and a decree was pronounced sustaining said demurrer and dismissing the bill of review, from which decree H. A. Dunbar, Michael S. Lilly, Isabella Lilly, and W. H. Jarrell appeal.

The first point presented for our consideration is that the demurrer to the bill of review was well taken because it was filed more than two years after the decree, which decree was rendered December 22, 1905, and that the bill of review is barred by limitation. This contention is rested on the theory that though the Code until chapter 40, Acts 1909, reducing the limitation for a bill of review from three to one year, allowed a period of three years, yet that three-year limitation was reduced to two by the act changing the limitation upon an appeal from five to two years, the argument being that the statute reducing the limitation for an appeal to two years by implication changed the limit of a bill of review from three to two years; in other words, though the section of the Code allowing three years for a bill of review was not expressly repealed, yet it was so impliedly repealed, and no bill of review could be entertained, even before the act of 1909, after two years. To sustain this view we would have to overthrow Dunfee v. Childs, 45 W. Va. 157, 30 S. E. 102, holding that, notwithstanding the period of an appeal was two years, a bill of review could be entertained within three years. We are asked to reconsider and overthrow that case. We decline to reconsider that subject, not only on the principle of stare decisis, but also because there can now be but few cases in which the matter can be material, as time will soon bar bills of review to decrees anterior to the act of 1909, fixing the limit for bills of review at one year. The matter then is of little importance, except in this case and perhaps a few others. Besides, said chapter 40 gives three years as to decrees prior to its passage.

Coming to the merits of the case, we find that the original cause was a suit brought by W. S. Dunbar against Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby purely and only to enforce the lien for purchase money reserved in the deed from Dunbar to Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby. We find that parties claiming adverse titles to much of the land mentioned above are brought into this suit and their rights adjudicated, and their titles annulled, and their deeds canceled, and title to all the land declared to be in Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby paramount to the claim of other codefendants. A plain error consists in the fact that, in a suit between grantor and grantee having for its sole and only purpose the enforcement of a lien for purchase money reserved in a deed for land, parties who are strangers to the transaction between grantor and grantee, strangers having no connection therewith, having adverse titles and claims, are brought into a suit upon a matter entirely foreign to their rights and claims, and their rights and claims adjudicated and destroyed. That deed made a contract between W. S. Dunbar and his grantees. The rights between them emanate from that deed only, a matter with which the adverse claimants have no connection, as that contract or transaction is confined to the parties to that deed. This right to bring in these strangers is predicated upon Heavner v. Morgan, 30 W. Va. 335, 4 S. E. 406, 8 Am. St. Rep. 55, asserting the right in such a suit to bring in such strangers and settle their rights; but that case has been pointedly overruled by Miller v. Morrison, 47 W. Va. 684, 35 S. E. 905. I shall not repeat the argumentation there found, but will simply say that the authorities there cited do negative the right of the parties in a suit for the enforcement of purchase money to bring in and pass upon the adverse rights of strangers. I will add the strong case of Peters v. Bowman, 98 U. S. 56, 25 L. Ed. 91, holding that such a trial of adverse title is foreign to a suit to enforce a vendor's lien reserved, because there is no equity between the adverse claimant and the parties to the deed. Indeed, equity has no jurisdiction to try adverse title, unless there be an equity between the plaintiff and the party claiming adversely to him. Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 910; Johnston v. Jarret, 14 W. Va. 235. If this is not so, then the right and title of these strangers would be settled in equity, and they deprived of a jury trial, and this cannot be. Cecil v. Clark, 44 W. Va. 659, 30 S. E. 216; Davis v. Settle, 43 W. Va. 19, 26 S. E. 557. This is the general rule in equity; but in this case it is more especially applicable because only the rights between Dunbar and his grantees are involved, their contractual rights, and the rights of the stranger parties are entirely foreign to the matter of this suit and to the rights arising between Dunbar, the grantor, and Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby, his grantees under the deed between them.

The decree is erroneous for the additional reason that this bill was to enforce a lien only against certain interests in the land, not all the interests; but the decree gives Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby title to the entire 10 tracts of the Jarrell land. How could that be done in a suit to enforce a lien only against certain interests therein? The decree goes far beyond the scope of the suit.

I have considered the case as if the deed from W. S. Dunbar to Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby conveyed only the interest of Mary A. Cook in the Jarrell land. Under the indefinite pleadings, it is difficult to say whether this is so or not. In some respects they justify that position and the parties in some respects so regard the deed; but the deed conveys not only that interest, but any other interest of Dunbar by a second item. It may be that this second clause in the deed was put in to shut out any further claim by Dunbar, not as intending to convey any more than the Cook interest, but as precautionary against any further claim by Dunbar to the prejudice of his grantees in the Jarrell land. If we regard the deed as conveying only the Cook interest, with what show of reason could the decree pass on other interests when the suit was only to sell one interest for its purchase money? How could the decree give title not only as against Dunbar, but other parties to the whole land and all interests therein? But if we regard the deed as conveying not only that Cook interest, but other interests, we can say that those other interests are not specified, and that the import of the pleadings is not that the sale covered all the interests in the land, but only some of them. Then there could not be a decree conferring title to all upon Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby in a suit to sell for purchase money for part only, and give title to all the land to the destruction of any right which those adversary parties might have.

Counsel for the appellant make the point that Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby could not set up against Dunbar any defense of defective title to defeat the claim for purchase money, because the deed conveyed only the right, title, and interest of Dunbar, and though it contained a general warranty and a covenant for further assurance that warranty does not operate at all because only right, title, and interest were conveyed, not the land itself; citing Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 156, 13 S. E. 49, 29 Am. St. Rep. 800, and Reynolds v. Shaver, 59 Ark. 299, 27 S. W. 78, 43 Am. St. Rep. 36, and Wynn v. Harman, 5 Grat. (Va.) 158, 164, and Kent v. Watson, 22 W. Va. 462, and Harrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 158, 7 Sup. Ct. 147, 30 L. Ed. 396. And a covenant for further assurance applies to no other estate than that conveyed in the deed already made. Uhl v. Railroad, 51 W. Va. 107, 41 S. E. 340. Counsel say that as, for this reason, these purchasers could not defend for bad title, it follows that they could not bring in these adverse claimants and their titles. There is some force in that argument; but it strikes me that that is a matter between Dunbar and his grantees. Dunbar might say that he did not guarantee title; but we are not passing on the rights between Dunbar and his grantees, and it occurs to me that that matter is one arising only between them. What have these strangers to do with that?

It is hardly necessary to say that the decree cannot be vindicated on the theory that the answer of Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby is to be regarded as a cross-bill against H. A. Dunbar and other adverse new parties. If, as we have shown, Dunbar could not bring into this suit the rights of strangers claiming adverse title, for like reason a cross-bill answer could not do so. Another reason is that the suit is only for purchase money, not involving in the slightest degree the rights of those adverse claimants, and a cross-bill must relate to a matter properly involved in the suit. Hogg's Eq. Proceed. § 191; Hansford v. C. & O. Coal Co., 22 W. Va. 70, 75; Peters v. Case, 62 W. Va. 33, 57 S. E. 733, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408.

It might occur to the mind that as H. A. Dunbar and other adverse claimants suffered the amended bill, alleging badness of their title, to be taken for confessed, they cannot complain; but there is no force in this, because taking everything to be true as appeared in the pleadings, still there could be no decree against these hostile claimants. Their rights were foreign to the matter legally involved in the suit. Chapter 134 of the Code allows a person injured by error of law by a decree by default to reverse it on motion, as he could do by appeal but for that chapter. A bill which does not entitle the plaintiff to any relief in law on its facts against the party, though taken for confessed, does not call for relief and it is reversible error to adjudicate it.

For these reasons, we reverse the decree pronounced upon the bill of review on the 22d day of December, 1908, and we overrule the demurrer to that bill of review; and we reverse so much of the decree in the main cause of W. S. Dunbar against D. G. Courtney and others pronounced on the 22d day of December, 1905, as declared that the title of D. G. Courtney, E. T. Crawford, and W. L. Ashby to the lands described in the record is superior and paramount to any claim or title thereto of H. A. Dunbar, Michael S. Lilly, and Isabella Lilly, his wife, and William H. Jarrell, and annuls the deed from Henry A. Dunbar and wife to W. H. Jarrell, dated January 7, 1904, recorded in the county clerk's office of Raleigh county in Deed Book No. 28, p. 150, and the deed from Henry A. Dunbar and wife to Michael S. Lilly and Isabella Lilly, his wife, dated February 3, 1908, recorded in said office in Deed Book No. 28, p. 184, and that clause of said decree awarding to said Courtney, Crawford, and Ashby a writ of possession against H. A. Dunbar, Michael S. Lilly, Isabella Lilly, and William H. Jarrell, and we dismiss the case as to H. A. Dunbar, Michael S. Lilly, Isabella Lilly, and William H. Jarrell without prejudice to the rights of any of the parties in any other suit in which they may be involved.

And this cause is remanded to the said circuit court for further proper proceedings.

COAL & COKE CORPORATION.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 10, 1910.)(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CONTRACTS (§ 278)—WAIVER OF BREACH—ACCEPTANCE OF PART PERFORMANCE.

Although a condition precedent in a contract must be fully performed, in order to bind the opposite party to performance of his reciprocal obligation, acceptance of performance of only a substantial part thereof precludes reliance upon the breach as matter justifying repudiation or discharge of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1207; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 227*)—WAIVER OF BREACH—
ACCEPTANCE OF PART PERFORMANCE.

Partial interruption, for a time, of a continuous duty, imposed by a contract, amounting to a breach of a condition precedent, is unavailing as ground of repudiation, if such partial performance has been accepted until the period of interruption has ceased.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1039; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 227*)—WAIVER OF BREACH—

4. CONTRACTS (§ 271*)—SUSPENSION OF PER-FORMANCE—ELECTION BETWEEN CANCELLA-TION AND ACCEPTANCE.

A clause in a contract between a coke producing company and its sales agent, providing that, for certain specified causes, deliveries thereunder may be suspended or partially suspended, or, at the option of the party not in default, may be immediately canceled, during the period of such interruption, by immediate notice to that effect, contemplates partial performance, under such circumstances, in the absence of cancellation, and imposes upon the party not in default the duty of election between cancellation and acceptance of partial performance, on the happening of the contingency or as soon thereafter as may be practicable.

6. CONTRACTS (§§ 303, 312*)—BREACH—RIGHTS OF OTHER PARTY.

Failure of full performance, due to causes other than those specified in such clause, amounts to a breach, but, if the opposite party induced or caused such breach by its own default, it can take no advantage of it.

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Action by the Ashland Coal & Coke Company against the Hull Coal & Coke Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

A. W. Reynolds and Lucien H. Cocke, for plaintiff in error. Anderson, Strother & Hughes, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. The refusal of certain instructions, asked for by the defendant, and the giving of an instruction, prepared and given by the court, in lieu of those requested, constitute the grounds of complaint on this writ of error.

The Ashland Coal & Coke Company sued the Hull Coal & Coke Corporation, in assumpsit, for about $2,800, the price of coke sold to the latter in the months of June and July, 1906. The defendant claimed, by way of set-off, $1,362.34, as commission on certain other coal, and, by way of recoupment, $2,575.37, both of which cross-claims grew out of an alleged breach of contract on the part of the plaintiff. The jury disallowed both, and rendered a verdict for the full amount of the claim of the plaintiff.

The contract involved was made about the 1st of February, 1906, and is evidenced by two letters, one written by Frank A. Hill, president of the Hull Coal & Coke Corporation, dated February 3, 1906, proposing, on behalf of said corporation, to act as sales agent for the coke manufactured by the Ashland Coal & Coke Company from February 1, 1906, until October 1, 1906, and to take and dispose of the entire output of said company's plant on a commission of 8 per cent. on the selling price of the coke on board the cars at the ovens, guaranteed to be not less than $1.85 per ton of 2,000 pounds, and to guarantee all accounts and remit in cash on the 25th of each month for all coke passing over the scales during the previous month; and the other, dated March 5, 1906, accepting said proposal. Said first letter contained the following additional provision: "Our usual strike, accident and transportation clause which reads as follows to mutually govern: 'In case of strike, accident, deficient transportation or other cause, unavoidably causing stoppage or partial stoppage of the work of the manufacturer of this coke, or of its shipment, or in case of accidents unavoidably causing stoppage or partial stoppage of the works of the buyer, deliveries herein contracted for may be suspended or partially suspended, as the case may be, or, at the option of the party not in default, may be immediately canceled during the continuance of such interruption by immediate notice to that effect given to the other party.'" Whether technically the defendant was a sales agent or a purchaser of the coke is an immaterial question, since it does not deny its liability for the price of the coke sued for. Its answer to the demand of the plaintiff is a claim of recoupment, founded upon the alleged breach of the contract.

In the months of February, March, and April, 1906, the contract was observed and complied with by both parties; but, in May of that year, the defendant was unable to handle the entire output of the plaintiff's plant. This disability continued through the month of June. As to whether it was able to take all the coke contracted for in July is a controverted matter, and constitutes the crucial question in the case. About May 1st the defendant lost a large contract with the Algoma Steel Company at Sault Ste. Marie. Some time after that, an accident happened to the plant of another customer at Roanoke, Va. These adversities seem not to have been reported to the plaintiff at once, but the requisitions for coke from its plant fell off greatly, with the result that many of its ovens had to be put out and its force of laborers greatly reduced. However, it continued to deliver such quantities of coke as the defendant called for, and never ceased to do so until about July 24th. In February the defendant took 190 cars, in March 261, in April 218, in May 60, and in June 104. The plaintiff had, at its two plants, Ashland and Monitor, 410 ovens, of which the largest number in operation at any time was 260. These were reduced from time to time until the number in blast fell to 64. This is said to have been attended by a loss of from $5,000 to $10,000 a month. No notice of any intention to cancel or repudiate the contract was given, however, and the plaintiff continued to take the benefit of it, as has been stated. It was advised of the embarrassment under which the agent company was laboring. On May 7th, it addressed an inquiry to the agent company as to why it was not receiving orders for its output of coke, saying "we are burning only 175 ovens at present, but you are furnishing us with orders for only 50." This letter was replied to on May 10th, and the loss of the Algoma contract reported, with the additional information that another company had defeated the Hull Corporation by cutting the price 10 to 15 cents, and representing superiority of their coke. The following further statement in this connection was made: "It is not hard for them to convince the Soo people of this fact, as when we made claim for our coke being of as high quality as the other people they showed us continuous analyses of coke from two of our plants which we had been shipping them there, the ash for days ran as high as 15 per cent. This has temporarily reduced our coke shipment. We, however, expect to close a business tomorrow of equal volume to that which we have lost, and, should we be successful in this, we will at once advise you, and it will not be necessary to put out any more ovens; in fact it would almost be necessary to put in some additional ovens to obtain the output." On June 13, 1906, the Hull Corporation reported the accident to the Roanoke furnace, and then said: "Our sales for shipment after July 1st, as of to-day, would indicate an output from your oven of five to seven cars daily unless we should be able to increase our sales between now and July 1st. This, of course, we expect to do. Until July 1st, the indications are that we will have to live from hand to mouth and the tonnage we can take from will be very uncertain." They also sent the result of an analysis of coke shipped in April, made by the Algoma Steel Company people, showing 17.17% ash, an amount considerably in excess of that allowed in Standard Pocahontas coke which the plaintiff had agreed to furnish. The record discloses no intimation of intention on the part of the plaintiff to cancel or repudiate the contract on account of the breach thereof by the defendant, after the receipt of this information, until July 25th. As we have stated, it furnished 104 cars in June, and from July 1st until July 24th, when it ceased to make deliveries, it furnished 61 cars, but there is evidence tending to show more were demanded of it in July.

In the meantime, without the knowledge of the Hull Corporation, the plaintiff entered into negotiations with the Norton Iron Works, of Ashland, Ky., through an agent, for the sale of its coke to that company, which culminated in a contract for the entire output of the plant, bearing date June 20, 1906, but it is admitted that it was not actually signed until August 1, 1906. W. A. Phillips, president of the Ashland Coal & Coke Company, said in his testimony: "I think the contract had been entered into on July 20th, but had not been signed until Aug. 1st. The mistake was made in placing June instead of July, the earlier date." Said company, on July 25, 1906, formally notified the defendant that it had sold the product of its ovens to the Norton Iron Works and could not ship any more to the Hull Corporation. Thereafter it ceased to do so and sold all of its coke to the Norton Iron Works. It is on the coke so sold that the defendant claims a commission of 8 per cent.

As to the situation of the defendant and its relation to the plaintiff from July 1st until July 25th, there is conflict in the testimony. The former claims that, relying upon the silence and acquiescence of the latter, with full notice to the plaintiff of the circumstances, causing embarrassment, and its intention to relieve the situation by securing new contracts, it did secure them, and was in a condition on or before July 25th to take the entire output of the plaintiff's ovens, and, from July 1st until July 25th, made requisitions upon it covering the entire output of the plant, and gave shipping directions for all of the cars the latter reported as having been received and loaded. It continued, through the months of July, August, and September, to send in its written requisitions, which were ignored. The plaintiff says these requisitions were not made in good faith, but simply to bolster up a claim. It denies that the defendant had any customers for the coke, and says these requisitions named nobody as consignees, wherefore no shipments could be made under them. Some of its agents say in their testimony they repeatedly called up Mr. French, the agent of the defendant, and asked him for shipping directions which he was unable to give. On the other hand, Mr. French testifies to the number of cars for which he gave consignments from June 22d to June 30th, and closes by saying: "On June 30th we consigned three cars that were loaded by the Ashland Coal & Coke Company on the 27th of June, which, according to the records furnished us by the Ashland Coal & Coke Company were the last unconsigned cars on their yards." He then stated facts tending to show, and claimed, that all the coke loaded in June had been removed on July 2d except seven cars, and said they were consigned. He then stated what occurred in July, and said the Ashland Company reported 19 loaded cars on their tracks on July 10th, but they had been tagged for shipment, and were allowed to stand there by the railroad people, and that on July 12th they reported the receipt of 10 empties and the loading of 4, leaving on hand 6 empties and 9 loaded cars. He then said: "After that date they were evidently shipping to other parties and did not give us this information, though we were demanding that our orders be filled." In his testimony in chief, he said that, on discovering that his orders were not being filled, he went to the office of the Ashland Company, and demanded of Mr. Phillips, their manager, Mr. O'Neal, their superintendent, and Mr. Babb, their bookkeeper, the filling of his orders. He further says he gave them information that his company needed coke, and asked them to increase their shipments, and says he urged them to prepare to increase their output. He says that, in the effort to obtain coke from them, he visited their plant on July 7th, 11th, and 13th, and made a vigorous protest against their shipping to other parties, adding, "I found out they had quite a number of cars billed to other parties than ourselves, and I demanded that they destroy the tags on the cars consigned to other parties than ourselves, and to tag the cars in conformity with our requisitions."

After the introduction of all the evidence, the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury (1) that the letter of July 25, 1906, was an effort to cancel the contract, and that, in so doing, the plaintiff broke its contract, if the jury should believe that, on that date and prior thereto, the parties had been executing the contract, and at that time the defendant was tendering and ready and willing and able to tender orders for coke sufficient to cover the output of the ovens; (2) that, if the jury should find for the defendant, they could assess in its favor such damages as would compensate it for losses resulting from the breach of the contract by the plaintiff, whether such losses consisted of advanced prices, paid for coke by the defendant, to fill its contracts, made on account of coke the plaintiff was to furnish, or loss of commission on coke sold by the plaintiff to other parties than the defendant; (3) that, if the jury believed the defendant had failed to comply with its contract prior to June 13, 1906, and that the plaintiff was informed of this fact on or about that date, and that said failure would continue until July 1st, and, after that date, the defendant would be able to take from five to seven cars per day, and the plaintiff accepted such information, and continued thereafter to take the benefit of the contract, and led the defendant to believe the promise of its letter was satisfactory, such acts constituted a waiver on the part of the plaintiff, and that if they believed the defendant was ready, willing, and able to furnish orders during the month of July and thereafter for five to seven cars per day, and the plaintiff was informed of that fact, the action of the plaintiff on July 25th constituted a breach of the contract; (4) that the defendant was entitled to a commission of 8 per cent. on the coke sold to the Norton Iron Works and persons other than the defendant or its consignees, during the time covered by the contract, February 1, 1906, to October 1, 1906, if the jury believed such sales had been made by the plaintiff, and the defendant had made contracts for the sale of said coke and was demanding delivery thereof by the plaintiff on its orders and consignments; (5) that, if the jury believed the defendant, before notice from the plaintiff of its intention to cease to make deliveries of coke under the contract, the defendant was demanding delivery thereof, and, under the belief that the plaintiff would continue to observe its contract, had made contracts for the sale of the coke to be delivered to it by the plaintiff, and, by reason of the breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, the defendant had been compelled to buy coke from other parties to enable it to comply with its own contracts, made as aforesaid, at a price greater than it received for the same, the plaintiff was liable to the defendant for the difference between the prices it paid and the prices received for such coke, and the defendant entitled to offset such damages against the account sued on; (6) and "that if they believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant did not furnish to the plaintiff sufficient orders to cover all the coke manufactured by it, or which it was able and desired to manufacture during the months of May, June, and the early part of July, 1906, and further believe from the evidence that on the 25th day of July, when the plaintiff informed the defendant of its intention to cease delivery of the coke under the contract sued on in this case, the defendant had secured contracts for and was demanding the delivery of all the coke that the plaintiff was then making, and was able and desired to make between that date and the first day of October, 1906, then the failure of the defendant during the months of May, June, and the early part of July, 1906, to furnish sufficient orders to the plaintiff for its coke as aforesaid, did not give the plaintiff the right to cancel and refuse to comply with the said contract on and after the 25th day of July, 1906."

The court refused all of these instructions and gave one, prepared by itself, embodying, in a general way, practically all that is included in those rejected, and covering nearly two pages of the printed record. It is not separated into paragraphs nor even sentences, and is very much involved. We will not undertake to analyze it fully. It suffices to point out one fatal defect in it, and to show which of the instructions, requested by the defendant, should have been given.

In lieu of the defendant's sixth instruction, above quoted, the court inserted this in its instruction: "And that such breach was not waived by the plaintiff." The difference between the two instructions on the subject of waiver is manifest. The one requested by the defendant sets forth hypothetically the facts and tells the jury that, if they find they are established, the plaintiff has waived the breach, committed by the defendant, and cannot rely upon it as matter of defense to the claim of recoupment. Sometimes a waiver is a mere matter of intention, a fact to be ascertained by the jury; but it is not always so. It is often a mixed question of law and fact, and, when it is, the court, if asked to do so, should submit only the questions of fact to the jury, and declare the law thereon itself. The instruction on this question, prepared by the court, submits to the jury both the law and the facts. The one asked for by the defendant would have submitted the questions of fact only, and it should have been given, if it embodies in the hypothetical statement all of the elements necessary to constitute a waiver. Reading it in the light of the evidence, we think it does. That the plaintiff continued to take the benefit of the contract, as far as the defendant was able to perform it, through the months of May and June and up into the month of July, is an uncontroverted fact. In its bill of particulars and the testimony of its witnesses, the plaintiff claims from the defendant the purchase money of coal delivered as late as July 23d, and possibly July 24th. This instruction does not affirmatively and positively state this salient and vital fact in the case, but it is therein embraced by implication in two places. It says this: "And further believe from the evidence that on the 25th day of July, when the plaintiff informed the defendant of its intention to cease deliveries of coke"—which carries the necessary implication that deliveries had continued up until that time. The like implication is found in this clause: "Then the failure of the defendant during the months of May, June, and the early part of July, 1906, to furnish sufficient orders to the plaintiff for its coke as aforesaid." The assumption of an admitted fact in an instruction is always permissible. Indeed, it would be wrong to submit it to the jury as a matter in controversy. Blashf. on Instruct. § 36, citing numerous decisions. If it could be said this material fact has been omitted from the instruction, no possible injury or prejudice could flow from the omission, so far as we are able to see. Both parties say it is true. The plaintiff's claim is founded upon it as true, and the defendant admits it. Can it be supposed, for an instant, that the jury could overlook it or that it could escape their attention? However this may be, it has not been omitted. Though informal and only impliedly expressed, it is included in the instruction as a concession.

If the plaintiff had desired to do so, no doubt it could have suspended the contract on the failure of the defendant, for the reasons disclosed by it, to take the product of the plant. The contract contemplated it by giving to the party not in default the alternative right of cancellation, during the continuance of an interruption, by immediate notice to that effect, but that would have been mere suspension, during the period of the interruption, founded upon a cause, specified in the contract. This clause, therefore, cannot be construed as precluding right of repudiation for a breach of the contract, a failure to take the product of the plant, not justified by such cause. But as the instructions we are now considering assume or concede, for their purposes, the nonexistence of such cause, this phase of the case turns on the ability of the defendant to take the output of the plant, when the plaintiff gave notice of renunciation or repudiation. Hence the construction of the strike clause will be deferred for the present. It seems clear that the plaintiff, after having taken the benefit of the contract to the extent of the ability of the defendant to perform it, with full knowledge of the nonperformance and the conditions relied upon by way of excuse therefor, could not, after the breach on the part of the defendant had ceased to exist, repudiate or cancel the contract on the ground of such past breach. Full performance by the defendant, or partial performance, justified by the cause specified, may have been originally a condition precedent, or the fulfillment of a dependent or concurrent promise or undertaking, but, if that be true, failure on the part of the plaintiff to avail itself of the breach or nonperformance thereof reduced it to a mere warranty, and rendered it no longer available as justification for nonperformance of the reciprocal obligation. "A condition precedent may change its character in the course of performance of the contract; and a breach that would effect a discharge, if treated as such at once by the promisee, ceases to be such, if he goes on with the contract and takes a benefit under it. Accordingly, if, after breach of a condition precedent, the promisee continues to accept performance, the condition loses its effect as such, and becomes a warranty in the sense that it can be used only as a means of recovering damages." Hammond on Contracts, p. 923; Clarke on Con. p. 466; Page on Con. §§ 1494-1506; 9 Cyc. 646; 7 A. & E. Enc. Law, 152. This principle is well stated in Wiley v. Athol, 150 Mass. 426, 23 N. E. 311, 6 L. R. A. 342, in the following terms: "But although conditions precedent must be performed, and a partial performance is not sufficient, yet when a contract has been performed in a substantial part, and the other party has voluntarily accepted and received the benefit of the part performance, knowing that the contract was not being fully performed, the latter may thereby be precluded from relying upon the performance of the residue as a condition precedent to his liability to pay for what he has received, and may be compelled to rely upon his claim for damages in respect of the defective performance." To the same effect see Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149, 15 L. Ed. 847; Withers v. Green, 9 How. 213, 13 L. Ed. 109; Thornton v. Wynn, 12 Wheat. 183, 6 L. Ed. 595; Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 283, 34 Am. Dec. 56; Burnett v. Stanton, 2 Ala. 183; Kase v. John, 10 Watts (Pa.) 107, 36 Am. Dec. 148; Kenworthy v. Stevens, 132 Mass. 123. The principle was applied under conditions similar to those presented here in Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 417, in which it is said and held: "That although an interruption of the mill power might be construed to be the breach of a condition precedent, which would authorize the defendant to break off from the performance of his contract, yet if he continued in the performance until the power was re-established, this would amount to a waiver, and he would no longer be excused from further performance; although, if he had suffered loss by the delay in furnishing the power, he would have a remedy by an action for damages."

Under this principle, waiver follows as matter of law, if the facts conditionally assumed in the instruction are true. Hence, the refusal of said instruction and failure to give a proper one on the subject-matter thereof constitute error to the prejudice of the defendant, for which the judgment will have to be reversed and a new trial allowed.

The same principle sustains defendant's instructions Nos. 1 and 5. All the others were properly refused. Nos. 2 and 4 are bad for lack of a limitation on the amount of the damages claimed by way of recoupment. Neither of these claims is a set-off. A set-off is a debt due the defendant from the plaintiff. Case Mfg. Co. v. Sweeny, 47 W. Va. 638, 35 S. E. 853; Clark's Cove Guano Co. v. Appling, 38 W. Va. 470, 10 S. E. 809; Harrison v. Wortham, 8 Leigh (Va.) 296; Robertson v. Hogshhead, 3 Leigh (Va.) 667; Christian v. Miller, 3 Leigh (Va.) 78, 23 Am. Dec. 251. Unliquidated damages cannot be the subject of a set-off. The loss of commission by reason of plaintiff's alleged breach of the contract is a claim of that kind. The commissions were not earned. The defendant did not sell the plaintiff's coke to the Norton Iron Works, on account of which the commissions are claimed. Therefore, the claim is for unliquidated damages, arising out of an alleged wrongful prevention of gain or profit the defendant would have earned, if it had been permitted to make the sales. Such damages, like those embodied in the other claim, constitute mere matter of defense, going to reduce or bar recovery, but affording no basis for a verdict or judgment over in favor of the defendant. Gas Co. v. Healy, 33 W. Va. 102, 106, 10 S. E. 56; Baltimore, etc., Co. v. Bitner, 15 W. Va. 455, 464, 36 Am. Rep. 820; Baltimore, etc., Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833, 838, 31 Am. Rep. 775.

Instruction No. 3 embodies defendant's interpretation of the suspension or strike clause, and claims the benefit thereof under a state of facts hypothetically submitted to the jury. For the purpose of testing the correctness of this instruction and settling the principles of the case for the new trial, it becomes necessary to construe this clause. We think it gives right to the party not in default, in the case of an accident of any of the kinds therein mentioned, not to cancel the contract wholly and for all time, but only during the period of the interruption. This accords with the letter of the clause. It says immediate notice of cancellation shall be given, if such party desires to cancel. This negatives the right to cancel by notice at any time such party may see fit to do so, within the period of interruption. The desire to cancel must be communicated immediately on the happening of the interruption or as soon as may be practicable thereafter. The party having such right must elect at the beginning of the period whether he will cancel or take partial performance. Then the clause says the contract may be canceled during the period of interruption, which excludes the idea of a cancellation for all time. Partial performance, however, is not optional with either party. It is justified only by the causes specified. Partial performance not justified in that way is a breach of the contract. When there is justifiable partial performance, it does not alter the contract nor confer any right of alteration. All of this is within the contract. It is provided for by it. Just what considerations induced the insertion of this provision in the contract, we do not know, but it is easy to perceive some upon which it may have been founded. Partial performance on the part of one company might, under certain circumstances, become very embarrassing to the other. The producing company might find the closing of its plant decidedly more economical than partial operation during the period of interruption; or it might have an opportunity to dispose of its entire product to some person other than the agent, during such period, but no chance to dispose of a portion of it while bound to deliver the other part to the agent. Similar considerations might make this right of suspension highly valuable to the agent company. Every word, phrase, and clause in a contract must have some force and effect, and there is a presumption that the parties inserted them for reasons sufficient and satisfactory to themselves, whether the court is able to see them or not.

Instruction No. 3 adopts the erroneous view that the letter of June 13, 1906, indicating probability of capacity to take no more than five to seven cars per day after July 1st, and failure of the plaintiff to reply thereto or indicate, in any way, its dissatisfaction with the prospect, amounted to a modification of the contract, and relieved the defendant of its obligation to take more than that quantity of coke after July 1st. When that letter was written, the defendant was operating under the suspension clause, without any notice of a desire on the part of the plaintiff to suspend the contract during the period of interruption. It was bound to exert itself to overcome the difficulties causing the interruption and put itself in a situation, as soon as possible, to take the entire output of the plaintiff's plant. Its partial performance was justified only during the period of its inability to render full performance, and if it was able to take all the coke that the plaintiff could produce after the first of July, or, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have been able to do so, but was not, it was bound to take it in the one instance, and its refusal to take it, in the other, amounted to a breach of the contract. Therefore we think this instruction was properly refused.

In conformity with our interpretation of this clause, we are of the opinion that the loss of the Algoma Steel Company contract was not one of the causes of interruption specified as justifying partial performance, if such loss resulted from underbidding by a competing company, and failure on the part of the defendant to take all of the plaintiff's coke, due to such loss, constituted a breach of the contract, justifying renunciation thereof by the plaintiff. But, if the loss of that contract was due to bad quality of coke, produced by the plaintiff, it would be estopped to set up the loss of that contract as justification for repudiation. A party to a contract is not discharged by a breach, occasioned by its own failure of duty. Again, if failure resulted from loss of said contract by underbidding only, the plaintiff waived the breach by continuing to take the benefit of the contract, after notice, provided the defendant was ready to take the entire output of the plant, when the plaintiff attempted to renounce the contract. On the other hand, we think the accident to the Roanoke Furnace Company, causing partial failure of performance on the part of the defendant, was one of the causes specified in the contract. That clause says "accidents unavoidably causing stoppage or partial stoppage of the works of the buyer" may suspend or partially suspend deliveries, in the absence of notice to completely suspend during the period of interruption, given by the party not in default. The Hull Coal & Coke Corporation was not the buyer within the meaning of the contract. It was designated therein as agent to sell the coke to other persons, and guarantee and collect from them the purchase money. Plainly, its customers were the persons referred to as buyers.

Our conclusion is that the court erred in refusing defendant's instructions Nos. 1, 5, and 6, and in giving its own charge to the jury, from which it follows that the judgment must be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

STATE v. HENDRIX.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. May 14, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1059*)—APPEAL—EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

An exception to a charge, which merely quotes the charge without assigning any specific error, is too general for consideration on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2671; Dec. Dig. § 1059.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—NECESSITY.

Where an indictment contained a count for burglary and a count for larceny growing out of the same transaction, a charge authorizing a general verdict of guilty or not guilty, without specifying the offense, was not erroneous, in the absence of a requested charge requiring the verdict to specify the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2003; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Index.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1059*)—APPEAL—EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

An exception that the court erred in not charging the law applicable to the issues as required by Const. art. 5, § 26, requiring judges to declare the law, is too general for consideration on appeal, because it fails to specify in what particular there was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2671; Dec. Dig. § 1059.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—NECESSITY.

Where the court substantially charged the law applicable to the case, if accused desired a further charge, he must prepare requests to that effect.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Barnwell County; Geo. W. Gage, Judge.

Frank Hendrix was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Dismissed.

The following are the exceptions:

"(1) Because his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'And then there is a second count, which charges him with stealing a gun worth $7. That is only petit larceny, and the penalty for that is only 30 days' imprisonment. You have heard the testimony, gentlemen, if you are satisfied that he broke into the house and stole, say so, and if you think the punishment too severe, you may recommend him to the mercy of the court. You may write one of two verdicts: 'GUILTY,' or 'GUILTY with recommendation,' or, of course, 'Not guilty,' and sign your name as foreman to the verdict.'

"(2) That the circuit judge erred in charging the jury that they might write one of two verdicts—that is, 'GUILTY,' or 'GUILTY with recommendation,' or, of course, 'Not guilty'—in that under such charge the jury was misled into failing to specify the specific offense on which they found the defendant guilty. Such verdict being responsive to both counts in the indictment, and the court having failed to instruct the jury that they might acquit the defendant on the first count and convict him on the second count alone, they were misled into finding a general verdict of guilt, even if they found from the facts that the defendant was guilty of the second count only.

"(3) Because the judge erred in not charging the law applicable to the issues raised by the second count in the indictment, in that, the jury could convict or acquit the defendant on the said second count, thereby ignoring the said second count in the indictment, all of which deprives the defendant of having his issues in his said case fully passed upon by the jury and court, which were prejudicial to his case, for the reason, had the jury acquitted on the first count and convicted on the second count, the punishment and fine would have been very much lighter, only 30 days or $100 at the greatest.

"(4) Because the judge erred in not charging the law applicable to the issues in the indictment, as required by the Constitution of 1895 (article 5, § 26), which provides: 'Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but shall declare the law.' All of which, it is respectfully submitted, he failed to do in this case, as is shown by reference to his said charge."

A. H. Ninestein, for appellant. James F. Byrnes, Sol., for the State.

GARY, A. J. The defendant was convicted under an indictment containing two separate counts—one for burglary and the other for larceny—growing out of the same transaction. The verdict of the jury was simply "GUILTY." The defendant was sentenced to imprisonment for a term of five years, on the public works of Barnwell county, and he appealed from said sentence.

The first exception is too general for consideration, as it merely quotes from the charge of his honor the presiding judge, without assigning any specific error. The second exception is as follows: "That the circuit judge erred in charging the jury that they might write one of two verdicts—that is, 'GUILTY,' or 'GUILTY with recommendation,' or, of course, 'Not guilty'—in that under such charge the jury was misled into failing to specify the specific offense on which they found the defendant guilty. Such verdict being responsive to both counts in the indictment, and the court having failed to instruct the jury that they might acquit the defendant on the first count, and convict him on the second count alone, they were misled into finding a general verdict of guilt, even if they found from the facts that the defendant was guilty of the second count only." In the case of State v. Smith, 57 S. C. 489, 35 S. E. 727, the defendant was tried under an indictment charging him, in separate counts, with two offenses growing out of the same act. The jury rendered a general verdict of guilt. He appealed from the sentence on exceptions, two of which were as follows: "(16) Because his honor erred in not instructing the jury that they could convict under one count, and acquit under the other. (17) Because his honor erred in not, at least, instructing the jury to pass upon each count separately." In disposing of the said exceptions, the court thus ruled: "There was no request that the jury should be instructed, as it is claimed they should have been, in exceptions 16 and 17, and hence the omission to so instruct the jury cannot properly be regarded as reversible error." This exception and the third, which raises practically the same question, are therefore overruled.

The fourth exception is as follows: "Because the judge erred in not charging the law applicable to the issues in the indictment, as required by the Constitution of 1895 (article 5, § 26), which provides: 'Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but shall declare the law.' All of which, it is respectfully submitted, he failed to do in this case, as is shown by reference to his said charge." This exception is too general for consideration, as it fails to specify in what particular there was error. We may say, however, that his honor the presiding judge substantially charged the law applicable to the case; and, if the appellant desired a further charge, it was incumbent on him to prepare requests to that effect. State v. Adams, 68 S. C. 421, 47 S. E. 876; Jennings v. Mfg. Co., 72 S. C. 411, 52 S. E. 113; Williams v. Railway, 76 S. C. 1, 56 S. E. 652; State v. Thompson, 76 S. C. 116, 56 S. E. 789; Snipes v. Railway, 76 S. C. 208, 56 S. E. 959; Morris v. Ass'n, 78 S. C. 398, 59 S. E. 27; State v. Chastain, 87 S. E. 6. This exception is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the appeal be dismissed.

SIMMONS v. OKEETEE CLUB et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. May 14, 1910.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 123*) — ACTIONS AGAINST PRINCIPAL—EVIDENCE AS TO AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

In an action against a principal and its agent for damages caused by the agent's shooting plaintiff, evidence held insufficient to show that the agent in shooting plaintiff was acting within the apparent scope of his authority.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Beaufort County; R. Withers Memminger, Judge.

Action by Frank Simmons against the Okeetee Club and W. D. Thomas. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. N. Heyward and Jervey & Cohen, for appellant. C. J. Colcock and Smythe, Lee & Frost, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. This is an action for punitive damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff. The allegations of the complaint, material to the questions presented by the exceptions, are as follows: "That the defendant W. D. Thomas is an agent and servant of the defendant Okeetee Club, and as such is charged with the care and protection of the property of the said Okeetee Club, within the state of South Carolina. That on or about the 24th day of October, 1906, the defendant Okeetee Club, through its servants and agents, wantonly, willfully, and maliciously entered upon the lands of the plaintiff at or near Hardeeville, in said state, and erected thereon a fence, which said fence connected with a fence, the property of the said Okeetee Club, east and west of the land of the plaintiff. That thereupon, and on or about the 1st day of March, 1907, plaintiff, because of threats against him made by the defendant W. D. Thomas and other persons as agents and servants of the Okeetee Club, was compelled to leave the tract of land before mentioned, and seek personal safety by leaving said property in the possession of a tenant. That thereupon the said Okeetee Club wantonly, willfully, and maliciously entered upon the said property, built a wire fence thereon, and otherwise attempted to exercise thereon acts of ownership. That being advised that this act of ownership might endanger his title to said tract of land, the plaintiff cut down and removed the fence, and otherwise asserted his right of possession; whereupon the defendant W. D. Thomas, as agent for the Okeetee Club as aforesaid, and in discharge of his duty to said Okeetee Club, and acting within the scope thereof, again threatened the plaintiff, saying that if he again cut and removed the before-mentioned fence, he (the plaintiff) would be killed. That thereupon the said fence was rebuilt by the said defendant, its servants and agents, and true it is that on the 3d day of April, 1907, it was removed again by the plaintiff, whereupon the said W. D. Thomas, as agent of the Okeetee Club, as aforesaid, in pursuance of his threat aforesaid, in discharge of his duty to said Okeetee Club, and acting within the scope thereof, on the said day and year, sought the plaintiff, and wantonly, willfully, and maliciously did shoot and wound him. That the plaintiff was twice shot by the defendant W. D. Thomas, as agent aforesaid, the plaintiff being unarmed, and was severely wounded in the head and body." At the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant Okeetee Club made a motion for a nonsuit, on the following ground: "Because the testimony fails to connect the Okeetee Club, with the injury to the plaintiff, so as to make the Okeetee Club responsible therefor; in fact, the testimony fails to show that the injury to the plaintiff was due to the Okeetee Club, or to the acts of any of its agents or employes when acting within the scope of their authority." There was testimony to the effect that the fence was erected on lands belonging to the plaintiff; that the defendant Thomas granted permission to the Okeetee Club to put a fence over his line, connecting the two fences of the club; that the duly authorized servants of the club built the fence for its benefit; that the defendant Thomas was the agent of the club, and duly authorized to protect the property of the club, including the fence in question.

We proceed to consider whether there was any testimony tending to show that the shooting of the plaintiff by Thomas was within the apparent scope of his authority to protect the fence. The undisputed testimony showed that at the time of the shooting the fence had been cut by the plaintiff, who had resumed work on the railroad, about 1,600 feet from where the fence stood; and of course he was not then attempting to injure the fence. The act of destroying the fence was then completely executed. If the testimony had shown that the shooting took place while the work of destruction was in fieri, the nonsuit would have been improper. But we fail to see what relation the shooting had to the protection of the property, as it could not be successfully contended that it would prevent the plaintiff in future from cutting the fence. Under such circumstances the court cannot hold that there was testimony tending to show that the shooting was within the implied authority of the agent.

Judgment affirmed.

POLLARD v. FOUNTAIN INN OIL CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. May 14, 1910.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—INJURY TO SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

A manufacturer maintained a projecting set screw in a revolving shaft between a pulley and a post, in a space of about 11 inches. On the other side of the pulley there was a clear space of from three to four feet which was free from any danger. An employé attempted to work in the space between the pulley and the post, and was caught by the set screw and killed. The appliance was used by manufacturers of ordinary prudence and foresight. Held, that the manufacturer was not, as a matter of law, guilty of negligence in failing to furnish a reasonably safe place for his employes in which to work.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 219*)—INJURY TO SERVANT — ASSUMPTION OF RISK — OBVIOUS DANGERS.

The risk of going between the pulley and the post was incidental to the employment, and was plainly obvious to one of ordinary observation, and was assumed by decedent, who had been employed for two or three years, and who voluntarily selected a place of danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 610-624; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; S. W. G. Shipp, Judge.

Action by Mollie E. Pollard, as administratrix of Charles Pollard, deceased, against the Fountain Inn Oil Company. From an order of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cothran, Dean & Cothran, for appellant. Haynsworth, Patterson & Blythe, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an appeal from an order of nonsuit. The facts are thus stated in the argument of the appellant's attorneys: "At the time of the accident, January 17, 1908, Charles Pollard, a young man 22 years old, was employed by the defendant to attend to the tinters and cotton gins, in the defendant's oilmill and ginnery. On the morning of that day, he was directed to operate the gins, and when he started at this work he discovered that the lacing of the belt to one of the gins, which connected the pulley of the gin with a pulley attached to the shafting on the ground floor, directly underneath the gin, had been removed to supply a broken lacing upon a belt in the oilmill. This belt had to be repaired before the gin could be operated. At this time the belt was hanging loose on the gin pulley; one end lying on the floor of the ginnery and the other end on the ground floor beneath, near the pulley which was attached to the shafting which supplied the power. Two holes had been cut in the ginnery floor, directly under the pulley on the gin, through which the belt was intended to pass, and through one of these holes the belt then was. To get the two ends of the belting together for the purpose of lacing it, as the end lying on the ground underneath could not be reached and pulled up through the hole by one standing on the ginnery floor, which he did by means of a set of steps near the middle of the building, the landing place of which was within a few feet of the pulley on the ground floor, and the way thereto free and unobstructed, Pollard approached the belt, as it was hanging through the hole in the floor above, in the most direct route, and on the side of the shafting upon which it was hanging. He called to one of his friends to push the other end of the belt through the other hole in the floor, that he might catch it, draw it underneath the shafting, relace it, and adjust it to the pulley. A post to which the shafting was attached was about 11 inches from the pulley, and in this space the belt was hanging. Between the pulley and the post, in this 11-inch space, there was a 'collar' screwed to the shafting by two 'set screws,' the heads of which projected above half an inch. The shafting was revolving at the time, which made the projecting set screws practically invisible. As Pollard reached over the shafting to catch the loose end of the belt hanging on the opposite side, his clothing was caught by the set screws so projecting, and his body beaten to death against the upright and overhead timbers."

At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, which was granted for the reasons therein set out. Subsequently plaintiff's attorneys made a motion to set aside the order of nonsuit. After hearing argument, his honor the circuit judge was satisfied that the nonsuit should remain, and assigned the following reasons for his ruling: "The plaintiff's testimony showed that the collar with projecting set screw such as defendant used was an appliance almost universally used in ginneries. One of the witnesses had known of one or two instances where ginners had employed collars with set screws let down into them, but he stated that these were the exceptions. There was no evidence tending to show that this kind of an appliance would not be used by a master of ordinary prudence and foresight. The very reverse was shown. In addition, plaintiff's testimony showed that the collar and set screw in question were at a point where it was impossible for the human body to pass. It was located between the pulley and a large post, to which the shafting was attached, in a space of about 11 inches. On the other side of the pulley there was a clear space of from three to four feet that was free from any danger, and where the work could have been as well done. Here, then, was a case where the deceased had two ways of doing the work in hand. One of them involved danger of contact with the set screw; the other was free from danger. He chose the dangerous way, and assumed the risk involved. Furthermore, the evidence showed that the deceased was in charge of the ginnery; that the engineer was subject to his directions and control. It was in his power, therefore, to have stopped the machinery if he had deemed it necessary for his safety to do so. If, being free to stop the machinery, he elected to do the work while it was running, he must be taken to have assumed the risk. It is certain that the defendant had given him no directions to do the work while the machinery was running. The deceased had been at work in this ginnery for some two or three years, and for about one month had been in charge of the ginning establishment. He must be taken to have been aware of the presence of the collar and set screw, located as they were in a well-lighted room. On the whole, I conclude as follows: That there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant operating as a proximate cause of the death of the deceased; that the risk was one ordinarily incident to the employment in which the deceased was engaged; that the risk was plain and obvious to a man of ordinary observation, and was assumed by the deceased; that having a perfectly safe way to do the work, he voluntarily selected a method involving danger to himself, and thereby assumed the risk."

For the reasons assigned by his honor the circuit judge, the order of nonsuit is affirmed.

STATE v. RUCKER.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. May 14, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 695*)—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—WHEN DETERMINED.

The competency of evidence must be determined by the state of facts existing when the objection is interposed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 695.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 408*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—ATTEMPT TO COMPROMISE.

The evidence of an attempt to compromise in a criminal case is competent; it being for the jury to decide whether the effort indicated a consciousness of guilt, or merely fear or anxiety to avoid the risk of a miscarriage of justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 785; Dec. Dig. § 408.*]

3. BASTARDS (§ 16*)—SUPPORT OF CHILD—DEPOSIT OF MONEY BY FATHER—PUBLIC POLICY—DUTY OF FATHER.

It is not against public policy for the father of a bastard child to deposit money with an officer of the law for its maintenance, as there is a natural and moral duty resting upon him to support his illegitimate offspring.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 408*)—EVIDENCE OF COMPROMISE—COMPETENCY.

In a prosecution for bastardy, evidence as to whether accused deposited money with the clerk of the court for the purpose of compromising the case was competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 785; Dec. Dig. § 408.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 695*)—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

Where accused's attorney in objecting to evidence simply said "We object," the objection was too general.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1634; Dec. Dig. § 695.*]

6. BASTARDS (§ 64*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for bastardy, it is not necessary to a conviction that the evidence show beyond a reasonable doubt that the reputed bastard child is likely to become a burden to the county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. § 174; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Calhoun County; R. C. Watts, Judge.

W. B. Rucker was convicted of bastardy, and he appeals. Appeal dismissed.

J. M. Walker, for appellant. P. T. Hildebrand, Sol., for the State.

GARY, A. J. This is an appeal from the sentence imposed upon the defendant for bastardy.

The first exception is as follows: "That the presiding judge was in error in allowing the witness J. A. Wolfe, clerk of the court, to testify, over objection by the defense, to the fact of money having been deposited with him by the defendant for the alleged purpose of compromising the case; the error being that an offer of compromise in a case of this kind cannot be used as evidence of guilt." At the time his honor the presiding judge made the ruling which gave rise to this exception, the solicitor had merely asked the question: "Did he ever deposit any money in your office, in this bastardy case?" The defendant's attorney then made the objection that an offer of compromise was inadmissible, for the purpose of showing the guilt of the prisoner, although no testimony relative to a compromise had been offered. Whereupon his honor the presiding judge ruled that the declaration of a defendant is competent. If the question was competent, the objection should not have been made to it, but to inadmissible testimony thereby elicited. The question of competency must be determined by the state of facts existing when the objection is interposed. The evidence of an attempt to compromise in a criminal case is competent; it being for the jury to decide whether the effort indicated a consciousness of guilt, or merely fear or anxiety to avoid the risk of a miscarriage of justice. State v. Wideman, 68 S. C. 119, 46 S. E. 769. It is not against public policy for the father of a bastard child to deposit money with an officer of the law for its maintenance, as there is a natural and moral duty resting upon him to support his illegitimate offspring. Com. of Poor v. Gilbert, 2 Strob. 152. The question was competent, as its tendency was to develop such a state of facts, and the exception is overruled.

The second exception is as follows: "That the presiding judge was in error in allowing the witness Wolfe to testify as to the contents of a certain alleged agreement or contract, and in admitting it in evidence; such paper not having been signed by the defendant, nor any one authorized to sign for him, nor as a matter of fact by any one." When the paper was offered for the purpose of being introduced in evidence, the defendant's attorney simply said, "We object." The objection was too general, and this exception is also overruled.

The third exception is disposed of by what has already been said.

The fourth exception is as follows: "That the presiding judge was in error in failing and neglecting to charge the jury that, before they could find a verdict of guilty, the evidence must show beyond reasonable doubt that the reputed bastard child is likely to become a burden to the county." The cases of State v. McDonald, 2 McCord, 299, and State v. Crawford, 10 Rich. Law, 361, show that this exception cannot be sustained.

The fifth exception was abandoned.
Appeal dismissed.

CITY OF COLUMBIA v. SPIGENER.

Supreme Court of South Carolina. May 11, 1910.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1169*)—REVIEW.

Where a mandamus proceeding was decided in the circuit court, and on appeal on the theory that no issue of fact was involved, but on rehearing it appeared that the pleadings raised important issues of fact, and that the cause could not be decided until a finding on the facts after hearing evidence, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4531; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

On rehearing. Former opinion withdrawn, and case remanded.

For former opinion, see 67 S. E. 552.

PER CURIAM. In this proceeding for mandamus the circuit judge in his decree ordering the mandamus to issue said, "It was admitted on both sides at the hearing that the pleadings herein raised no issue of fact"; and the case was decided by the circuit court and heard in this court on the pleadings without the taking of evidence. One of the exceptions of the defendant is directed to this finding of the circuit court. This court heard the cause, and has filed a decree reversing the judgment of the circuit court, and a petition has been filed for a rehearing. Upon a careful reconsideration and review of the entire case, we have reached the conclusion that the pleadings raise important issues of fact, and that the cause cannot be justly decided until there has been a finding of the facts after hearing evidence.

It is therefore adjudged that the decree of this court be withdrawn from the files, and that this order be substituted therefor, that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause be remanded to that court for a new trial on the evidence to be taken in such manner as the circuit court may direct.

DALE et al. v. GAITHER LUMBER CO.
et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 16*)—PROMISE TO PAY DEBT OF ANOTHER—ORIGINAL PROMISE.

Where defendant employed a person to cut, saw, and stack timber, and such person hired plaintiff to do the logging, an agreement by defendant to withhold from such person the amount he owed plaintiff and pay it to plaintiff was not within the statute of frauds (Revisal 1905, § 974) as a promise to pay the debt of another and void because not in writing; defendant having a direct pecuniary interest in the work to be performed by plaintiff and having received the benefit of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; Justice, Judge.

Action by A. N. Dale and others against the Gaither Lumber Company and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

There was evidence tending to show that one L. L. Wood had contracted in writing with defendant company to "cut, saw, log and stack in a workmanlike manner" for defendant company the timber growing on a tract of land of 888 acres, and was engaged in the performance of said contract; that the plaintiff had agreed with L. L. Wood to do the logging for this job at $3 per 1,000 feet; that plaintiff went to work under this agreement, and after a short time, not receiving any money, and not being satisfied with the arrangements for his pay, he saw the manager of defendant company and told him that plaintiff was to have $3 per 1,000 for doing the logging, and that he wanted the company to hold back that amount for plaintiff out of money to be earned by Wood under his contract; that the manager agreed to do this, and, under and by reason of this agreement, plaintiff went back to work and did logging to the amount of $400 and over, for which he had not been paid; that this arrangement and agreement as to holding back the $3 per 1,000 was made with the knowledge and assent of Wood; that after this agreement on the part of the manager a large amount of the lumber was cut and turned over to the company by Wood, the amount thereafter earned by Wood under the contract being near $2,000; and that plaintiff had applied to the company for his money, and it had failed and refused to pay the amount or any part of it, claiming that they had paid Wood in full, and that he was indebted to them several hundred dollars on an old debt, etc. Defendant's evidence tended to show that they had the written contract with Wood to do the work, and they did not know plaintiff in the transaction; that the first they knew of plaintiff making any claim against the company was when he presented an order from Wood for the company for $416; that they had paid Wood something over $2,000, all they owed him for work done under the contract, and he was indebted to the company for more than $200 on an old debt. There was also evidence of some payments by Wood to Dale on the amount due him for logging. It appeared that R. A. Gaither was secretary and treasurer, having power as general manager to bind the company.

On the issue as to the liability of the defendant company, the court charged the jury as follows: "The court charges you: (a) That if you find from the evidence that R. A. Gaither, who is admitted to be the secretary and treasurer of the Gaither Lumber Company, agreed with plaintiff, A. N. Dale, that he would hold back $3 per 1,000 feet out of the money due or to become due L. L. Wood for sawing for said company, and that he would pay the same to said plaintiff for cutting and logging done by him for said Wood, and if you find from the evidence was induced thereby to go on with the logging, then the defendant the Gaither Lumber Company would be liable to pay plaintiff at that rate for all timber cut and logged by plaintiff for said Wood after the time such agreement was made, and you will therefore allow plaintiff $3 per 1,000 feet for whatever amount of timber you find was so cut and logged, in your answer to the second issue, (b)"

There was verdict against the company for $398.90. Judgment on the verdict, and defendant excepted and appealed, assigning for error chiefly that the demand of plaintiff against defendant company was avoided under the statute of frauds (Revisal 1905, § 974), requiring agreements to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another to be in writing, and that all oral evidence tending to support the claim should have been excluded.

Avery & Ervin, for appellants. John M. Mull and J. T. Perkins, for appellees.

HOKE, J. We are of opinion that the case has been correctly tried, and the charge of his honor is in accord with the better considered precedents.

In Emerson v. Slater, 63 U. S. 28-43 (16 L. Ed. 360), a decision on this section of the statute of frauds, the court said: "But whenever the main purpose and object of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, involving either a benefit to himself, or damage to the other contracting party, his promise is not within the statute, although it may be in form a promise to pay the debt of another, and although the performance of it may incidentally have the effect of extinguishing that liability." This position has been sustained and applied in other cases of the same court, notably in Davis v. Patrick, 141 U. S. 479, 12 Sup. Ct. 58, 35 L. Ed. 826, in which it was held: "In determining whether an alleged promise is or is not a promise to answer for the debt of another, the following rules may be applied: (1) If the promisor is a stranger to the transaction, without interest in it, the obligations of the statute are to be strictly upheld; (2) but if he has a personal, immediate, and pecuniary interest in a transaction in which a third party is the original obligor, the courts will give effect to the promise. The real character of a promise does not depend altogether upon form of expression, but largely upon the situation of the parties, and upon whether they understood it to be a collateral or direct promise."

This rule has prevailed in many well-considered cases in other courts construing this section of the statute, as in Crawford v. Edison, 45 Ohio St. 239, 13 N. E. 80; Prout & Robertson v. Webb, 87 Ala. 593, 6 South. 190; Commissioners v. Heating Co., 128 Ind. 247, 27 N. E. 612, 12 L. R. A. 502—and the same general principle has been recognized and approved with us, as in Deaver v. Deaver, 137 N. C. 241, 49 S. E. 113; Voorhees v. Porter, 134 N. C. 591-605, 47 S. E. 31, 65 L. R. A. 736; Whitehurst v. Hyman, 90 N. C. 487; Mason v. Wilson, 84 N. C. 51, 37 Am. Rep. 612; Threadgill v. McLendon, 76 N. C. 74. A doctrine resting upon the same basic principle appears in several of these cases from our own court to the effect that where a debtor places a fund, money, or property in the hands of a third person, who agrees to pay the debt out of the fund, the said agreement is not within the statute.

The position is stated in Mason v. Wilson, supra, as follows: "A parol promise to pay the debt of another out of property placed by the debtor in the hands of the promisor, who converts the same into money, is not within the statute of frauds. It is an original and independent promise founded upon a new consideration." And in either class of cases the promise on the part of the third person is held to be a binding obligation, whether the original debtor continues liable or not; this by reason of the new consideration moving between the parties.

Referring to this question in Whitehurst v. Hyman, supra, Merrimon, J., said: "It is settled by many judicial decisions in construing this statute, and others substantially like it, that where there is some new and original consideration of benefit or harm moving between the party to whom the debt to be paid is due, and the party making the promise to pay the same, such case is not within the statute; as where a promise to pay an existing debt is made in consideration of property placed by the debtor in the hands of the party promising, or where the party to whom the promise is made relinquishes a levy on the goods of the debtor for the benefit of the promisor, or where the party promising has a personal interest, benefit, or advantage of his own to be subserved, without regard to the interests or advantage of the original debtor; as, for example, if a creditor has a lien on certain property of his debtor to the amount of his debt, and a third person who has an interest in the same property promises the creditor to pay the debt in consideration of the creditor's relinquishing his lien. Such promises are not within the statute, because they are not made 'to answer the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person.' It may be the performance of the promise will have the effect of discharging the original debtor; but such discharge was not the inducement to, or the consideration to, support the promise. The moving, controlling purpose of the promisor in such cases is his own advantage, not that of the debtor. It not unfrequently happens that in a great variety of business circumstances it becomes important in a valuable sense to third parties to discharge the debt of a debtor, or relieve his property from liability to the creditor for the benefit of such third parties, without regard to the benefit, ease, or advantage of the debtor. The advantage to the third party, the promisor, is a sufficient valuable consideration to support a contract separate from, and independent of, the debt to be discharged."

And to like effect, delivering the opinion in Voorhees v. Porter, supra, Associate Justice Walker said: "But we think the case of Mason v. Wilson, 84 N. C. 51, 37 Am. St. Rep. 612, is directly in point. The doctrine there stated is that if a third person promises the debtor to pay his antecedent debts in consideration of property placed in the hands of the promisor by the debtor for the purpose, which is afterwards converted into money, the creditors may recover on the promise or for money had and received, 'for although,' says the court, 'the promise is in words to pay the debt of another, and the performance of it discharges that debt, still the consideration was not for the benefit or ease of the original debtor, but for a purpose entirely collateral, so as to create an original and distinct cause of action,' and it is immaterial, as is further said by the court, whether the liability of the original debtor is continued or not; the promise being an independent and original one founded upon a new consideration and binding upon the promisor. In our case, though the property was not received for the purpose of being converted into money in order to pay the debt out of the proceeds, the promise to purchase it at a fixed price and to pay the amount of that price to the creditors of the vendor amounts to the same thing, and brings our case within the principle of the third class mentioned in Mason v. Wilson (which authorizes the creditor to sue directly), namely, 'when the promise to pay the debt of another arises out of some new and original consideration of benefit or harm moving between the original contracting parties.' In such a case the creditors may sue the promisor, whether his debtor remains liable to him or not."

In the case before us, the defendant company had a direct pecuniary interest in the work to be performed by plaintiff, and received the benefit of it, and its obligation comes clearly within the first principle as it appears in Emerson v. Slater, supra, and we see no reason why the promise of defendant does not come also within the second principle referred to. The company's agreement was, in effect, to see the claim paid out of the amount to be earned under the contract by L. L. Wood, the original debtor. This was entered into with the sanction and approval of Wood, and, as this amount was earned by Wood, it would seem to become a fund applicable by the agreement to plaintiff's debt, and affording the consideration to support the company's promise as a new and original obligation.

There is no error in the rule laid down by the court which gives defendant any just ground of complaint, and the judgment in plaintiff's favor is affirmed.

No error.

RELEASE (§ 17*)—VALIDITY—MISREPRESENTATION.

Where plaintiff was injured by defendant's negligence, and while still suffering, was sent for by the general manager of defendant and induced to sign a release by false representations of the manager that it was a receipt to enable the manager to obtain insurance arising by reason of the injury, and that it had no bearing on his claim for damages, and such representations were made under circumstances calculated to mislead plaintiff, and did mislead him, the release is invalid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Transylvania County; Joseph S. Adams, Judge.

Action by J. B. McCall against the Toxaway Tanning Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

The plaintiff alleged, and offered evidence tending to show, that he had suffered physical injury caused by negligence of defendant company. Defendant denied negligence, and pleaded a release of all claim for damages, signed by plaintiff, and offered evidence tending to support the defense. Plaintiff replied, alleging that this release was obtained by false and fraudulent statements as to its contents on the part of one J. S. Silverstein, vice president and general manager of defendant company, and alleged, further, that at the time he signed the release he was in such a condition of bodily suffering and mental anxiety that he was not able to understand or comprehend the meaning or effect of same, and offered evidence tending to show the false representations, etc. On the sixth issue, that as to obtaining the release by fraud, the court, among other things, charged the jury as follows: "Before you can find the sixth issue 'Yes,' you must be satisfied by a preponderance of evidence that at the time it was signed the plaintiff did not understand what he was signing, and that he was misled by fraudulent misrepresentations of defendant, and that he was in such a condition from ignorance or mental and physical suffering that he was at the time incapable with reasonable care and caution to understand the contents of the paper. If, however, you are satisfied by the greater weight of the evidence that the defendant, through its agent, Silverstein, represented to plaintiff that plaintiff was merely releasing an insurance company, and was not releasing the defendant company, and that the plaintiff was in such a condition of suffering from the effects of his wounds that he could not comprehend the meaning of the writing, then you should find this issue, 'Yes.'" The jury rendered a verdict that plaintiff was wrongfully injured by defendant's negligence and damaged thereby $150; that plaintiff had released the claim, and said release was not procured by fraud. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Geo. A. Shuford and Brown Shepherd, for appellant. Welch Galloway, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). In the case of Gray v. James, 151 N. C. 80, 65 S. E. 644, the last expression of the court on the question directly presented, the judge delivering the opinion said: "It is true that in an action of this character the false statements must be such that they are reasonably relied upon by the complaining party. It is also true that when an adult of sound mind and memory, and who can read and write, signs or accepts a formal written contract, he is ordinarily bound by its terms. Floars v. Ins. Co., 144 N. C., 232 [56 S. E. 915]. In such case it is very generally held that a man should not be allowed to close his mind to facts readily observable and invoke the aid of courts to upset solemn instruments and disturb and disarrange adjustments so evidenced, when the injury complained of is largely attributable to his own negligent inattention. Older cases have gone very far in upholding defenses resting upon this general principle, and, as pointed out in May v. Loomis, 140 N. C. 357-358 [52 S. E. 728], some of them have been since disapproved, and are no longer regarded as authoritative; and the more recent decisions on the facts presented here, are to the effect that the mere signing or acceptance of a deed by one who can read and write shall not necessarily conclude as to its execution or its contents, when there is evidence tending to show positive fraud, and that the injured party was deceived and thrown off his guard by false statements designedly made at the time, and reasonably relied upon by him. Some of these decisions, here and elsewhere, directly hold that false assurances and statements of the other party may of themselves be sufficient to carry the issue to the jury when there has been nothing to arrest attention or arouse suspicion concerning them"—citing Walsh v. Hall, 68 N. C. 233; Hill v. Brower, 76 N. C. 124; May v. Loomis, 140 N. C. 350, 52 S. E. 728; Griffin v. Lumber Co., 140 N. C. 514, 53 S. E. 307, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463. This, we think, correctly states the doctrine relevant to the inquiry, and its proper application to the case requires that the plaintiff be awarded a new trial.

There was evidence on the part of plaintiff tending to show that plaintiff had been injured by defendant's negligence, and while he was still suffering pain and anxiety from his hurt he was sent for by J. S. Silverstein, vice president and general manager of defendant company, and was induced to sign the release in question by false and fraudulent representations on the part of said Silverstein, to the effect that the release in question was a receipt to enable Silverstein to obtain an amount of insurance arising by reason of the injury, and that same had no bearing on his claim for damages. If such representations were made under circumstances calculated to mislead plaintiff, and did mislead him, the effect upon the doctrine referred to would be to avoid the release, whether plaintiff at the time had mental capacity to understand its purport or not. The charge of his honor, therefore, contained error to plaintiff's prejudice in imposing on plaintiff more exacting conditions than the law requires. The jury were told, in effect, that in order to avoid the release it was incumbent on plaintiff to establish both actual fraud and mental incapacity.

For the error indicated, there will be a new trial on all the issues, and it is so ordered.

New trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by J. G. McCormick, trustee, against S. B. Williams. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McNeill & McNeill and Shaw & Johnson, for appellant. McLean & McLean, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of the sum of $585; it being the difference between the amount bid by the defendant at a sale made by the plaintiff, as trustee, of certain property conveyed to him by deed of trust, and the amount bid at a second sale of the same property, which was made necessary by the failure of the defendant to comply with his bid which was made at the first sale. It appears in the case that H. D. Williams executed several deeds of trust to the plaintiff to secure certain debts therein described, each of which said deeds contained a power of sale, to be exercised by the trustee in case of default in the payment of the debts. The trustee, in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust, and after default in the payment of the debts, sold the property at public auction after due advertisement, and the defendant, S. B. Williams, purchased, at the sale, a sawmill plant for the sum of $785, to be paid in cash. After demand made upon him for a compliance with his bid and the payment of the purchase money, and the refusal to comply, the plaintiff, as trustee, resold the sawmill plant, when it was purchased by T. R. Toler, at the price of $200. The defendant claimed that he had been released from his bid by the Akers Lumber Company, the owner of the notes secured by the deed of trust. It is not contended that he was released otherwise than by J. T. Burrus, who, defendant alleges, was acting, at the time, as agent of the lumber company; but we find no evidence in the case to establish the agency of Burrus. It is well settled by the authorities that an agency cannot be established by the acts or declarations of the person who is alleged to be agent. The agency must first be shown, at least prima facie, by other evidence, before the acts and declarations of the agent become competent evidence against the alleged principal. Jackson v. Tel. Co., 139 N. C. 347, 51 S. E. 1015, 70 L. R. A. 738; Francis v. Edwards, 77 N. C. 271; Daniel v. Railroad, 136 N. C. 517, 48 S. E. 816, 67 L. R. A. 455.

In this case, the court charged the jury to disregard all the testimony as to any conversation or agreement between the defendant and J. T. Burrus, upon the ground, of course, that there was no evidence which tended to show that Burrus was authorized to act for the Akers Lumber Company, and to release the defendant from the obligation which he had incurred by bidding for and buying the property at the first sale. We can see no error in this instruction, as there was no evidence introduced by the defendant to sustain his allegation that Burrus had the authority to release the defendant, even if what was said by him in his conversation with the defendant could have the effect in law of discharging the defendant of his obligation as purchaser at the sale.

As to the damages, when the defendant failed or refused to comply with his bid and pay the amount thereof to the trustee, the sale being a valid one under the deed of trust, the latter could have sued the defendant for the full amount of the bid and recovered the same with costs. He elected, though, to resell the property for the benefit of the defendant, and it is not disputed that the sale was properly made in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust, and that defendant had notice of the sale. The court charged the jury upon the issue as to damages that they might allow the plaintiff the difference between the amount bid at the first sale and the market value of the property, as they might ascertain it to be, considering the price it brought at the second sale, if the jury should find that the second sale was made fairly and in accordance with the requirements of the deed of trust. This charge seems to be in accordance with what was said by this court in the case of Register Company v. Hill, 136 N. C. 276, 48 S. E. 637. The verdict was for an amount much less than the sum which the defendant had bid at the first sale, and which could have been recovered by the plaintiff, as we have already said, if he had elected to sue for the same upon tendering the property to the defendant, if the facts and circumstances of the case required such a tender.

We have examined the record carefully, and have concluded that the case was fairly and correctly tried in the court below, and that consequently there was no error in the rulings and judgment of the court.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; J. S. Adams, Judge.

M. H. Tweed and another were convicted of murder in the second degree, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Moore & Rollins, Gedger & McElroy, and Craig, Martin & Thomason, for appellant. The Attorney General, Geo. L. Jones, and Frank Carter, for the State.

PER CURIAM. The typewritten record in this case embraces 174 pages, and there are 23 exceptions, all of which have been examined. There is only one exception to the admissibility of evidence, and that relates to the admission of testimony in regard to the previous quarrel on Saturday night between Major Tweed and Arthur Franklin. This was clearly competent to show bad blood between the parties. The remaining exceptions (except those purely formal and those relating to the service of case on appeal) appertain to the charge of the court, which is set out in full in the record. We are of opinion that the charge is full and correct, and follows carefully the well-settled decisions of this court. A discussion of them again is unnecessary in an opinion. It is true his honor defined murder in the second degree as the felonious killing of a human being in the first of his charge, but immediately thereafter he defined it correctly as follows: "Murder in the second degree is the felonious killing of a human being in the peace of the state, by a person of sound memory and discretion, with malice aforethought, and this malice may be either express or implied." This was repeated again in the charge. We do not think it possible that the jury could have been misled.

There is abundant evidence to justify the verdict of the jury, and we find no error of sufficient importance to warrant us in ordering another trial.

No error.

SECURITY LIFE & ANNUITY CO. v. FORREST et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action involving the validity of life insurance policies contested by the insurance company on the ground that the insured in his written application falsely represented the condition of his health, the company on the trial proceeded upon the theory that the sons of assured carried out a common plan to defraud the insurance company by obtaining a number of policies upon the life of their father. On cross-examination of a witness for the beneficiary, the witness being one of the sons, evidence was brought out in support of this theory. Held, that there was no prejudicial error in allowing the witness on redirect examination to be asked if any of the policies issued under plaintiff's theory had been paid, in view of the latitude allowed the insurance company in the development of its theory.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pamlico County; Council, Judge.

Action by the Security Life & Annuity Company against Josephus Forrest and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The action was begun in the superior court of Guilford county July 27, 1908. The defendant moved to remove the action for trial to Craven county. Pending the motion, J. Barrom Forrest died, and his wife, having qualified as executrix, was made party defendant. The order of removal was made to Pamlico county. The plaintiff alleged in its complaint that it had issued, on August 23, 1907, two policies of $1,500 and $1,000 upon the life of J. Barrom Forrest, the beneficiary named in each being Josephus Forrest, his son; that the policies were issued upon written applications; that the representations made therein as to his condition of health were false; that he had chronic bowel trouble; that the statement that he had not consulted a physician in five years was also false; that these representations were material and were relied on, and plaintiff had no information that the representations and statements were not true; that it had tendered in June or July, 1908, the premiums paid and demanded a return of the policies, which tender and demand had been refused; that defendants had tendered the second annual premiums, but plaintiff had declined to accept them. The plaintiff prayed judgment that the policies be surrendered for cancellation. The defendant denied the allegations of the false representations and statements as to the health of J. Barrom Forrest, the assured. After the death of the assured, the beneficiary, Josephus Forrest, instituted action against the plaintiff in Craven county to recover upon the policies. The Annuity Company made a motion to remove to Pamlico county, which motion was allowed, and the two actions were, by consent, consolidated and tried as one action; the Security Life & Annuity Company being plaintiff, and the Forrests being defendants. The issues submitted by the judge and the answers of the jury are as follows:

"(1) Did Barrom Forrest in his application make material representations and warranties that were untrue as alleged? Ans. No.

"(2) Did the representations as made induce the plaintiff to issue to Barrom Forrest the insurance policies referred to in the pleadings? Ans. No.

"(3) Has the defendant, Josephus Forrest, complied with the terms and conditions of the policy for $1,500, being No. 9,338? Ans. Yes.

"(4) Has the defendant, Josephus Forrest, complied with the terms and conditions of the policy for $1,000, being No. 9,339? Ans. Yes.

"(5) What amount, if any, is the defendant Josephus Forrest, entitled to recover on the policy for $1,500, being No. 9,338? Ans. $1,500, with interest from September 19, 1908.

"(6) What amount, if any, is the defendant, Josephus Forrest, entitled to recover on the policy for $1,000, being No. 9,339? Ans. $1,000, with interest from September 19, 1908."

There was judgment upon the verdict for the defendant, Josephus Forrest, and the plaintiff appealed.

Simmons, Ward & Allen and A. L. Brooks, for appellant. D. L. Ward, Stedman & Cooke, C. L. Abernethy, and H. L. Gibbs, for appellees.

MANNING, J. We have carefully examined the record and the brief and authorities cited therein by the learned counsel of the plaintiff, and we do not discover that his honor committed, in the rulings excepted to, any error which entitles the plaintiff to a new trial. As determined by the pleadings, the principal controverted fact was presented by the first issue—the truth of the representations and statements by the assured as to the condition of his health. His honor instructed the jury that, if they should find from the evidence that these representations and statements were untrue, then they would answer the first issue, "Yes"; and, if untrue, they were material, and they should answer the second issue, "Yes." Upon the condition of the health of the assured, there was much evidence offered by the plaintiff tending to support its contentions, and by the defendants in contradiction and in support of the truth of the representations in the applications for the insurance. The assured was examined three times within 30 days by Dr. Duguld, the local medical examiner of plaintiff, and certificate of the examinations for plaintiff made upon blanks furnished by it. This physician had known assured for two years, was his family physician, and lived near him. He certified that he had made careful examination and in his opinion he was a first-class risk. This statement was confirmed by the physician as a witness at the trial. The theory upon which the plaintiff developed its case at the trial was that the sons of the assured, appreciating his bad health, and that his life would not be long prolonged, obtained policies of insurance upon the life of their father for many thousand dollars, and this was done in carrying out a common plan and scheme to defraud the insurance companies, among them the plaintiff. The plaintiff, on cross-examination of a witness for defendant, one of his brothers, elicited testimony which supported this theory, by examining the witness specifically as to the several policies upon his father's life, the beneficiaries named, the companies issuing them, etc. Upon redirect examination, in rebuttal of plaintiff's theory of a common fraudulent scheme or plan to defraud the insurance companies, "by overloading (to quote the language of plaintiff's counsel) a decrepit father, sick with a fatal malady, with life insurance policies," the defendant was permitted to ask the witness if any of the insurance policies so issued under plaintiff's theory had been paid. The plaintiffs objected to this testimony, and excepted to its admission. While the theory upon which plaintiff was proceeding was of doubtful relevancy to the issue, the sole inquiry being as to the truth or falsity of the statements, and it being immaterial whether they were fraudulent or not, and while such evidence would be ordinarily incompetent as obnoxious to the maxim, "Res inter alios acta," we are not convinced that its admission, under the circumstances of this case, was erroneous; at most, if error, it was harmless error, in view of the latitude allowed plaintiff in the development of its theory. In Miller v. Miller, 89 N. C. 209, this court said: "Great latitude is sometimes allowed by the court in the trial of issues by the jury, and it must be largely left to it to see that the parties have equal latitude and advantage, as was the case here. Green. Ev. § 48; Steph. Dig. Law of Ev. 36 et seq."

Under the theory advanced by plaintiff, each policy issued during the year 1907 upon the life of the assured was a link in a chain of a fraudulent scheme, entered into by the defendant, Josephus Forrest, and his brothers. We are not convinced that it was error, of which plaintiff can justly be heard to complain, when his honor permitted the defendant to controvert this theory of the plaintiff. The record shows that subsequently during the trial the plaintiff examined other witnesses as to the several policies, and probed much into the details, showing other companies had and were contesting payment of their policies. The plaintiff excepted to certain parts of his honor's charge, and to his refusal to give certain special instructions. We have carefully examined the charge as given, and the refused instructions, and we do not think plaintiff's exceptions can be sustained. In the charge to the jury, his honor followed the decision of this court in Alexander v. Insurance Co., 150 N. C. 536, 64 S. E. 432, placing the right of the plaintiff to avoid the policies upon the ground of the falsity of the representations and statements in the applications for insurance, irrespective of any fraudulent purpose or lack of honest intent. The other exceptions are covered in large measure by the decision of this court in Perry v. Insurance Co., 150 N. C. 143, 63 S. E. 679, where it is said: "If there has been an actual delivery of the policy, nothing else appearing, the production of it at the trial presents a prima facie case for the plaintiff. Kendrick v. Insurance Co., 124 N. C. 315 [32 S. E. 723, 70 Am. St. Rep. 592]; Grier v. Insurance Co., 132 N. C. 542 [44 S. E. 28]; Rayburn v. Casualty Co., 138 N. C. 379 [50 S. E. 762, 107 Am. St. Rep. 548]; Waters v. Annuity Co., 144 N. C. 663 [57 S. E. 437, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805]." In the present case, the plaintiff alleged that it issued and delivered the policies and received the first annual premiums, and that it declined to receive the second annual premiums tendered by defendant. Some of the prayers requested by plaintiff, while not given in the very language requested, were substantially given, and, when this is done, it is not error. The plaintiff, after full investigation before action begun, selected its own grounds upon which it sought to avoid the policies issued by it, and, having so selected, without requesting an amendment of its pleadings either before or at the trial, it cannot be unjust to require it to adhere to them. In our opinion, no error was committed at the trial which entitles plaintiff to a new trial, and the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

WHITE-BLAKESLEE MFG. CO. v.
RHODES.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

REPLEVIN (§ 125*)—FAILURE OF PLAINTIFF TO PROSECUTE—JUDGMENT ON BOND.

Plaintiff in claim and delivery having failed to comply with the express provision of its bond, to appear and prosecute the action, defendant is entitled to judgment, according to the condition of the bond, for a return of the property, and, in case return cannot be had, for recovery of damages assessed by the jury. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. §§ 503, 504; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Action by the White-Blakeslee Manufacturing Company against E. J. Rhodes. From the judgment, plaintiff's surety appeals. Affirmed.

S. G. Bernard, for appellant. Frank Carter and Geo. A. Shuford for respondent.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of certain machinery described in the complaint. The plaintiff caused to be instituted proceedings in claim delivery, and gave an undertaking with the usual condition in the sum of $1,000 for the prosecution of the action by the plaintiff, in the superior court of said county, against the defendant, for wrongfully seizing and detaining the said property, and for the return of the property to the defendant or for the payment of damages for the detention and deterioration of the property, if return thereof cannot be had, in case the plaintiff should fail to prosecute the action without success. It is stated in the case that the plaintiff filed a complaint, but failed to appear and prosecute the action when the same was called for trial, and judgment of nonsuit was thereupon entered against the plaintiff after he had been called and failed to answer. The court thereupon submitted an issue to the jury as to the damages the defendant had sustained by reason of the seizure and detention of the property, and the jury assessed the damages at $500, with interest from April 5, 1905. The court further adjudged that the property seized by the sheriff and delivered to the plaintiff be returned to the defendant, and if, upon execution issued, it cannot be seized thereunder and returned as required by the order of the court, that the defendant recover of the plaintiff and its surety, the American Bonding Company, the sum of $1,000, which was the penalty of the plaintiff's bond, to be discharged upon the payment of the sum of $500 with interest thereon; that being the amount of damages assessed by the jury. The court further ordered execution to issue for the enforcement of its judgment. The American Bonding Company alone appealed from the judgment of the court. A motion was made in this court to dismiss the appeal, as the bonding company was not a party to the suit and, under the facts and circumstances as they appear in the record, had no right to appeal from the judgment of the court. No question was raised as to the costs which were adjudged to be paid by the plaintiff and its surety.

The case of Manix v. Howard, 82 N. C. 125, settles the question presented in the case against the contention of the appellant, and it is only necessary for us to refer to what is therein said by Justice Dillard for the court, which is as follows: "It is settled that, whenever a party is deprived of the possession of property by the process of the law in proceedings adjudged void, an order for restitution will be made as a part of the judgment. Perry v. Tupper, 70 N. C. 538; Dulin v. Howard, 66 N. C. 433. Upon the same reason, if a plaintiff, in the action of claim and delivery, in which action both parties are actors, procured property to be taken out of the hands of the defendant and put into his possession, and then dismiss his action, it ought to be a part of the judgment to put the parties in statu quo. Such a course of proceeding seems to be necessary; otherwise the plaintiff, under color of legal process, will perpetrate a fraud on the law and be allowed to keep property, the title to which was prima facie in the defendant, from whom it was taken at the beginning of the suit. In all cases where issue is joined on pleadings filed, the defendant on the trial may have a verdict on the right, and fixing the value; or, if plaintiff neglect or refuse to come to trial of the issue joined, the defendant may have judgment as of nonsuit for the property, with an assessment of value on a writ of inquiry, followed by a judgment in either case in the alternative; that is to say, for the property, if to be had, and, if not, then for the value. And it is equally necessary in all cases, whether issue be joined or not, in prevention of fraud, to provide, on plaintiff's motion to dismiss or discontinue, for a like judgment in the alternative."

The case of Phipps v. Wilson, 125 N. C. 106, 34 S. E. 227, upon which the appellant relied in this court, presented a very different state of facts from those we find in the record now before us. In that case, the court rendered judgment upon a counterclaim pleaded by the defendant, without any inquiry into the lawfulness of the seizure by the plaintiff of the defendant's property. The pleadings or proceedings in that case, as will appear by reference thereto, presented this issue, and the court decided that it should have been determined in favor of the defendant before he was entitled to a judgment upon his counterclaim. That is not our case, for here the plaintiff has failed to comply with the express condition of its bond, and failed to appear and prosecute its action as it was required to do. The defendant did not ask for any judgment on the counterclaim he had pleaded in the case, but merely for judgment according to the condition of the plaintiff's bond; that is, for a return of the property unlawfully seized by the plaintiff, and, in case such return could not be had under the process of the court, then the recovery of the damages assessed by the jury.

In any view of the case, there was no error in the judgment of the court below, even if the bonding company had the right to appeal therefrom.

No error.

GARRISON v. VERMONT MILLS.

Appeal of CONE EXPORT & COMMISSION CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. FACTORS (§ 47*)—LIEN.

A factor has no lien upon the goods of the principal unless he holds possession of the goods, and hence a factor acquired no lien on the product of a mill under a contract whereby the factor was to have exclusive sale of its products at a stipulated commission and was to advance 75 per cent. of the net cash value of the goods on hand stored in mill and under which the factor advanced money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Factors, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

2. FACTORS (§ 47*)—LIEN.

The act of the mills company in marking the goods and invoicing them to the factor gave it no lien, since an invoice does not transfer the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Factors, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

3. FACTORS (§ 47*)—DEED—"TAKING POSSESSION."

The act of the factor's agent, who visited the mill with the mill president and superintendent and took an inventory of all the cloth on the looms and in the basement and warehouse and stated that he took possession of it as the property of the factor and appointed the superintendent as its agent to take charge of the cloth, where the president did not give his consent to the taking of the cloth, which remained in its former position, and the superintendent had no authority to transfer possession thereof to a stranger, did not amount to a "taking possession" of the cloth by the factor so as to give it a lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Factors, Cent. Dig. § 67; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Gaston County; Webb, Judge.

Action by D. A. Garrison against the Vermont Mills, in which the Cone Export & Commission Company intervened. From the judgment, intervener appeals. Affirmed.

King & Kimball and J. H. Pon, for appellant. Burwell & Cansler and O. F. Mason, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On January 25, 1907, L. L. Jenkins, the appellee, was appointed receiver of the Vermont Mills in Gaston county and took possession of all its property and effects. Among the effects so taken possession of by the receiver were a number of bales of cloth. Some of these bales were in the warehouse of the company and some in the basement. The appellant, the Cone Export & Commission Company, on February 26, 1907, having made claim to said bales of cloth, entered into an agreement with the receiver by which said bales were sold and the proceeds were to be held to abide the decision of the court whether they should be paid to the receiver for distribution according to law among the creditors of said company or should be paid over to the appellant.

The facts found by the referee, and approved by the court, are: That on March 15, 1906, the Vermont Mills made a contract with the Cone Export & Commission Company, whereby the latter was to have exclusive sale of the products of the mill, at a stipulated commission, and would advance 75 per cent. of the net cash value of the goods on hand stored in mill. That the goods thus advanced upon were to be billed to the Cone Company and stored in a separate warehouse and insured by the mill for the benefit of the claimant. The claimant agreed to guarantee the payment of the amount for which the goods were sold by it. The mills reserved the right to sell at its own store and to fill any contracts then in force. On January 15, 1907, one Vaught, agent of the claimant, visited the mills in the company of its president and the superintendent (Coble), and took an inventory of all the cloth on the looms and also that in the basement and in the warehouse, and thereupon stated that he took possession of all the cloth as the property of the said Cone Export & Commission Company, and appointed said Coble as its agent of the claimant to take charge of all the cloth. At that time, the Vermont Mills were indebted to the Cone Export & Commission Company in an amount in excess of the value of said cloth, and was also largely indebted to other creditors and insolvent. The judge finds as a fact that the said president of the Vermont Mills did not give his consent to the taking of the goods by Vaught, though he was present. The cloth remained in its then position till the receiver took charge on January 26th, as above stated.

The claim of the appellant, the Cone Export & Commission Company, is that, by virtue of its contract and the action of the said Vaught on January 15th, it is entitled to the proceeds of the sale of these goods.

The Cone Export & Commission Company acquired no lien by virtue of its contract of March 15, 1906, for that was purely an executory contract that goods should be shipped to said company for sale on commission. It acquired none by virtue of its advances, for there was no lien given or recorded. Nor did the fact that the Vermont Mills had marked the goods and invoiced them to the appellant have that effect, for an invoice does not transfer the title. Dows v. Bank, 91 U. S. 630, 23 L. Ed. 214; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 328, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093; 23 Cyc. 351.

A factor has no lien upon the goods of the principal unless he holds possession of the goods. "Possession, actual or constructive, is an essential element in the factor's lien." 19 Cyc. 160, and numerous cases there cited. The appellant's claim depends, therefore, upon whether the action of Vaught on January 15, 1907, amounted to a taking possession of said goods. We do not think that it can be so held. He appeared on the premises of the debtor, took an inventory of the cloth, whether in the looms or baled up and lying in the basement and in the warehouse. Possession was not surrendered by the company, nor by any one authorized to act for it. The court finds that the president of the company, who was present, did not assent to Vaught taking possession. He did not obtain possession with the consent of the company nor without it, for he had no process of any court. He contented himself with directing the superintendent to take possession of the goods and hold them as agent of the Cone Company. There was no physical change in the status of the goods. The superintendent had no authority to transfer the possession of the goods which he held as a servant for the company to a stranger. The president so testifies without contradiction, and we know it to be so as a matter of law. The superintendent is not an officer of the company, but merely an employé. The servant could not assent to transfer the goods he held for the master to another. Vaught thereafter exercised no dominion over the goods nor took any actual possession. They remained just as they lay, none the worse and none the better for the declaration of Vaught, and, unmoved by anything he said or did, they remained untouched until the receiver, by the authority of the court, took possession of them as the property of the company, which had not till then voluntarily or by order of any court lost possession of them.

When the receiver took possession of them, he did not take them from Vaught, but as the property of the company and lying in its mill. There being no lien upon them, the judge properly held that the claimant had no priority over the proceeds in the distribution of the proceeds by the receiver.

Affirmed.

MAINNING, J. (dissenting). I regret at all times not to be in agreement with the majority of this court, in cases submitted for our decision; but I am constrained to dissent from the conclusion reached in the disposition of this appeal. In section 155, vol. 1, Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, the learned author says: "It is well established that where a court takes possession of the property of a party, and appoints a receiver to administer the trust for the benefit of all interested parties, the court receives such property impressed with all existing rights and equities, and the relative rank of claims and standing of liens remains unaffected by the receivership. Every legal and equitable lien upon the property is preserved with the power of enforcing it. The receivership does not destroy any liens that may have been acquired before the appointment." Applying this principle, stated with such admirable clearness, I think the contract between the Vermont Mills and the Cone Export & Commission Company created in the latter, upon making the advances to the former, as stipulated in paragraph 5, a right in equity against the mills, which was completed by the delivery of the baled goods, the subject of this action. It is admitted that the mills suspended manufacturing before the acts were done which, in my opinion, constituted a delivery to the commission company, under the contract and before the appointment of the receiver. During this period, advances to an amount more than double the value of the particular goods having been made theretofore, an agent of the commission company visited the Vermont Mills, and in the presence of its president, of the man who was by him thought to be its secretary and had been up to three days prior thereto, and of its superintendent, made invoices of the bales of manufactured goods, by numbers and marks which he had placed thereon for the commission company, and in the presence of the president, the plaintiff, Garrison, and of Durham, the supposed secretary, and without objection or protest from either, requested Coble, the superintendent, to take charge of them as agent of the commission company, and he assented to do so. There was no removal of the goods, nor, in view of the above, do we think removal necessary to complete delivery. The mills were shut down and suspended. They did not again resume manufacturing, and there was no commingling of these goods with others. There was no word of objection or protest by the officers of the mills to what was said and done. It is true there was no positive assent. The officers saw; they heard; they were witnesses; but they stood mute.

It is admitted in the opinion of the court that the equitable lien of the commission company would have been complete by delivery, and this principle is well established. So the decisive question is: Did the acts narrated constitute a delivery? I cannot think that a change of physical location, in view of the actual occurrences, was required to complete the equitable lien of the commission company. It was acting strictly within its rights under the contract; the taking possession of the goods was not tortious, but under and by virtue of its contract; and the delivery by the mills was in accordance with its obligation under the contract. If a corporation makes a valid agreement to sell a horse for $150, and the other party subsequently pays the price to the treasurer of the corporation, I cannot think the law requires a meeting of its board of directors to authorize the delivery of the horse, or that the taking possession of the horse by the purchaser in the presence of the president and without objection an unlawful or tortious act. Nor can I see that it is material that the absolute title does not pass by the delivery, but that the delivery is for the purpose of sale and an application of the proceeds to the payment of advances made on them. My conclusion is supported by the following cases and authorities: Kollock v. Jackson, 5 Ga. 153; Campbell v. Penn, 7 La. Ann. 371; Hamilton v. Campbell, 9 La. Ann. 531; Jackson v. Rutherford, 73 Ala. 155; Hauselt v. Harrison, 105 U. S. 401, 26 L. Ed. 1075; Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. Ed. 740; Yeatman v. Savings Institution, 95 U. S. 764, 24 L. Ed. 589; Walker v. Brown, 165 U. S. 654, 17 Sup. Ct. 453, 41 L. Ed. 865. In this last case, the court quotes with approval section 1235, 3 Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, where this doctrine is stated: "The doctrine may be stated in its most general form that every express executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property, real or personal, or fund, therein described or identified, a security for a debt or other obligation, or whereby the party promises to convey or assign or transfer the property as security, creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated, which is enforceable against the property in the hands, not only of the original contractor, but of his heirs, administrators, executors, voluntary assignees and purchasers or incumbrancers with notice. * * * The ultimate grounds and motives of this doctrine are explained in the preceding section, but the doctrine itself is clearly an application of the maxim, 'Equity regards as done that which ought to be done.' I do not think that the principle settled in Brem v. Lockhart, 93 N. C. 191, and the numerous decisions of the court since approving it, is contravened, for the reason that the court, in the present case, through its officer, is administering the assets of the defendant corporation "in trust for the benefit of all its creditors, impressed with the existing rights and equities and the relative rank of claims and standing of liens remains unaffected." Nor is the doctrine declared in Duke v. Markham, 105 N. C. 131, 10 S. E. 1017, 18 Am. St. Rep. 889, and since then repeatedly approved, contravened; that doctrine being that the power given by a corporation to execute a mortgage on, or make other conveyance of, corporate property, can only be given at a corporate meeting duly held.

In this present case, it is not questioned that the contract between the Vermont Mills and the commission company received proper corporate authorization. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the commission company was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the manufactured goods, upon the facts found, and that his honor should have so adjudged.

HOKE, J., concurs in the dissenting opinion.

SMITH v. TOWN OF HENDERSONVILLE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 288*)—CONSTRUCTION OF SIDEWALKS—STREETS.

Under Hendersonville Town Charter, §§ 5, 6, 9 (Priv. Laws 1901, c. 97), authorizing the grading of streets, providing that the lot owners may be required to pave the sidewalks under specified circumstances, and authorizing the submission to the voters of the question of paving the streets, the board of commissioners of the town may, on the voters at an election, ordered on a petition praying for a general scheme of street and sidewalk improvement, voting for the issuance of bonds for such purposes, use the proceeds for the grading of sidewalks and of streets, as distinguished from sidewalks, and for the payment of compensation to engineers employed to establish the grades of streets and sidewalks, as well as to pay for the paving of sidewalks.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 288.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 321*)—IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS—JUDICIAL CONTROL.

The matter of grading streets rests exclusively in the discretion of the governing authorities of the city, and their decision will not be controlled by the courts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Hendersor County; Council, Judge.

Controversy without action by Walker A. Smith against the Town of Hendersonville. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This was a controversy without action heard by Council, J., on April 27, 1910, at the superior court of Henderson county. The agreed facts are thus stated:

(1) That the General Assembly of North Carolina, session of 1901, passed an act (see chapter 97 of the Private Laws of 1901) entitled "An act to amend the charter of the town of Hendersonville," which act forms a part of the charter of the town of Hendersonville, reference to which is hereby made. That sections 5, 6, and 9 of said act form a general scheme for the paving of the streets and sidewalks of the said town.

(2) That on or about the 1st day of September, 1900, the people of the said town decided to lay cement sidewalks, under and by virtue of the said charter, and, through their commissioners, duly elected and qualified, they called an election to vote upon the question of the issuance of bonds for the said purpose, which call for election is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A," and prayed to be taken as a part of this petition. That the election was carried, and $20,000 worth of the said bonds were duly issued and sold, and the money therefrom has been placed in the treasury of said town. A copy of the said bonds is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit B," and prayed to be taken as a part of this petition.

(3) That after the sale of the said bonds and the receipt of the said money, the commissioners of the town of Hendersonville passed an order as to how said moneys should be spent in said work, and how said work should be prosecuted, which order of the board is hereto annexed and marked "Exhibit C," and prayed to be taken as a part of this petition.

(4) That the commissioners of the town of Hendersonville, as outlined in their said order, have proceeded to hire engineers to lay out and establish the grades on said streets and sidewalks, and have employed a contractor to grade the same and lay said cement sidewalks. That, acting under the orders of the said board and their employment by the said board, the said engineers and contractor are now at work on what is known as Academy street in said town. That the town of Hendersonville is a mountain town, having many hills inside of said town, and in many places great excavations are called for by the engineers' survey, with fills on either side, which excavations and fills will cost much money to complete.

(5) That the said board of commissioners propose to pay: (1) The grading of the sidewalks out of said funds; (2) the grading of the streets, as distinguished from the sidewalks, out of said funds derived from said bond sale; (3) to pay the said engineers out of the funds derived from said bond sale for the establishment of the grades of the sidewalks; (4) to pay the said engineers out of the funds derived from said bond sale for the establishment of the grades of said streets as distinguished from said sidewalks.

(6) That a great controversy has arisen in the said town, among the lawyers and citizens, as to whether, under the said charter and call for election, etc., the commissioners have the power to do such grading, employ such engineers, to pay for the grading of the sidewalks and streets, and said engineers, as aforesaid, out of the money derived from the said bond sale.

(7) That the plaintiff, Walker A. Smith, who is a resident and taxpayer of the town of Hendersonville, contends that, under the plain terms of the charter, the call for said election, and the plain letter of the law, the said commissioners have no power: (1) To pay for the grading of the sidewalks out of said money; (2) to pay for the grading of the streets between the sidewalks out of said money; (3) to pay the engineers out of said money to establish the grade of said sidewalks; (4) to pay the engineers out of said money to establish the grade of the streets, as distinguished from the sidewalks—all of which aforesaid things the town claims it can lawfully do. And he further contends that under the plain letter and meaning of the law, as set forth in said charter and statutes amendatory thereof, and the said call of election, the money derived from the sale of these bonds can only be spent for actual cement and the work of laying it down.

Upon the above facts agreed, his honor rendered the following judgment: "This case coming on to be heard before his honor, W. B. Council, Judge, at chambers, and being heard, by consent, the court is of the opinion, and so adjudges: First. That the board of commissioners of the town of Hendersonville had and now have a legal right to pay for grading the streets (as distinguished from sidewalks) in the town of Hendersonville, from the funds now in hand derived from the sale of $20,000 bonds issued January 1, 1910, in accordance with and by authority of an election held in said town the 28th day of September, A. D. 1908. Second. That the board of commissioners of said town had and now have a legal right to pay for grading the sidewalks in said town from said fund. Third. That the board of commissioners of said town had and now have a legal right to employ and pay competent engineers to ascertain the proper grades of said streets in said town. Fourth. That the board of commissioners of said town had and now have a legal right to employ and pay competent engineers to ascertain the proper grades of said streets in said town. Fifth. That the plaintiff pay the costs of this action, to be taxed by the clerk." From which judgment plaintiff appealed to this court.

Charles F. Toms, for appellant. Michael Schenck, for appellee.

MANNING, J. In Commissioners v. Webb, 148 N. C. 120, 61 S. E. 670, a case involving the interpretation of the same sections of the charter of the town of Hendersonville as the present case (chapter 97, Priv. Laws 1901), this court said: "The term 'streets' may, and frequently does, include both sidewalks and driveways, and, while there are many decisions which, under certain facts and conditions, distinguish and separate the two, we are clearly of opinion that in an undertaking of this magnitude, involving an expenditure of $18,000 in paving sidewalks, both the purpose of the law and its correct interpretation require that the term 'streets' in this connection should include sidewalks, bringing the proposition within the provisions of section 9 of the charter, requiring that a vote of the people should be taken." In Hester v. Traction Co., 138 N. C. 288, 50 S. E. 711, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, it is said: "The rights, powers, and liability of the municipality extend equally to the sidewalk as to the roadway, for both are parts of the street. Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392 [19 S. E. 767, 24 L. R. A. 671]; 2 Smith, Mun. Corp. § 1304; Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 20." The petition upon which the election was ordered, the bonds sold, and the proceeds received for expenditure, particularly desired the board of commissioners of Hendersonville "to adopt a general scheme of street and sidewalk improvement for the town." In adopting such a general scheme in limine, it is assuredly the part of a wise administration to engage the services of a competent, experienced, and skillful engineer. It would be unwise and unsightly to have the sidewalks graded to an established grade and then paved with cement, and to leave the driveways or roadways of the streets in their natural condition and with their natural configuration undisturbed. It is left to the sound judgment and discretion of the board of commissioners, aided by the advice of a competent engineer, to determine how much grading any particular street shall receive, and how much its natural configuration shall be varied. It has been repeatedly held by this court, as well as other courts, that such matters are legislative and rest exclusively in the discretion of the governing authorities of the municipalities, and its decisions cannot be interfered with, or controlled by, the courts. Meares v. Wilmington.

§1 N. C. 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412, and the numerous cases cited in Annotated Edition. Under sections 5, 6, and 9 of the town charter, it was permissible to adopt a general scheme of improvements of its streets and sidewalks, as requested in the petition, and approved at the election by the voters of the town, and proceed to carry it out.

We therefore discover no error in the judgment appealed from, and it is affirmed.

UNDERWOOD v. TOWN OF ASHEBORO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 867*)—INDEBTEDNESS—ISSUANCE OF BOND—"NECESSARY EXPENSE."

The protection of a town from fire and disease by providing water and sewerage is a "necessary expense," within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 7, and Revisal 1905, § 2974, providing that no municipal corporation shall contract any debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit, nor shall any tax be levied or collected by any officers of the same except for the necessary expenses thereof, unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein, and, therefore, a vote of the people is not required to render bonds issued to provide waterworks and a sewerage system valid, in the absence of statutory restrictions enacted under Const. art. 8, § 4, making it the duty of the Legislature to restrict the power of cities to tax, borrow money, contract debts, or loan their credit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1841; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4715, 4716.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 864*)—LIMITATION ON POWER TO CONTRACT INDEBTEDNESS.

Revisal 1905, § 2977, making it unlawful for any city to contract a debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit for the support or maintenance of internal improvements or for any special purpose whatsoever to an extent exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent. of the assessed valuation of the real and personal property in the city, does not apply to an indebtedness for necessary expenses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1828-1835; Dec. Dig. § 864.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1000*)—RESTRAINING ISSUANCE OF BONDS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In proceedings to enjoin the issuing of bonds by a town board of commissioners for waterworks and a sewerage system on the ground that the interest on them could not be paid without exceeding the statutory limitations on the town as to the levy of taxes, the burden is on plaintiff to show that, after deducting rentals and profits of the water system, the levy necessary to pay the balance would be in excess of the town's authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 1000.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Randolph County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by W. A. Underwood against the Town of Asheboro. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

On February 10, 1910, the board of commissioners of the town of Asheboro passed a resolution, without submitting the same to a vote of the people, to issue $50,000 in bonds of the town, due 30 years after date and bearing 5 per cent. interest, for the purpose of providing a system of waterworks and sewerage for said town. The plaintiff, a taxpayer of said town, brought this action to restrain the issuing of said bonds. The court decided that the purpose contemplated by the resolution was a necessary expense, and there being no limitation in the charter or by any statute, general or special, upon the power of the town to contract for necessary expenses, adjudged that the town commissioners had authority to incur said indebtedness and issue bonds therefor and denied the injunction. Plaintiff appealed.

R. C. Kelly and H. M. Robins, for appellant. J. A. Spence, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. Upon the facts agreed, which the judge found to be true, it appears that the population of the town of Asheboro is about 2,000; that the assessed value of the real and personal property in the town is $752,767, and there are 312 taxable polls; that the bonded indebtedness already existing is $15,000; that by virtue of special elections authorized by the General Assembly the town levies 50 cents on the $100 of property and $1.50 on the poll for graded school purposes and 25 cents on the $100 and 75 cents on the poll for general, street, and other purposes. It is further agreed and found as facts by the judge that the present source of water supply for the inhabitants of the town is surface wells, and water from four of these have been analyzed, and all four were found to be infected with typhoid germs; that the town has no provision for protection from fire; that the town is lighted by electric lights, but it has only about 100 yards of paved streets; that the cost of putting in the proposed water and sewerage system will be between $40,000 and $60,000.

The protection of the town from fire and disease is of the first importance, and his honor properly adjudged that this provision for water and sewerage was a necessary expense. By the terms of Const. art. 7, § 7, and Revisal 1905, § 2974, a vote of the people is not required before incurring an indebtedness and issuing bonds for "necessary expenses," in the absence of statutory restriction. Const. art. 8, § 4.

The existing indebtedness is $15,000, and the assessed valuation of property, real and personal, in the town is $752,767. The proposed issue of $50,000 bonds would therefore not violate the 10 per cent. restriction in Revisal 1905, § 2977, if it applied to indebtedness for necessary expenses, which it does not. Wharton v. Greensboro, 146 N. C. 356, 59 S. E. 1043.

The limitation in Revisal 1905, § 2924, of a levy of more than 50 cents on the $100 and $1.50 on the poll applies to "municipal purposes," i. e., for ordinary purposes of city or town government. The limitation in Revisal 1905, § 5110, that the town shall not levy to exceed $1 on the $100, has this proviso, "except by special authority from the General Assembly." Though the town already levies 75 cents on the $100, so much thereof (50 cents) as is levied for special purposes (school, etc.) under elections authorized by special statutes, is to be deducted from the 75 cents, which leaves ample margin between the 25 cents now levied for general purposes and the $1 limitation in Revisal 1905, § 5110, for a levy to pay the interest on these bonds, though that would not be necessary to the validity of the bonds. Commissioners v. McDonald, 148 N. C. 125, 61 S. E. 643. Besides, it does not appear that, after deducting rentals and profits of the water system, the levy to pay interest on these bonds would probably swell the total levy, for other than special purposes (which are authorized by special statute) beyond the limitation in either Revisal 1905, § 2924, or section 5110. The burden to show this was on the plaintiff asking an injunction.

Towns in Randolph county are exempted from the very commendable provision in Laws 1907, c. 935, and Pell's Revisal 1908, § 2924, which restricts the total municipal poll tax in all cases to $2. The excessive poll tax levied in many towns, before the passage of this act, was a great hardship on the poorer classes.

The judgment refusing the injunction is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Watauga County; Council, Judge.

William Baldwin was convicted of murder, and appeals. New trial.

There was evidence on the part of the state, tending to show that on July 6, 1909, the prisoner shot and killed J. W. Miller, deceased, who was at the time the town marshal of Blowing Rock, N. C.; that prisoner was going out of town towards Linville, when the deceased, who was 50 steps behind, called to prisoner, overtook him, and, claiming to have a warrant for prisoner, arrested him and started him back towards town; that he shoved the prisoner twice to hurry him along, and the second time the prisoner pulled loose, and, turning, shot and killed deceased; that deceased had no valid warrant at the time, and was armed with a billy and pistol, and himself fired once, and one or two of the cartridges in his pistol showed that they had been snapped on.

Henry Coffey, an eyewitness, testified for the state, in part, as follows: "Live at Blowing Rock. I was present at the time the prisoner shot and killed Miller, the deceased. The shooting occurred near shop in Blowing Rock. I walked with the deceased to shop just before the shooting. The place where the shooting occurred is beyond the shop a little. When Miller and I were going towards the shop we saw the prisoner come out of the shop and walk off; went in road toward Linville. At this time Baldwin was about 50 yards from Miller and I. Miller then hollowed, and said 'Hold, Mr. Baldwin, I have got a warrant for you.' Mr. Baldwin continued to walk on; did not look back; Miller walked on after him and overtook him in a few steps. When Miller overtook Baldwin he pulled out a paper. (Here defendant excepts.) Mr. Baldwin then said: 'Go off and let me alone; I have started to leave here.' Then Mr. Miller pulled out his 'billy' like he would use it if Baldwin resisted; then Mr. Miller put his hand on Baldwin or give him a little shove and started toward Blowing Rock. While they were walking along Baldwin reached his hand to his left bosom, and then seemed to drop it to his side. Mr. Miller about this time kinder give him a little shove, and told Baldwin to walk along a little faster. About this time Baldwin got away from Miller some five or six feet and made a little circle, moving to the front of Miller, then presented a pistol on Miller and snapped it at him. At the time Baldwin drew his pistol and snapped it, Miller seemed to be trying to put his paper away and drew his pistol. Mr. Baldwin drew his pistol first; Miller drew his a second after well as I could tell. When Baldwin snapped his pistol at Miller, Miller was then drawing his pistol. Immediately after the pistol snapped Baldwin then shot. (Indicates time by slapping hands.) After first shot Baldwin continued in rapid succession to shoot until he fired four shots. After the four shots by Baldwin I then heard the report of another pistol; it sounded louder, and was a few seconds after the four shots I first heard that Baldwin fired. Miller fired the last shot; had pistol in his right hand, but put up his left hand to his right and shot. He only shot once; did not hit Baldwin. When Miller fired at Baldwin, then Baldwin caught Miller by the coat sleeve and began to beat Miller over the head with the pistol. (Pistol is shown witness, and he says it looks like the Baldwin pistol—it is the same pistol.) Baldwin struck Miller some four to five licks over the head. The guard on the pistol is bent. The Baldwin pistol is a S. & W. double action, rapid fire, caliber 32. When Baldwin was beating Miller over the head with the pistol, Miller hollowed, 'Help me boys,' and I said, 'Come on, boys, and let's stop this.' Mr. Robbins then came out in the yard, then turned and went back. I went on and took hold of Baldwin's pistol and took it from him and put it in my pocket. I took hold of Baldwin's arm, and then Mr. Johnson took hold of Miller and led him off. Baldwin was taken in charge by the officers. I went to Miller and helped to carry him home. Saw Dr. Parleir with Miller. This shooting occurred at Blowing Rock, N. C., the 6th July, and some time after 4 p. m., in daylight. The pistol Baldwin used, a six-shooter, and five shells shot out and one snapped on. When Miller first got up to Baldwin he just kinder put up his hand and touched Baldwin and said, 'I have a warrant for you,' and took out a paper. Miller never struck Baldwin before Baldwin began firing." Cross-examined: "I had seer Baldwin that day at Blowing Rock prior to the shooting. Next saw Baldwin when he came out of the shop. I just struck up with Miller as he was going out toward the shop. Miller asked me to walk with him. Miller overtook Baldwin in 20 yards from shop. Miller said Baldwin had gone out about the shop or Ed Robbins; and was going to hang out there that night, and that he was going to arrest him and take him to jail; described billy that Miller carried. Miller's pistol had one chamber shot and three cartridges snapped on. Miller was fighting all he could. When I took hold of Baldwin and took pistol from him, I stood where I could see it all. Never knew anything against the deceased as to truth." Redirect: "No injury on Baldwin—a little smut on his cheek."

With a view of showing malice, and with a view of showing that the killing was premeditated and deliberate, D. S. Lee was examined by the state, and testified: "I know prisoner when I see him. I know the deceased man, Miller. I heard a conversation between the deceased and prisoner on Friday evening before this killing on Tuesday, the 6th of July last. Mr. Miller and I met in front of Mr. Holsouser's store, and were talking, and Baldwin came up. When Mr. Baldwin came up Mr. Miller said, 'All I need to arrest a man with is the billy I have in my hand.' Mr. Baldwin then said, 'If you ever attempt to arrest or hit me with that billy I will kill you.' Mr. Miller said, 'I hope I will never have any cause to arrest you, but if I do you or any other man, this is all I need to arrest you.' Baldwin then said, 'By God, if you ever attempt to arrest me with it, you or I will one die.' I think this is the expression. By this time both Miller and Baldwin seemed to be a little mad, and Baldwin walked off, and Miller continued to talk to me. When Baldwin came up to where Miller and I were talking he was very abrupt."

For like purpose M. T. Shoemaker was introduced, and testified: "I saw the prisoner in about five minutes after the shooting occurred. I went up to where the shooting occurred. When I got there Henry Coffey said, 'Mr. Baldwin had shot Mr. Miller and killed him,' and I said to Mr. Baldwin, 'You have about fixed yourself to be hung, have not you?' and Baldwin replied and said, 'I have done just what I intended to do, and I don't care what in the hell they do with me.'"

Wm. Edmisten testified: "I accompanied defendant to jail from Blowing Rock. I asked him who shot first. He said, 'I did.' I said, 'You got yourself in trouble.' He said: 'I do not care; there would not have been anything of it if Miller had not followed him' (me)"—Baldwin. Cross-examined: "Miller said he shot once; showed me how he shot; could not shoot any more on account of being wounded. I heard Miller tell Baldwin to leave town. He said Baldwin concealed whiskey, and if he did not, he would get warrant and arrest him. This evening of the shooting Baldwin told Miller he would be damned if he would go."

For the defendant, it appeared that the warrant under which deceased professed to act was void, and the court so held.

Defendant, a witness in his own behalf, testified to the occurrence as follows: "I am defendant. Live at Blowing Rock. Am 57 years old. Lived at Blowing Rock since 1865. Have been working for Ritter Lumber Company for last two years. Only returned to Blowing Rock three or four days before the trouble with Miller. I returned home because my wife was sick. I went to Blowing Rock on Tuesday; had been to Boone and was returning home. I got to Blowing Rock about 12 o'clock. I rested, and was looking for a man to go on a Mr. Greene's bond. I was on the porch of the drug store at Blowing Rock, and Mr. Miller came up and ordered me off. When he did this he talked ill to me. After he ordered me off I sat there about five minutes. Frank Robbins, Dr. Rabey, and others present. I walked away and left Miller standing there. After I left I went home and laid down on the bed; was sick. Wm. Edmisten came to my house while I was on the bed and told me I had better leave; that they were about to issue a warrant for me. I told him I was not able to leave—my wife was sick at the time. I had no one to leave with her. After Edmisten left I got up and left. Told the old woman I guess I had better go. I started to my work at Ritter Company's. I got as far as Robbins' shop, and there came up a shower of rain, and I went in to keep from getting wet. Stayed there a while, 15 or 20 minutes. I then started off. I then heard some one hollowing behind. I just kept walking on. First thing I knew a man took me by the coat collar and I looked around and saw it was Miller. I then turned around and said: 'I am going to my work. Let me go; I have started as you told me to do.' Miller then pulled his billy out of his pocket; and, when he did so, I jerked loose from him, and he then drew his pistol out of his pocket. I then jerked mine out and told him to stop. He then threw his pistol in my face, and I threw mine in his face, and Miller's pistol snapped, and I then began shooting and fired about four shots in rapid succession (identified pistol as his). During the time I was firing, the deceased was trying to shoot me. I never heard Miller shoot but once; that was last shot. I heard Miller snap once; this before fired. Held pistol on me all time I was shooting, trying to shoot me. He held pistol in one hand. After last shot he grabbed me. We faced each other until Miller grabbed me. I did not know I had hit him until the firing was all over. We—right up to each other when Miller shot. Powder burned me in face. Henry Coffey took my pistol from me right after shooting. After shooting was over took me to Mr. Holsouser's store. Mr. Lentz and Robbins in shop while shooting was going on. I did not know who called me, and I walked on. I never had had any trouble with Miller. I shot Miller because he threw his pistol in my face and would not stop when I told him, and I thought he was going to kill me. We—right up together when pistols were drawn and shooting occurred. After the shooting Miller caught hold of me and I tapped him a few times over the head. He during this time trying to shoot me or trying to hit me with it. Miller and I were perfectly friendly—no trouble between us. Denies the conversation that Lee testified to about billy, also threats made about Miller. I do not use liquor—have not touched it in 13 or 14 years." Defendant admitted having been sentenced to the penitentiary many years ago for stealing money, and testified that he was not guilty and had been pardoned, and, further, that deceased had the reputation of being a dangerous, violent man, of using weapons on people when in difficulties with them.

Frank Robbins, for defendant, testified: "Was not present at shooting. Present at drug store time of conversation between Miller and Baldwin. I heard Miller tell Baldwin he must leave town. Baldwin said he was sick, and his wife was sick, and he had not done anything to leave for, and he would not be run off from home; that he had not done anything to leave, and he was not going to do so. Baldwin then walked off, and Miller asked the mayor, Mr. Sudderth, for a warrant, or demanded one. Said if he could not get a warrant there he would go where he could get one. Miller seemed a little wrought up or little mad when he was talking and when he called for the warrant."

C. A. L. Holsouser, for defendant, testified: "Some four or five days before killing I heard a conversation between Miller and Baldwin. Baldwin said 'If you ever hit me with that billy I will kill you.' Miller said: 'If I can't arrest you with that, I got something in my pocket that I can arrest you with, and if it will not do, I have a Winchester rifle I can get you with.'"

There was other evidence that the deceased was a resolute and determined man and officer, high-tempered and dangerous when aroused, and when he had animosity towards one. George Sudderth, the mayor of the town, testified, among other things: "That Henry Coffey told me he saw only a part of the difficulty; that he went into the shop and peeped out," etc.; that he knew Will Baldwin; that he had the reputation of being a good kind of man, and attended to his business; that Miller was a man of high temper, so said; he had the reputation of being a man who would use a weapon in a difficulty.

Moses Johnson, for defendant, testified: "Tells about the difficulty between Baldwin and Miller. Saw Baldwin with pistol; then shooting followed. After shooting over I went up. Miller had pistol presented on Baldwin when I got there. Saw bullet hole in shop. I think I got to parties first after shooting. Could kill man with billy—weigh about a pound."

J. B. Clarke, testified: "Know defendant. Except charge against Baldwin going to pen, he is man of very good character, a harmless fellow, good worker."

J. W. Farthing, testified: "Knew deceased. Character of Miller was: He was a hasty man; liked to exhibit his firearms; would make motion like drawing weapon when things did not suit him; he was hasty; drank while he was in Boone."

Geo. W. Robbins, testified: "Reputation of Miller was that he was a man who would carry out his purposes regardless of consequences. Would arrest a man regardless of danger." Cross-examined: "Was a brave officer. Would go when called to do so. Never considered the danger."

The prisoner was convicted of murder in the first degree. Motion for new trial by prisoner on the ground that the court should have held that upon the entire testimony the prisoner could not be convicted of murder in the first degree. Overruled, and exception. There was judgment on the verdict, and prisoner excepted and appealed.

L. D. Lowe, M. N. Harshaw, and T. A. Love, for appellant. The Attorney General and G. L. Jones, for the State.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). We have given the appeal the extended and careful consideration that a case of this character should always receive, and are of opinion that, on the facts as they now appear, the element of malice, required by the law as a constituent feature of the crime of murder, has been negatived, and that if on another trial the facts should be substantially the same, the prisoner is entitled to have his cause submitted and determined on the question of his guilt or innocence of the crime of manslaughter. In State v. Banks, 143 N. C. 652-656, 57 S. E. 174, 176, speaking of malice as an element of the crime of murder, and of the suggested effect upon it of our statute dividing the crime of murder into two degrees, the court said: "There has been no change wrought in this respect by the statute dividing the crime of murder into two degrees (Revisal 1905, § 3631), as to the element of malice which must exist to make out the crime. Both before and since the statute, murder is the unlawful killing of another with malice aforethought. See Clark's Crim. Law, p. 187. This malice may arise from personal ill will or grudge, but it may also be said to exist whenever there has been a wrongful and intentional killing of another without lawful excuse or mitigating circumstance. The statute does not undertake to give any new definition of murder, but classifies the different kinds of murder as they existed at common law, and which were, before the statute, all included in one and the same degree. Thus, all murder done by means of poison, lying in wait, etc., or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, or premeditated killing, or murder done in effort to perpetrate a felony, shall be murder in the first degree and punished with death. All other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder in the second degree, and punished by imprisonment in the state's prison." It will thus be seen that the constituent definition of murder remains as it was; and, while malice, in the popular sense of personal hatred or ill will, is not always required, and may be said to exist whenever there has been an unlawful and intentional homicide without excuse or mitigating circumstance, its presence is always necessary to the crime of murder, whether in the first or the second degree. Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another without malice, and, under given conditions, this crime may be established, though the killing has been both unlawful and intentional. Thus, if two men fight upon a sudden quarrel, and on equal terms at least at the outset, and in the progress of the fight one kills the other, kills in the anger naturally aroused by the combat, this ordinarily will be but manslaughter. In such case, though the killing may have been both unlawful and intentional, the passion, if aroused by provocation which the law deems adequate, is said to displace malice, and is regarded as a mitigating circumstance reducing the degree of the crime.

This position, and the reason upon which it is properly made to rest, is well stated by Judge Gaston, delivering the opinion of the court in State v. Hill, 20 N. C. 634, 635 (34 Am. Dec. 896), as follows: "If instantly thereupon (after being grievously assaulted) in the transport of passion thus excited, and without previous malice, the prisoner killed the deceased, it would have been a clear case of manslaughter. Not because the law supposes that this passion made him unconscious of what he was about to do, and stripped the act of killing of an intent to commit it, but because it presumes that passion disturbed the sway of reason, and made him regardless of her admonitions. It does not look upon him as temporarily deprived of intellect, and therefore not an accountable agent, but as one in whom the exercise of judgment is impeded by the violence of excitement, and accountable therefore as an infirm human being. We nowhere find that the passion which in law rebuts the imputation of malice must be so overpowering as for the time to shut out knowledge and destroy volition. All the writers concur in representing this indulgence of the law to be a condescension to the frailty of the human frame, which, during the furor brevis renders a man deaf to the voice of reason, so that, although the act done was intentional of death, it was not the result of malignity of heart, but imputable to human infirmity." Our decisions are also to the effect that, though there may have been previous ill feeling between the parties, yet if they afterwards meet accidentally, and a fight ensues in which one of them is killed, it shall not be intended that they were moved by the old grudge, "unless it so appear from the circumstances of the affair." This was directly held in the case of State v. Hill, supra, where there had previously been a fight between the parties; the ruling being expressed as follows: "Where two persons have formerly fought on malice and are apparently reconciled and fight again on a fresh quarrel it shall not be intended," etc. The principle was affirmed and again applied in State v. Jacob Johnson, 47 N. C. 247, 64 Am. Dec. 582, and in the opinion of this case is put by way of illustration: "But where A. bears malice against B., and they meet by accident, and upon a quarrel B. assaults A. with a grubbing hoe, and thereupon A. shoots B. with a pistol, the rule of referring the motive to the previous malice will not apply." And this is in accord with the doctrine generally prevailing.

Applying these principles to the facts presented, while the evidence tends to show that there was some animosity between these parties, there was nothing in the conversations between them, according to any version of them which would indicate a fixed and definite purpose to take the life of the deceased. The expressions imputed to the prisoner seem to have been in reply to a threat or boast by the officer that he could easily effect the arrest of the prisoner, and, according to all the testimony, the meeting in which the killing occurred was entirely accidental, certainly on the part of the prisoner. The witnesses, for both the state and the prisoner, who saw the occurrence say that the prisoner at the time was apparently leaving the town and going toward his place of work some distance away, when he was hailed by the officer, overtaken, arrested without any warrant or any conduct that presently justified it, turned back, and physically shoved along at least twice before he offered any active resistance. If these facts are established, we are of opinion, as stated, that they repel the idea of malice, and the question is presented only on the issue as to manslaughter, and the judge should so have instructed the jury.

Speaking to the question, in State v. Miller, 112 N. C. 885, 17 S. E. 169, an authority not inapplicable to the facts presented here, Avery, J., delivering the opinion, said: "It is true that when the killing with a deadly weapon is proved and admitted the burden is shifted upon the prisoner, and he must satisfy the jury, if he can do so from the whole of the testimony, as well that offered for the state as for the defense, that matter relied on to show mitigation or excuse is true. State v. Vann, 82 N. C. 631; State v. Willis, 63 N. C. 26; State v. Brittain, 89 N. C. 481. But when it appears to the judge that in no aspect of the testimony, and under no inference that can be fairly drawn from it, is the prisoner guilty of murder, it is his duty, certainly when requested to do so, to instruct the jury that they must not return a verdict of any higher offense than manslaughter, just as it would be his duty to instruct, in a proper case, that no sufficient evidence had been offered to either excuse or mitigate the slaying with a deadly weapon. Though the law may raise a presumption from a given state of facts, nothing more appearing, it is nevertheless the province of the court, when all the facts are developed and known, to tell the jury whether in every aspect of the testimony the presumption is rebutted. State v. Roten, 86 N. C. 701; Doggett v. Railroad, 81 N. C. 459; Ballinger v. Cureton, 104 N. C. 474 [10 S. E. 664]."

Nor do we think that the statement of the prisoner to the witness Shoemaker within five minutes of the occurrence should be allowed to affect the view we take of the case. This witness testified that, going up to the place five minutes after the shooting, Henry Coffey said to witness, "Mr. Baldwin has shot Mr. Miller and killed him," and witness said to Mr. Baldwin, "You have about fixed yourself to be hung, haven't you?" and Baldwin replied, "I have done what I intended to do, and I don't care what in the hell they do with me." The question as put by the witness was well calculated to arouse the prisoner, and the conversation at the time and place it occurred, and under the attendant facts, should be regarded, we think, as the not unnatural expression of an angered man who had just passed through a fateful encounter with his fellow man, and should properly be referred to the occurrence itself, and not by any fair intendment construed as an expression of a preconceived definite purpose to kill.

In awarding a new trial to the prisoner, with an intimation that his cause should be submitted to the jury on an issue as to manslaughter, we give such intimation only on the assumption that the facts shall be again developed substantially as they now appear, and especially on the theory that the arrest of the prisoner was without a valid warrant or other lawful authority. The court so held in the case, and the presumption is that this ruling was correct. If it should otherwise appear on a second trial, the case would be presented in an entirely different aspect. Under our authorities, the new trial is at large, and the case will be proceeded with in accordance with law and on the facts as they may be disclosed on a second hearing.

For the error indicated, there must be a new trial, and it is so ordered.

New trial.

CALVERT v. ALVEY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 251*)—ADMISSIONS—DECLARATIONS BY TRUSTEE.

In an action to set aside a trust deed, there was no error in excluding, as evidence against grantee, declarations of the trustee subsequent to the conveyance, where there was no evidence or admission that he was the grantee's agent in making the loan or procuring the execution of the deed, or, if so, it was not contended that the declarations were made at the time of the transaction, so as to render them a part of the res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 983-988; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 241*)—ADMISSIONS OF AGENT—EFFECT AS TO PRINCIPAL.

Where the acts of an agent bind the principal, the declarations, representations, and admissions of the agent respecting the subject-matter will also bind him, if made at the same time, and constitute a part of the res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 887-892; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 352*)—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT—RES INTER ALIOS ACTA.

In an action, by the assignee of judgments recovered by the receiver of a bank, to set aside as fraudulent a trust deed executed by judgment debtors, the books of the insolvent bank were clearly incompetent as to the grantee defendant, as she was in no wise responsible for or privy to them, and they were properly excluded as res inter alios acta.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1393, 1400; Dec. Dig. § 352.*]

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 155*)—SETTING ASIDE—KNOWLEDGE OR PARTICIPATION IN FRAUD.

The grantee's knowledge of or participation in the grantor's fraud is essential to set aside or vacate a deed as fraudulent against creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 493; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

5. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 159*)—PREFERENCE TO CREDITOR—EFFECT OF KNOWLEDGE OF OTHER DEBT.

A creditor has a right to secure a bona fide existing indebtedness, though knowing the debtors are largely indebted to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 506-517; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

6. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 162*)—TRUST DEED—TRUSTEE'S PARTICIPATION IN FRAUD—EFFECT.

The security of a creditor in a trust deed, who is himself innocent of fraud, is not affected by the trustee's participation therein, where the latter was merely the temporary repository of the legal title in an instrument securing a single debt, and had no previous connection with the trust property, nor any active duties to perform in connection with it, but in such case the secured creditor must be fixed with notice, and the trustee's knowledge is not imputable to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 504, 505; Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 271*)—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a creditor shows facts raising a presumption of fraud in a conveyance by his insolvent debtor, the history of which is necessarily known to the debtor only, the burden of rebutting the presumption lies on the debtor, but the rule does not apply to one claiming as a mortgagee, who innocently made a loan on the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 796-798; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

8. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 296*)—EVIDENCE—BONA FIDES OF DEBT.

In a suit to set aside a trust deed, evidence held to establish the bona fides of the secured debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 891; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; M. H. Justice, Judge.

Action by George R. Calvert against C. B. Alvey and others. Plaintiff was nonsuited, and he appealed. No error.

Civil action tried at March term, 1910, of the superior court of Buncombe County, his honor Judge Justice presiding. The action is brought by the assignee of certain judgments against W. H. Penland and others to set aside on ground of fraud a certain deed in trust, dated July 20, 1897, executed by W. H. Penland, Mary B., Althea M., and Mary C. Penland to Joseph E. Dickerson, trustee, covering nine tracts of land, securing the payment of a note to Mrs. C. B. Alvey in the sum of $10,000. It appears on the face of the deed in trust that it is made subject to a mortgage to J. E. Rumbough, trustee, for $8,000, and also a deed in trust to Jacob Friedman, trustee, for $7,000. On October 31, 1898, the deed in trust was foreclosed under the power of sale, and the nine tracts of land were purchased by and conveyed to C. B. Alvey in consideration of $5,000. This action is brought to set aside said deed in trust to Dickerson, trustee, and the subsequent conveyance under it to Mrs. Alvey, and for an accounting from her for rents and profits and proceeds of sale of lands sold by her over and above the amounts disbursed in the discharge of the prior incumbrances on the land. At conclusion of plaintiff's evidence a motion to nonsuit was sustained. Plaintiff appealed.

Frank Carter and H. C. Chedester, for plaintiff. Moore & Rollins and Locke Craig, for defendants.

BROWN, J. This action is brought by a judgment creditor to set aside certain conveyances alleged to be fraudulent, and to subject the property so conveyed, together with the rents and profits thereof, to the payment of the plaintiff's judgments, and to reach and subject in the hands of the defendant Alvey lands which are alleged to belong to certain of the defendants in said judgments with an accounting for the rents and profits thereof, and the proceeds of lands so held which are alleged to have been sold by said defendant. The judgments sued on were taken on notes due the First National Bank of Asheville by W. H. Penland, J. E. Dickerson, Mary C. Penland, Margaret P. Smith, Althea M. Penland, and Anna K. Smith. The bank failed July 30, 1897, and the receiver recovered judgments upon the notes and assigned them to plaintiff. W. H. Penland and J. E. Dickerson were directors in the bank, and the former was its cashier. Mrs. Alvey resided in Richmond, Va., and is the sister-in-law of Dickerson, who managed certain property owned by her in Asheville and attended to certain business matters for her. It is contended that the deed in trust of July 20, 1897, was fraudulent, that no real consideration passed, and that its purpose was to cover up the property of the grantors therein from the payment of their debts to the bank. It is contended that his honor erred in excluding the declarations of Dickerson, made subsequent to the conveyance, as evidence against Mrs. Alvey. We think the ruling correct. There is no evidence or admission that Dickerson was the agent of Mrs. Alvey in making the loan or in procuring the execution of the deed in trust; or, if so, it is not contended that the excluded declarations were made at the time of the transaction, so as to constitute them a part of the res gestæ. Where the acts of the agent will bind the principal, there his declarations, representations, and admission respecting the subject-matter will also bind the principal, if made at the same time, and constituting a part of the res gestæ. This seems to be well settled. 2 Taylor on Ev. § 602; Story, Agency, § 134.

The court also properly excluded the books of the insolvent bank. As to Mrs. Alvey they were clearly incompetent, as she was in no wise responsible for them or privy to them. "Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet." The other exceptions to evidence are equally as untenable, and need not be discussed.

The last exception to the nonsuit brings up the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence of fraud to be submitted to the jury. We agree with his honor that there is no evidence showing, or tending to show, that the defendant C. B. Alvey was guilty of any fraud, or that she knew of or participated in any fraud on the part of the grantors in the deed. There is nothing in the way of proof to indicate that Mrs. Alvey knew of or participated in any fraudulent intent on the part of the Penlands, assuming their purpose was to delay, hinder, and defraud the bank in the collection of its debt. It seems to be settled beyond controversy that knowledge of or participation therein by the grantee of fraud of the grantor is essential to set aside or vacate a deed. Lassiter v. Davis, 64 N. C. 498; Allen v. McLendon, 113 N. C. 321, 18 S. E. 206; Rose v. Coble, 61 N. C. 517; Trust Company v. Forbes, 120 N. C. 355, 27 S. E. 48; Reiger v. Davis, 67 N. C. 185; Osborne v. Wilkes, 108 N. C. 651, 13 S. E. 285; Haynes v. Roger, 111 N. C. 228, 16 S. E. 416; Riggan v. Sledge, 116 N. C. 87, 93, 20 S. E. 1016; Savage v. Knight, 92 N. C. 493, 53 Am. Rep. 423; Peeler v. Peeler, 109 N. C. 628, 14 S. E. 59; Wolf v. Arthur, 118 N. C. 890, 24 S. E. 671. It is true that the evidence discloses a large indebtedness upon the part of the Penlands to the bank, and that its affairs were in a very insolvent condition, but Mrs. Alvey had no knowledge of these facts. Assuming that she did, she had a right to secure any bona fide existing indebtedness if possible, and it would not be fraudulent for her to do so. But it is contended that the trustee in the deed in trust had knowledge of such conditions, and that such knowledge affects his cestui que trust. There are authorities to the effect that, although a preferred creditor in a trust deed is himself innocent of fraud, yet his trustee's participation therein destroys the security. But those authorities have no application to an instrument or transaction of this character. Dickerson was merely the temporary repository of the legal title in an instrument securing a single debt. He had no previous connection with the trust property, and had no active duties whatever to perform in connection with it. He held as a naked trustee, whose duties were nominal except in case of foreclosure, and then they are clearly marked and defined in the deed. In such cases the secured creditor must be fixed with notice, and the knowledge of the trustee is not imputable to him. Bank v. Ridenour, 46 Kan. 707, 718, 27 Pac. 150, 26 Am. St. Rep. 167; Batavia v. Wallace, 102 Fed. 240, 42 C. C. A. 310; 20 Cyc. 479, and cases cited.

It is contended that the burden of proof is on the defendant Alvey to show to the satisfaction of the jury the bona fides of this transaction. It is true, as contended, that where a creditor shows facts that raise a strong presumption of fraud in a conveyance made by his insolvent debtor, the history of which is necessarily known to the debtor only, the burden of proof lies on him to explain it. That would undoubtedly be true here if the Penlands were the interested defendants, but Mrs. Alvey occupies a different attitude. She claims as a mortgagee who has innocently made a loan upon property, and not as an insolvent debtor who is charged with conveying her property absolutely for her own benefit. There are no ties of kinship between Mrs. Alvey and the Penlands, and none of the well-known and definite fiduciary relations exist which raise either a presumption of fraud to be decided by the court, or a question of fraud, as matter of fact, to be submitted to and passed on by the jury for what it is worth. Lee v. Pearce, 68 N. C. 87. The proof is singularly free from any suspicious facts calculated to put Mrs. Alvey on inquiry as to the purposes of the Penlands in executing the trust, assuming that such purpose was fraudulent. She resided a long distance from them, was not related or even a very intimate friend, and so far as the evidence discloses, had no motive to participate in fraudulent conduct for their benefit. Assuming for argument's sake that Mrs. Alvey could be called upon to offer proof of the bona fides of her debt, the plaintiff himself has offered evidence which establishes it for her. He introduced her check for $10,000 on a bank in Richmond, together with the declarations of Dickerson in regard to the check and the debt, which tend strongly to prove a bona fide debt as the basis of the deed in trust. In view of that evidence the defendant Alvey might well rest her case upon plaintiff's proofs.

Upon a review of the record we find no reversible error, and the motion to nonsuit was properly sustained.

No error.

PULLEN et al. v. CORPORATION COMMISSION.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TAXATION (§ 386*)—BANK STOCK.

All bank stock is taxable at its full value after deducting the assessed value of the bank's real and personal property, although the capital is invested in North Carolina state bonds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 637-647; Dec. Dig. § 386.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 218*)—SURPLUS OF BANKS.

So much of the surplus of the bank as is not invested in the nontaxable bonds of the state of North Carolina issued in pursuance of the act of the General Assembly of 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 510) is likewise taxable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 357; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 218*)—EXEMPTIONS—BANK SURPLUS INVESTED IN STATE BONDS.

Under the provision of said act, so much of the surplus over and above capital as is invested in such nontaxable bonds is exempt and must be deducted from the surplus in assessing the stock for taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 357; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. TAXATION (§ 218*)—EXEMPTIONS—STATE BONDS AND CERTIFICATES OF DEBT—STATE POLICY.

The uniform and well-settled policy of the state, at least since 1852, in view of the history of legislation (Acts 1852, c. 10, § 3; Rev. Code, c. 90, § 5; Acts 1879, c. 98, § 3; Code, § 3573; Acts 1905, c. 543, § 4; Revisal 1905, §§ 5022, 5031), has been to exempt its own bonds and certificates of debt from taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 357; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 47*)—PROPERTY OF SHAREHOLDER IN CORPORATE STOCK.

The property of a shareholder of a corporation in its shares of stock for the purpose of taxation is a separate and distinct species of property from the property, whether real, personal, or mixed, owned by the corporation itself as a legal entity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 110; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

6. TAXATION (§ 25*)—METHOD OF VALUATION—POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

It is within the power of the Legislature under the Constitution to prescribe the method by which the value of all property subject to taxation is to be determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 59; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

7. TAXATION (§ 333*)—VALUATION—DEDUCTION OF DEBITS.

In listing property for taxation, taxpayers may deduct debts due by them and list the balance as taxable solvent credits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 557; Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

8. STATUTES (§ 181*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENT OF LEGISLATURE.

A statute should be construed with reference to the intent, scope, and purpose of the Legislature, and to ascertain such purpose the courts must give effect to all its provisions, unless to do so would violate the provisions of the fundamental law or produce irreconcilable conflicts in the statute itself, and the use of inapt, inaccurate, or improper terms will not invalidate a statute when the real meaning of the Legislature can be gathered from the context or general purpose and tenor of the enactment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 259, 263; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

9. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 41*)—PURPOSE OF SURPLUS.

The primary purpose of a bank surplus is the accumulation of a sum against which bad debts may be charged, so that at all times the capital may be kept unimpaired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 55; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

Clark, C. J., and Hoke, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Gulon, Judge.

Submission of controversy by John T. Pullen and another against the Corporation Commission. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

This was a controversy without action submitted to Gulon, J. From a judgment adverse to the plaintiffs, filed on April 19, 1910, they have appealed to this court.

Omitting the merely formal parts of the submission, the facts agreed to as determining this controversy are thus stated:

(1) That the Corporation Commission is a department of the state government, created by law and charged with certain duties, among which duties is exercising the powers and duties of state tax commissioners. That their office is in the city of Raleigh, Wake county, N. C.

(2) That the Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company is a bank and savings institution, duly created by law, having a capital and a surplus, whose office and place of business is in the city of Raleigh, and that John T. Pullen is a stockholder therein, as shown by the books of the company, and is a citizen of Wake county. (a) That the asylum or 1949 bonds, herein referred to, were sold by the state of North Carolina at a price of 103, the same bearing 4 per cent. interest per annum, payable semiannually, and not due until July 1, 1949, as expressed in said bond, and that said bonds were sold upon the faith of the state, as pledged in the act authorizing their issue. That at the time of such sale the legal rate of interest for money loaned in North Carolina was 6 per cent. per annum, all banking institutions being authorized to take interest in advance; and that at the time of such sale the outstanding bonds of the state of North Carolina bearing 4 per cent. interest were sold on the financial markets at 102, such sales being below the price brought by the bonds above referred to.

(3) That John T. Pullen is interested directly in the assessment of the stock, as the failure to deduct these asylum or 1949 bonds from the surplus in arriving at the assessment of the stock will directly affect to his injury and loss that amount of state, county, and city taxes paid by him on said stock.

(4) That on the 5th day of March, A. D. 1909, the General Assembly of North Carolina enacted "An act to issue bonds to carry out the act of 1907, for the care of the insane of the state," which act is known as chapter 510 of the Public Acts of 1909, a copy of which act is hereto attached and marked "Exhibit A"; said act reading, in section 4, as follows: "Sec. 4. The said bonds and coupons shall be exempt from all state, county or municipal taxation or assessment, direct or indirect, general or special, whether imposed for purposes of general revenue or otherwise, and the interest paid thereon shall not be subject to taxation as for income, nor shall said bonds and coupons be subject to taxation when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company or other corporation."

(5) That on or about the 1st day of July, 1909, the state of North Carolina, acting through its Governor and State Treasurer, issued $500,000 of asylum bonds, now known as 1949 bonds, authorized by the act just above referred to, and sold the same to various parties, both within and without the state of North Carolina.

(6) That at the session of the Legislature of 1909 the General Assembly passed the revenue and machinery acts, known respectively as chapters 438 and 440, the same regulating the listing and collection of taxes levied and imposed for raising revenue for the state of North Carolina; the said chapter 440, among other things, providing, in section 33 (in part) relative to taxation of banks, banking associations, or savings institutions, as follows: "The value of such shares shall be determined as is hereinafter in this section provided. Every bank, banking association or savings institution (whether state or national) shall list its real estate in the county, city or town in which such real estate is located, for the purposes of state, county and municipal taxation. Every such bank, banking association or savings institution shall, during the month of June, list annually with the Corporation Commission, in the name and for its shareholders, all the shares of its capital stock, whether held by residents or nonresidents, at its market value on the first day of June, or, if it have no market value, then at its actual value on that day, from which market or actual value shall be deducted the assessed value of the real and personal property which such bank, banking association or savings institution shall have listed for taxation in the county or counties where such real and personal estate is located. The actual value of such shares, where such shares have no market value, shall be ascertained by adding together the capital stock, surplus and undivided profits and deducting therefrom the amount of real and personal property owned by said institution on which it pays tax, and dividing the net amount by the number of shares in such institution. Insolvent debts due said institution may be deducted from the items of undivided profits or surplus, if itemized and sworn to, and forwarded to the Corporation Commission by the cashier of such institution. If the Corporation Commission shall have reason to believe that the market or actual value as given in is not its true value, it shall ascertain such true value by such examination and investigations as to it seems proper, and change the value as given in to such amount as it ascertains the true value to be, which action on the part of the Corporation Commission may be reviewed by the superior court, by an action brought against the Corporation Commission in its official capacity by the party aggrieved."

(7) That the Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company is a bank and savings institution, having a capital and a surplus, and that a part of said surplus is invested in the bonds issued under Acts 1909, c. 510, commonly known as the asylum bonds or 1949 bonds, and that it bought the same upon the faith of the state of North Carolina, as pledged in chapter 510 of the Public Laws of 1909, paying for the same out of its surplus.

(8) That the said Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company has made return to the Corporation Commission, as is required in section 33 of the machinery act of 1909 (Acts 1909, c. 440), for the assessing of the shares of stock held by the stockholders in said corporation, in accordance with law, which said assessment the Corporation Commission is directed to make and certify to the several counties where the stockholders reside, as the value of said stock for taxation.

(9) That the Corporation Commission, in accordance with the statute providing for the assessment of capital stock of banks, have assessed and appraised the value of the shares of stock of the Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company by adding together the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits and deducting therefrom the real and personal property owned by said institution, on which it pays tax, and dividing the net amount by the number of shares in said institution. That the said Corporation Commission did not deduct from the surplus the asylum or 1949 bonds (those authorized by chapter 510 of the Public Laws of 1909) owned by the said Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company; they holding that the same was not deductible, as a matter of law, in arriving at this assessment, to which assessment the said Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company and John T. Pullen, a stockholder of said company, have excepted and announced their intention of bringing an action against the Corporation Commission in the superior court of Wake county in its official capacity, to review the action of the said Corporation Commission.

(10) That a tender of all taxes, admitted by the aggrieved parties to be due, have been made before the submission of this controversy without action.

(11) With a view of facilitating the arriving at a determination of the rights of the parties, it has been agreed to present the submission of this case, containing the facts upon which the controversy depends, to the superior court of Wake county for its determination and rendition of judgment thereon, as if the action were pending.

The judgment rendered by his honor, upon the above facts, is as follows: "North Carolina—Superior Court. [Title of Cause.] The court, by consent of parties, having heard argument in this case agreed, is of opinion, and so adjudges, that the ruling of the Corporation Commission herein be and the same is hereby affirmed, and it is adjudged that the $55,000 of surplus invested in these bonds should not be and shall not be deducted in arriving at the value of each share of stock for the purpose of taxation. The plaintiffs will pay the cost hereof. Plaintiffs except. Appeal by the plaintiffs. Bond of $50 adjudged sufficient, on appeal, and the case agreed on the entire papers in this controversy without action, and this judgment will, by consent, constitute the case on appeal. April 19, 1910."

The plaintiffs appealed.

W. H. Pace, A. B. Andrews, Jr., and R. H. Battle & Son, for appellants. Aycock & Winston, for appellee.

MANNING, J. The General Assembly of this state, at its session in 1909, authorized (chapter 510, Pub. Laws 1909) the issue of $500,000 of bonds of the state to pay the expenditure of that sum, authorized by the General Assembly of 1907, for the enlargement of the state institutions for the care of its mental defectives. Section 4 of that act provides: "The said bonds and coupons shall be exempt from all state, county or municipal taxation or assessment, direct or indirect, general or special, whether imposed for purposes of general revenue or otherwise, and the interest paid thereon shall not be subject to taxation as for income, nor shall said bonds or coupons be subject to taxation when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company or other corporation." The uniform and well-settled policy of the state—certainly since 1852, and its power to do so seems never to have been doubted or questioned—has been to exempt its own bonds and certificates of debt from taxation. Acts 1852, c. 10, § 3; Rev. Code 1879, c. 90, § 5; Acts 1879, c. 98, § 3; Code, § 3573; Acts 1905, c. 543, § 4; Revisal 1905, §§ 5022, 5031. In the act herein quoted (section 4, c. 510, Acts 1909) this purpose and intent is expressed in language so clear and unambiguous that it can admit of no uncertainty. The particular inhibition of this section, which is presented for our interpretation, and which is not found in any preceding act authorizing the issue of state bonds, is the last clause, in these words: "Nor shall said bonds and coupons be subject to taxation when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company or other corporation." Omitting these words from the section, it is clear that the bonds and coupons and interest paid thereon are exempted from all state, county, or municipal taxation or assessment, direct or indirect, general or special, whether imposed for general revenue or otherwise, and this is true regardless of their ownership, whether by individuals, partnerships, joint-stock associations, or corporations, and whether constituting a part of the capital, surplus, or undivided profits of the corporation. In the hands of the owner, and however held, and regardless of what part of his money is invested in them, the state bonds issued under this act are clearly exempted from all taxation, general or special, direct or indirect. This being the clear intent and policy of the state speaking through the legislative department, and exercising a power uniformly recognized and conceded, it is our plain duty to uphold the will of the state, and not to be astute to search for ways to evade it.

It is, likewise, well-settled by the language of our state Constitution, by many decisions of this court, and of the Supreme Court of the United States, and now generally accepted law, that the property of a shareholder of a corporation in its shares of stock is a separate and distinct species of property from the property, whether real, personal, or mixed, held and owned by the corporation itself as a legal entity. It would be useless to cite authority to support a proposition so well established and generally accepted. Const. art. 5, § 3, commands that: "Laws shall be passed taxing, by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money." It is apparent, from an examination of the taxing laws of the state, that the legislative department has attempted to observe and enforce the mandate of the Constitution. In Com'r's v. Tobacco Co., 116 N. C. 441, 21 S. E. 423, in discussing the several forms of taxation to which corporations were subject under the Constitution, this court said: "As to corporations, by all the authorities, it is in the power of the Legislature to lay the following taxes, two or more of them in its discretion at the same time: (1) To tax the franchise (including in this the power to tax also the corporate dividends). (2) The capital stock. (3) The real and personal property of the corporation. This tax is imperative and not discretionary under the ad valorem feature of the Constitution. (4) The shares of stock in the hands of the stockholder. This is also imperative and not discretionary." In that case the court also held that it was competent for the Legislature, in the method adopted by it, to tax the shares of stock in the hands of shareholders, to require the corporation by its proper officer to file a list of the shareholders and the corporation to pay the taxes assessed against the shares of stock, and "this does not affect the liability of the shares to tax as the property of the shareholders, but is simply for the convenience of the state in collecting the tax. The effect is merely to change the situs of the shares for taxation from the residence of the owner to the locality where the chief office of the corporation is situated, as was held in Wiley v. Commissioners, 111 N. C. 399 [16 S. E. 542]." In Home Savings Bank v. Des Moines, 205 U. S. 503, 27 Sup. Ct. 571, 51 L. Ed. 901, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Justice McKenna, said: "It, however, is not an uncommon, and is an entirely legitimate, method of collecting taxes, to require a corporation, as the agent of the shareholders, to pay in the first instance the taxes upon shares, as the property of the owners, and look to the shareholders for reimbursement." The tax in such cases would be a tax upon the shares of stock, and not a tax upon the corporation. It would be a mere method of collecting the tax, and not a change of the subject-matter of taxation.

It is, likewise, within the power of the Legislature, under the Constitution, to prescribe the method by which the value of all property subject to taxation is to be ascertained and determined; and the method prescribed by the Legislature, and which has been prescribed for many years, for fixing the value for taxation of bank shares, is found in section 33, c. 440, Acts 1909, and is as follows: "Every bank, banking association or savings institution (whether state or national) shall list its real estate in the county, city or town in which such real estate is located, for the purpose of state, county and municipal taxation. Every such bank, banking association or savings institution shall, during the month of June, list annually with the Corporation Commission, in the name and for its shareholders, all the shares of its capital stock, whether held by residents or nonresidents, at its market value on the first day of June, or, if it have no market value, then at its actual value on that day, from which market or actual value shall be deducted the assessed value of the real and personal property which such bank, banking association or savings institution shall have listed for taxation in the county or counties wherein such real estate is located. The actual value of such shares, where such shares have no market value, shall be ascertained by adding together the capital stock, surplus and undivided profits, and deducting therefrom the amount of real and personal property owned by said institution on which it pays tax, and dividing the net amount by the number of shares in said institution. Insolvent debts due said institution may be deducted from the items of undivided profits or surplus, if itemized and sworn to, and forwarded to the Corporation Commission by the cashier of such institution." It is further provided that the commission may, if it desire, make such examination and investigation as it may believe to be advisable to ascertain the market or actual value, and its action may be reviewed by an action, such as the present case is, in the superior court. This has been for many years substantially the method prescribed by the Legislature of the state for ascertaining the taxable value of the shares of stock in banking institutions, whether state or national, and the only change of note was made by the Acts of 1909, in changing the authorities to appraise the stock from the Auditor of the State to the Corporation Commission. In speaking of this section, this court, in Lumber Co. v. Smith, 151 N. C. 70, 65 S. E. 641, through Mr. Justice Hoke, said: "In the case of banks, their realty is listed in the county, and, on report made as required by this section, the value of the shares is appraised and determined by the commission, and this, with the sworn list of stockholders, is certified by the commissioners to the county authorities, to the end that the proper amount may be assessed against the individual holders of the same. This is done in order to conform the taxation of all banks to the method permissible in the case of national banks, and in order to make the taxation equal and uniform throughout the state on all institutions of that class. There is much to be said in support of the scheme of taxation contained in these statutes, tending, as it does, to uniformity and consistency of rulings on the various and important questions presented, and, under an intelligent and conservative administration, the law is proving itself to be a satisfactory and workable system. These are matters, however, more properly for legislative consideration, and are not dwelt upon; the only question for us being the power of the Legislature to enact the law and its correct interpretation."

It will be observed that, in the section of the machinery act under consideration, it is made the duty of the defendant commission to deduct from both the market and the actual value of the shares of stock, as ascertained by it before fixing the taxable value of such shares, the aggregate of the real and personal property listed by the banking institution. The principle of deduction is further recognized in the cases of individuals and corporations, when they come to list their solvent credits, in that from their solvent credits they are authorized to deduct their obligations or debts due by them, and the balance is to be listed as taxable solvent credits. This principle is recognized by the Supreme Court of Illinois as constitutional, in Loan Ass'n v. Keith, 153 Ill. 609, 39 N. E. 1072, 28 L. R. A. 65. The Legislature has for many years recognized this as an equitable system of taxation; it has been incorporated for more than 25 years in our system of taxation, and this notwithstanding that it has been well settled by repeated decisions of this and other courts that shares of stock are, in the hands of the shareholder, separate and distinct property from the property of the corporation. The fairness and justness of the principle of deductions in the method of ascertaining the taxable value of the subjects of taxation, in order to avoid the essential harshness and inequity of double taxation, was, we think, distinctly sanctioned as long ago as 1882, in Railroad v. Com'rs of Wake, 87 N. C. 414. That case was presented to this court on appeal by both parties, from the judgment of the superior court, and in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court Chief Justice Smith, as pertinent to the present matter, said: "3. The commissioners object, further, that the assessed value of the preferred stock should be reduced by the value of the real estate and franchise as taxed separately in the several counties traversed by the road. The ruling of the court in directing the reduction is obviously made to avoid the imposition of a double tax, since the value of all property owned by a corporation, in whatever consisting, and including the franchise, is the true and fair measure of the value of all its stock, and hence the General Assembly permits stockholders, in valuing their shares, to 'deduct their ratable proportion of tax paid by the corporation upon its property as such in this state.' Section 8, par. 6. The section leaves it somewhat uncertain whether the value of stock is to be reduced by the value of corporate property taxed, and the tax levied upon the difference, or the tax upon the former is to be abated to the extent of the tax upon the latter; but we interpret the latter to be the meaning. The effect of the ruling of the court is to deprive the counties through which the road passes of assessments of the corporate property in each, and transfer them to the county of Wake, while it is, in our opinion, the purpose of the statute to allow the taxpaying shareholder to deduct from the tax on his shares a ratable part of the tax paid upon the corporate property elsewhere by the corporation itself, but not to withdraw from taxation in other counties such property of the corporation therein as is liable to assessment and taxation." Again, in Railroad v. Com'rs of Alamance, 91 N. C. 454, this court, again speaking through the Chief Justice, interpreting Acts 1881, c. 117, § 8, subd. 6, said: "In the concluding clause, amended by Acts 1883, c. 368, § 8, to remove the obscurity pointed out in Railroad v. Com'rs of Wake, 87 N. C. 426, it is provided that 'stockholders in valuing their shares may deduct their ratable proportion of the value of taxable property, the tax whereof is paid by the corporation.'"

The power of the Legislature to authorize deductions to be made by the taxpayer in the method it has prescribed for ascertaining the taxable value of some of the subjects of taxations has been continuously exercised under the interpretation of the Constitution by this court in the cases cited above. If the reason moving the Legislature to concede a deduction was based upon a desire to avoid apparently double taxation, and this was a legitimate exercise of its discretion, we cannot see why it could not be moved to exercise a similar discretion in favor of a species of property which the fixed policy of the state, for more than half a century, has been to exempt from taxation, which the Legislature by its act in 1900 has, in the most unequivocal terms, forbidden to be taxed by the state, county, city, or town, generally or specially, directly or indirectly. This inhibition of taxation can only be of advantage to the state's own citizens and corporations; to the stranger it can be of no advantage, as, living beyond the territorial limits of the state, he is beyond the reach of its taxing power. The state and its taxpayers are not without compensating advantage for this exemption from taxation conferred upon the bonds issued by the state, because it is thereby enabled to sell its bonds, bearing interest at only 4 per cent., not only at their par value, but at a premium, and thus if residents and citizens of the state—those liable to pay it tribute in taxes—own the bonds of the state, what the state and its taxing subdivisions, created by it, may lose in revenue by permitting the bonds to be taxed, is saved by the state and its taxpayers in having to pay a much reduced rate of interest on the bonds.

The only remaining question, presented by the argument and arising upon the record, to be determined by us, is: Does the act authorize the deduction of these bonds to be made when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company, or other corporation? Does this plainly appear to be the meaning of the act and the legislative intent?

The settled rule of statutory construction is that a statute should be construed with reference to the intended scope and purpose of the Legislature, and, in order to ascertain the purpose, the courts must give effect to all of its clauses and provisions unless to do so would violate the provisions of the fundamental law or produce irreconcilable conflicts in the statute itself; nor will the use of inapt, inaccurate, or improper terms or phrases invalidate a statute, when the real meaning of the Legislature can be gathered from the context or from the general purpose and tenor of the enactment. Spencer v. Railroad, 137 N. C. 110, 49 S. E. 96, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 604; Fortune v. Commissioners, 140 N. C. 322, 52 S. E. 950; Board of Education v. Commissioners, 137 N. C. 310; ¹ Black on Interpretation of Laws, 56. It is also said in Mordecai's Law Lectures, p. 22: "The construction given to a statute by the executive officers of the government contemporaneously with its passage is entitled to great weight with the courts." It appears from the public records of the state that for many years prior to 1909, and while the Auditor of the State was the authority authorized to ascertain and appraise the value of stock in banking institutions, he deducted, under the advice of the law officer of the state, the state bonds held by the banks from their total assets. Some doubt was suggested as to the validity of this uniform practice of the Auditor's office. The Legislature, in enacting the act now under consideration, added to section 4 these words: "Nor shall said bonds and coupons be subject to taxation when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company or other corporation." This same language will also be found in section 4, c. 399, Acts 1909, being the act "to authorize the issue of state bonds to pay off the state bonds which fall due on the first day of July, 1910." These words will be found in no other act authorizing the issue of state bonds. We must assume that these acts of such public importance, affecting the credit of the state and authorizing the issue of its bonds, received the careful examination and scrutiny of the General Assembly; and that provisions incorporated in them not found in other similar acts could not pass unobserved and would not have been adopted unless they expressed some new and distinct legislative intent. The acts were required by the Constitution and were passed with distinct formality. The bills had to be read on three several days in each branch of the General Assembly, and on the second and third readings the ayes and noes were recorded as required on the journals of each House. In Acts 1905, c. 543, § 5, in the legislation authorizing the issue of bonds in settlement of the South Dakota judgment and the Schafer bonds, the only language used is, "Said bonds shall be exempt from all taxation including income tax." The language used in other acts authorizing the issue of state bonds will be found in sections 5022 and 5031, Revisal 1905.

In using the language in the act now under consideration, there must have been, as hereinbefore observed, some distinct legislative intent, and we think this will be found in the machinery act. The fact that the property exempt from taxation is made exempt by another act different from the machinery act does not support the argument that it is not exempt from taxation; nor does the fact that the machinery act in terms does not authorize the bonds to be deducted support the argument that it was not the legislative intent to have them deducted; for in section 32, c. 440, Acts 1909, that section, which specifies what property the taxpayer shall list for taxation, and calls specifically for the listing of the amount of credits, there is no reference whatever to state bonds or other bonds of the state's subdivisions that are legally exempt from taxation. To ascertain this exemption the taxpayer and the tax lister must each look elsewhere, to other acts whose provisions will be considered in pari materia. Wilson v. Jordan, 124 N. C. 683, 33 S. E. 139, and cases cited in Annotated Reports. Looking to and examining the machinery act, we find that the only connection in which the word "surplus" is used is in ascertaining the taxable value of shares of stock in a corporation, whether the entire tax is to be paid by the corporation for its shareholder or in part by the shareholder himself. This is true not only of the act of 1909, but of all previous acts extending over a period of many years, since the Legislature adopted the present method of ascertaining and appraising the shares of stock for taxation. So then it seems to us in our scheme of taxation the word "surplus" has a distinct legal signification, and it must have been used with that signification in the act now under review by the legislative branch of the government, which has created and established our taxing system, and which alone has the power to do so. Unless we so interpret the statute, we shall fail to give any force and effect to this language. This we cannot do under a well-settled rule of statutory interpretation. These words were not needed in addition to the other clear and unambiguous language of the section to exempt these bonds from taxation as the property of a bank, whether consisting of a part of its capital, surplus, or undivided profits; the other words of the section were plenary for this purpose.

But it is objected that the Supreme Court of the United States has held, in Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 167 U. S. 134, 16 Sup. Ct. 456, 40 L. Ed. 645, that the surplus of a bank may be taxed as a distinct species of property; but that decision does not hold that, when that surplus consists of nontaxable bonds, it may be taxed. We do not think that case decisive of the present question. The facts presented in it are substantially these: The state of Tennessee, in granting a charter to the Bank of Commerce, stipulated that "said institution shall have a lien on the stock for debts due it by the stockholders before and in preference to other creditors, except the state for taxes; and shall pay to the state an annual tax of one-half of one per cent. on each share of capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." Subsequently the state passed an act providing that "the surplus and undivided profits in such bank, banking association, or other corporation shall be assessable to said bank or other corporation, and the same shall not be considered in the assessment of the stock therein." Previous to this act the state had attempted to tax the shareholders upon their shares of stock in addition to the amount provided in the charter above quoted, and in a suit brought to test the validity of this tax, and which suit finally reached the Supreme Court of the United States as Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. Ed. 558, it was held that "the exemption was a contract between the state and the bank limiting the amount of tax on each share of stock, and that a subsequent revenue law of the state which imposed additional taxes on the shares in the hands of the shareholders impaired the obligation of the contract and was void." In the Bank of Commerce Case, supra, the court, in referring to the Farrington Case, said: "We do not think under the circumstances that we ought to come to a different conclusion upon the question of exemption from that which was arrived at by this court in the Farrington Case." And the court held that the provision of the bank charter having been construed to be a contract limitation of the power to tax the shares of stock as the property of the shareholder, it would not extend its benefits to exempt the corporate property from taxation, and, as the revenue act only taxed the surplus and undivided profits of the corporation, such tax did not impair the obligation of a contract and was within the power of the state; and therefore the state could tax the entire capital, surplus, and undivided profits of the bank.

We do not think that case authority against our interpretation of the act now under consideration. The primary purpose of a bank surplus is the accumulation of a sum against which bad debts may be charged so that at all times the capital may be kept unimpaired.

This is required by the national banking act. The only connection in which, as we have observed, that the word "surplus" is used in our taxing system, now established &c., more than a quarter of a century, is that it appears in the method prescribed for ascertaining the taxable value of shares of stock. We think, therefore, that it was within the power of the Legislature to authorize a deduction of the bonds issued under the provisions of this particular act of the General Assembly when they constituted a part of the surplus of a banking institution, in ascertaining the taxable value of the shares of stock, and that the legislative intent to have such deduction made is expressed with sufficient clearness for this court to discover such intent, especially when this act is construed in connection with section 33, c. 440, Acts 1909, known as the "machinery act." By such interpretation we give effect to the legislative intent without disregarding any clause of the act, which we could not do by any other interpretation; and at the same time we give effect to the well-settled policy of our plan of taxation to tax the shares of stock in banking institutions as a separate and distinct species of property. The deduction of investment in these bonds by a bank can be made only when the bonds constitute a part of the surplus of such institution. If a part or all of the capital stock or undivided profits are invested in these bonds, the claim of the shareholder for a deduction cannot be sustained, as the language of the act comprehends only the surplus. If all the surplus is invested in these particular bonds, and there are no undivided profits, then the shares of stock would be appraised at not over their par value, subject to the deduction of the value of the real estate and personal property owned by the bank and already taxed. As to the validity of the deduction of the real estate and personal property no question seems to be raised. If a less amount than the entire surplus is invested in these bonds, then the appraisement of the shares of stock for taxation would be correspondingly increased. We do not think that this interpretation of the act in any wise impairs the right of the state, under the consent of Congress given in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3502), to tax the shares of stock in national banking associations, for our interpretation in no way violates either of the two restrictions imposed by that section of the Revised Statutes. We say this much in reference to the effect upon the taxation of the shares in national banks, because the question was suggested on the argument and in the brief of counsel for the defendant.

We conclude, therefore, that the judgment of the superior court sustaining the ruling of the Corporation Commission in appraising the stock of the plaintiff Pullen in the Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company is erroneous, in that the investment of a part of the surplus by the said bank and trust company in these bonds, known as the "asylum bonds," should have been deducted from the aggregate value of the assets of the said bank and trust company in ascertaining and appraising the value of the shares of stock in said corporation for taxation.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceeding in accordance with this opinion.

Reversed.

BROWN, J. (concurring). I agree fully to the views so lucidly and strongly presented in the opinion of the court by Mr. Justice MANNING. I agree also that it is well settled that the shares of stock in any corporation, when owned by individuals, are separate and distinct property from the assets of the corporation and may be taxed as such. But it must be conceded that it rests exclusively with the Legislature to determine how and by what method such shares are to be valued for taxation, as much so as to provide a method for valuing lands and all other property. The right upon the part of a state to exempt its own bonds from all taxation is universally conceded, and, when the General Assembly declared expressly that they should not be taxed when constituting a part of the surplus of a bank, it exercised an undoubted power, which heretofore has never been denied to it. It remains only to determine: Why were such words employed in the statute, and what end were they intended to accomplish?

That has been clearly demonstrated, I think, in the opinion of the court. No such language is contained in any act of Congress relating to national bonds, nor in any of our own statutes heretofore, and hence the cases cited are of no value. This new provision introduced in this state no new method of valuing bank stock. It was plainly intended to give legislative sanction to a practice which had been followed here for many years up to 1909. Under the ruling of the former Attorney General, the Auditor of the State, in assessing the value of bank stock for taxation, always deducted from the bank's surplus all North Carolina bonds, because they were nontaxable, and that was the only way under our system of bank taxation of obeying the law and exempting them from taxation. It is well known that when the General Assembly of 1909 was considering this act for refunding a large part of the state debt, it intended to incorporate in the bill a provision which would make that practice mandatory in the future. Hence that provision was put in the bill and drawn expressly for that purpose, as is generally understood, by the present Attorney General at the instance of the committee on finance. It is also well known that the same construction we are giving to this statute has been given to it by the present state administration under the opinion of the Attorney General, and that the bonds were purchased and paid for in reliance upon that construction. If I were doubtful about the true meaning and purpose of the General Assembly, I should solve it in favor of that construction by which the good faith of the state is maintained. As it is, I have no doubt that the state administration under the advice of the Attorney General has construed the act correctly. Any other construction, in my opinion, destroys the purpose of the Legislature and converts its language into foolish and meaningless terms, a snare with which to trap the unwary purchaser. The charge that we are exempting bank stock from taxation is without any foundation to support it. As pointed out in the opinion of the court, such stock cannot possibly escape taxation at its full par value.

This, however, is not a matter of such grave importance to the state as we are led to believe. I have it from the Treasurer of the State that, although for years past our state bonds have invariably been deducted from the surplus of banks in assessing shares of stock for taxation, yet not more than 10 per cent. of the state debt has at any time been owned in North Carolina. I quote verbatim from the opinion of the State Treasurer: "At no time has more than 10 per cent. of the bonds been held inside of North Carolina, and I do not think there is any probability in the future of more than that amount being held in the state, and only a part of that by the banks. I do not think this state can absorb $4,000,000 worth of 4 per cent. securities, but the increased value of a part of these bonds in the state will in my judgment affect the value of the entire issue, as the outside bidders will always regard the value in the home market." This statement from the efficient and experienced Treasurer of the State, Mr. Lacy, shows how utterly groundless is the assertion that the construction we place upon the statute will exempt $4,000,000 of property from taxation. The wisdom and policy of this legislation is not a matter for our consideration. We should not destroy an act of the General Assembly because we do not approve of it. It is for us to declare the law, not make it.

But I am of opinion that this legislation is in line with a wise and enlightened public policy. Our recognized state debt is over $7,000,000, which will not be paid off for many generations to come. The debt will from time to time be refunded and new bonds issued. The wisdom of the General Assembly prompted it to create, if possible, a reliable home market for our bonds so that the large sums paid out by the state as interest may be kept at home. It therefore offered the stockholders of banks and other corporations of this state an inducement to purchase its bonds by exempting them from taxation when the surplus earnings of the bank over and above its capital shall be invested in them.

The stockholders of a bank will not permit its surplus to be invested in these low-rate interest bonds if thereby their shares of stock are to be valued for taxation just as high as if the surplus was invested in more productive investments. Therefore it is perfectly manifest to me that the General Assembly intended to provide that in valuing the shares for taxation state bonds must be exempted by deducting them from the surplus.

It is a matter of common knowledge in the financial world that commercial banks do not as a rule invest in such bonds. Their deposit accounts are too active, and discounting short-time paper is much more lucrative. It is generally the savings institutions that invest their deposits in state bonds. In the New England and other states, where savings banks are greatly fostered, they have been encouraged to invest their funds in the securities of their own state not only because such institutions are productive of thrift and prosperity among a people, but because such investments are the safest and best for their depositors' funds. Such has been the enlightened policy of the statesmen of France, a most thrifty nation, and as a result of which it was enabled, without outside help, to pay off at once the most stupendous fine ever imposed upon a conquered people in the history of the world.

The stockholders of the plaintiff bank, having purchased these bonds, admittedly at a large premium, relying upon the language of the statute and the opinion of the state's officials, are entitled to have them deducted from the surplus in valuing their stock. With perfect deference to others, I think that good faith and fair dealing require it.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). Though much has been said on the argument in regard to this decision affecting the price of state bonds, reference to the complaint and the judgment of the Corporation Commission discloses that the sole purpose of the action, and the only point presented, is as to whether the stockholders in a bank which holds state bonds are exempt to the amount of these bonds from the payment of taxes on their individual property—the shares which they buy and sell at will and which is as much their private property (though paying larger profits) as the horses and plows with which the farmer makes his living or the taxed tools which a mechanic uses. When the state issues its bonds, it has never been denied that it can exempt them from taxation by state, county, and municipal authorities. This is on the principle that the state thereby in effect does collect tax by deducting it in the rate of interest which the bonds bear.

The $55,000 of state bonds in this case are owned by the Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company and have not paid one cent of tax to the state, county, or city, and no one has ever suggested, or does now suggest, that they should. By reason of such exemption from taxation, the bank saves some $1,375 annually, which swells to that extent the fund annually available to be divided among its stockholders. Not content with that, the stockholders in this case are asking for a second exemption, another $1,375 annually, by again deducting the same $55,000, in assessing the value of their private property, the shares of stock, for taxation. The shareholders do not own these bonds. They are owned by the bank itself, and the bank has been already exempted from taxation on $55,000 on account of the bank's ownership of them.

Nothing is better settled by the uniform decisions of this court and of the United States Supreme Court than that the property of a bank and the shares of the stockholder are entirely separate and distinct, and that the taxation, or exemption, of the one is in no wise a taxation or exemption of the other. Belo v. Commissioners, 82 N. C. 415, 33 Am. Rep. 688; Commissioners v. Tobacco Co., 116 N. C. 446, 21 S. E. 423. Indeed, so thoroughly is this principle settled by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that in Shelby County v. Bank, 161 U. S. 149, 16 Sup. Ct. 558, 40 L. Ed. 650, it is declared that no one now disputes that they are separate and distinct classes of property.

In numerous cases in which stockholders in banks, holding United States bonds, have contended that their shares in such bank were exempt from taxation to the extent of such United States bonds, and that the value of their bonds should be deducted in assessing the shares of stock for taxation, that court has uniformly rejected the contention upon the ground that the bonds were the property of the bank and exempt as such, and that the shares were the property of individuals and not entitled to any exemption in assessing their value on account of the bonds so held by the bank. This is the very contention which the plaintiffs are making in this case, and which has been rejected whenever presented, by the highest court in the land. Van Allen v. Assessors, 8 Wall. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229; Bradley v. People, 4 Wall. 459, 18 L. Ed. 433; Trust Co. v. Lander, 184 U. S. 111, 22 Sup. Ct. 394, 46 L. Ed. 456.

In Commissioners v. Tobacco Co., 116 N. C. 447, 21 S. E. 424, following the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the previous decisions of this court, it was said: "The capital stock belongs to the corporation. The shares or certificates of stock are entirely a different matter. They belong to the shareholders individually, and under the Constitution must be taxed ad valorem like other property belonging to the holder, independently of the taxation upon the corporation, its franchises, etc."

If it is now held otherwise as to the plaintiffs, shareholders in a bank, as to our state bonds in this case reversing all previous decisions, we may not only strike from the tax books $4,000,000 in value of shares of stock in state banks, but we may very probably be exempting all national banks from any taxation whatsoever. The state cannot discriminate against United States bonds.

The act before us exempts three classes of property: (1) The bonds themselves are exempt from all taxation, direct or indirect, general or special. (2) The dividends paid on such bonds are not subject to taxation as an income tax. (3) The surplus of any bank, when consisting of such bonds, shall be exempt from taxation. Not a word is said about exempting shares of stock.

The argument that the shares of stock in the plaintiff's bank are nontaxable because their value is due in part to the fact that if the bank was wound up, and the surplus divided, the proceeds of such nontaxable bonds, derived from the sale thereof, would be divided among the shareholders, is fallacious because it confounds the surplus owned, held, and controlled by the bank with the shares of stock which are owned, held, and controlled by individuals. The Corporation Commission is required by law to assess the value of shares of stock in all banks for taxation. When this matter was presented to that body, it assessed the value of the plaintiff's shares of stock at $104.40 per share, and its decision was in the following words:

"In assessing the shares of stock in this bank, the Corporation Commission followed the direction of the statute, as it did not appear such shares had a market value, by adding together the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits, and deducting therefrom the amount of real and personal property owned by said institution on which it paid taxes, as follows: Capital stock, $15,000, surplus, $60,000, undivided profits, $342.25, making a total of $75,342.25; and deducting therefrom the assessed value of real and personal property, as follows: Office furniture, $3,000, Commercial National Bank stock, $8,700, Fidelity Bank stock, $1,000, making a total of $12,700—leaving a balance of $62,642.25, which, divided by 600, the number of shares of stock of said bank, ascertained the value of each share to be $104.40, subject to taxation. There was no allegation that there was any insolvent debts due this institution.

"This assessment is not satisfactory to John T. Pullen, who owns 14 shares of stock in this institution. He contends, and the report on which this assessment is based shows, that the bank has a surplus of $60,000, and has invested $55,000 of this surplus in North Carolina state bonds, issued under chapter 512, Laws 1909, and that this amount should also be deducted from the aggregate value of all the shares of stock. In other words, the contention is that, in addition to the assessed value of real and personal property on which the corporation pays taxes, $55,000 should be deducted, because this much of the surplus of the bank was invested in the above-named bonds. The Corporation Commission failed to see the force of this contention, as they were not assessing the capital stock, or surplus, or undivided profits of the bank, but a distinct species of property, to wit, the shares of stock of the bank in the hands of the shareholder. The bank is not required by law to list any of its property, whether capital stock, surplus, undivided profits, or other property, except so much of it as is invested in real estate inside of the state. And so this bank already had the full exemption from taxation of its North Carolina state bonds. The only property listed by the bank for taxation was office furniture, $3,000; Commercial National Bank stock, $8,700; and Fidelity Bank stock, $1,000—and these amounts were deducted.

"The General Assembly did not intend that the value of the property exempt from taxation which is owned by a corporation should be deducted from the aggregate value of all the shares of stock in said corporation in order to ascertain the value of such shares for taxation, as appears from the plain directions of the statute. 'The value of such shares of stock in the hands of shareholders shall be the market value. If they have no market value, the value shall be ascertained by adding together the capital, surplus, and undivided profits and deducting therefrom,' not such property as is exempt from taxation, but 'the amount of real and personal property owned by said institution on which it pays taxes.' See Machinery Act (Laws 1909, c. 440) § 33. There is no conflict between this statute and chapter 510 of the Laws of 1909.

"That the shares of stock in the hands of shareholders are a distinct species of property from that owned by the corporation, and that the General Assembly can require it to be taxed at its value, notwithstanding that a part or the whole of it is invested in property exempt from taxation, has been held in our courts in Belo v. Commissioners, 82 N. C. 415, 33 Am. Rep. 688, Commissioners v. Tobacco Co., 116 N. C. 441, 21 S. E. 423, and numerous other cases, and by the Supreme Court of the United States in case of Cleveland Trust Company v. Lander, 184 U. S. 111, 22 Sup. Ct. 394, 46 L. Ed. 456. Notwithstanding the number of words used to exempt the same, namely, 'The bonds and coupons shall be exempt from all state, county and municipal taxation or assessment, direct or indirect, general or special, whether imposed for general revenue or otherwise, and the interest paid thereon shall not be subject to taxation as income, nor shall state bonds or coupons be subject to taxation when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company or other corporation,' we are of the opinion that the same cannot be construed so as to authorize the deduction contended for by the plaintiff, in view of the authorities cited above.

"Franklin McNeill, Chairman."

The statute requires that taxation on the shares of bank stock in the hands of individual owners shall be laid upon the value of such stock, which valuation shall be reached: (1) Taking the market value of the stock; (2) deducting the value of the real and personal property of the bank, which has been already taxed; (3) by dividing the remainder thus left by the number of shares. By these processes the Corporation Commission found that the balance was $62,672, and that the shares of stock are worth $104.40. The plaintiffs are seeking, in this case, to deduct $55,000 (on which its owner, the bank, had already had exemption), leaving the taxation value of the total shares in this bank for taxation $7,642, being a little more than $12 a share.

It is a matter of universal knowledge that within the last three months a large part of this stock, in fact more than five-sixths thereof, has been purchased by another bank at $175 per share, or seven times its par value ($25). On the stock for which the purchasers paid $175, it is now asked that assessment for taxation shall be laid at a little more than $12 per share.

The statute law of the state (Laws 1909, p. 705, c. 440, § 33) provides: "The residents of this state who are shareholders in any bank, banking association or savings institution (whether state or national) shall list their respective shares in the county, city or town precincts or village where they reside, for the purpose of county, school or municipal taxation. * * * All shares, whether owned by residents, or nonresidents, shall be listed at the time for listing taxes. The county commissioners, list takers or other county municipal officers shall have the same power to enforce the listing of shares of stock in any such bank, banking association or savings institution, whether held by residents or nonresidents, as they have for enforcing the listing of their personal property. The taxation of shares of any such bank, banking association or corporation, or savings institution, shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon any other monied capital in the hands of individual citizens, whether such taxation is for state, county, school or municipal purposes." And the next section provides that in assessing the value of the shares of stock the highest price of sales of stock during the year and the average price of sales of stock during the year shall be taken into consideration. These provisions show that the lawmaking powers are at one with the decisions of the courts in considering that the shares of stock are entirely separate and distinct property from the property held by the bank itself.

The Constitution of the state (article 5, § 3) provides: "Taxation shall be by uniform rule ad valorem. Laws shall be passed taxing by uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in bonds and personal property according to its true value in money." And then follows section 5 of the same article, which authorizes the General Assembly to exempt cemeteries and property held by schools, churches, charities, and the like, and also personal property, not to exceed $300 to each taxpayer.

The statute law of the state (Laws 1909, p. 725, c. 440, § 63), in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, provides: "The following personal property and no other shall be exempt from taxation, state and local." Then follows the exemptions of property, school and charity property, and an exemption (page 726) "not exceeding $25" of wearing apparel, etc., to each taxpayer. And then, to prevent any possible misunderstanding, Laws 1909, c. 438, § 5, repeals all other exemptions of any other kind than that above enumerated which have heretofore been granted. This legislation shows conclusively that there was no intention on the part of the Legislature to extend an exemption to the shares of bank stock held by the plaintiffs. Such property is proverbially the best in the state, and the shareholders of a bank whose stock, by good management and exemption from taxation, has increased in value to "7 for 1," certainly do not own an interest in "an infant industry" requiring a subsidy from the state in the shape of exemption from taxation. Owing to increased demands for public purposes, the Legislature has not felt that the state was able to grant to less prosperous taxpayers the exemption of $300 per head, which it is authorized to do by the Constitution, but restricts the exemption to $25. It is not reasonable to assume that it intended to exempt many thousands of dollars from taxation in the shape of shares in the banks.

As the statute (Laws 1909, p. 696, c. 440, § 14½) defines the "market value" as the amount for which property is sold for cash in the ordinary course of dealing, it would seem that the error in the action of the Corporation Commission is in not assessing this property at $175 instead of $104.40, and the shareholders certainly cannot complain, as they have received an exemption of $70 per share from the "true value," or 40 per cent. exemption.

It was further argued by the plaintiff that, inasmuch as the statute provided that, in assessing the value of the shares in the hands of the shareholders, the Corporation Commission should deduct "the real and personal property on which the bank has paid taxes"; that, therefore, the Corporation Commission should also deduct the property on which the bank has not paid taxes. It is impossible to adopt this as logic. If the Legislature had meant to do so, it would certainly have said it, and in a simpler way, by saying that "all shares of bank stock shall be exempt from taxation," since that is what it would amount to.

But the Corporation Commission, in this case, have deducted the value of such real and personal property, to wit, $12,700, before arriving at the amount at which the plaintiffs' shares were assessed. Though the point is not presented, it is well to call attention here and now to the fact that, unless we deny, what all the courts have held, that the shares of stock in the hands of individuals are separate and distinct from the property of the corporation, the exemption in favor of the shareholders of the value of the property on which the bank has paid taxes is in violation of the provision of the Constitution which forbids exemption, and the state has lost many thousands of dollars in taxation annually by this point not having been considered. It is very clear that one man cannot have an exemption on his property because another man has paid taxes on his own property. It was contended in the argument, by the plaintiffs' counsel, that the effect of a decision by this court that the stock in the hands of shareholders would be exempted from taxation to the amount of the state bonds, owned by the bank, would be to create a demand which would take up possibly the whole of the issue of $4,000,000 of bonds.

It is no part of the province of a court of justice to render decisions because of the effect, one way or another, on the financial market in which bonds and stocks are traded for. The questions before us are only whether the Legislature attempted and had the power to exempt the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders when it provided that "the bonds and coupons shall be exempt from all state, county and municipal taxation or assessment, direct or indirect, general or special, whether imposed for general revenue or otherwise, and the interest paid thereon shall not be subject to taxation as for income, nor shall bonds and coupons be subject to taxation when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company or other corporation." These bonds have not been subject to any tax, direct or indirect, general or special, either as surplus or in any other way. The exemption is to the bonds, and is given to the owner, whether an individual or a bank, and when constituting a part of the surplus of the latter.

But it is contended that the word "indirect" should be construed to extend the exemption, not only to the bank which has already had the benefit of exemption, but further to the shareholders. There is no such intimation in the statute. The expression "indirect taxes" is well known, and in this connection it can only mean taxes "direct or indirect, general or special," on the bonds themselves in the hands of the owner, to wit, the bank. To give it the construction contended for would give the word "indirect" a construction which has never been placed upon it by any court. A tax on the shares in the hands of the owner cannot possibly be a tax on the property of the bank.

The owner of more than five-sixths of the shares of the Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company is another bank; and the only effect of the decision, if rendered in favor of the exemption, would be to increase vastly the value of the shares of stock in the Raleigh Savings Bank & Trust Company and also the value of the shares of stock in the bank which holds five-sixths of the capital stock of the former bank.

The complaint frankly avers the true object of this suit, which is to obtain a coveted and most valuable exemption from taxation of the shares in the hands of the shareholders. It does not aver that the plaintiffs are seeking to benefit the state by raising the value of the state bonds, nor that they are here to advance the interests of the state. They are seeking an exemption of their shares because of state bonds which the bank has already bought, and it is not reasonable to suppose that they should wish to advance the value of state bonds which either bank may hereafter desire to purchase. Counsel for the plaintiffs, however, have contended that such would be the effect. If it is proper for the court to consider such matter, it may be well to insert here, from the defendant's brief, the answer which they make to the suggestion: "The capital stock of the plaintiff's bank is $15,000. Its surplus is $60,000. It holds $55,000 of these nontaxable bonds as a part of its surplus. The life of these nontaxable bonds is 40 years. Let us see what would be the result to the state if the law requires the taxing power to deduct these $55,000 of bonds from the actual value of the capital stock of this bank in order finally to ascertain the value of the share of stock therein: The total tax rate in Raleigh is about $2.50. Two and one-half per cent. of $55,000 equals $1,375. Forty times $1,375—that is to say, the loss of taxes each year, multiplied by the number of years that the bonds run—equals $55,000. So the state in 40 years would lose the principal of the bonds, and for what—to gain one point by way of premium when first sold. Record, p. 2. A pretty costly whistle, to be sure! It will be noted that the 'controversy without action' states that, by exempting the shares of stock from taxation, the premium upon the bonds will be increased one point. Taking, therefore, these $55,000 of bonds as a basis, the state would receive by way of extra premium, if sold with the exemptions contended for, 1 per cent., or $550. But at the end of 40 years the state, etc., would lose, as above, $55,000, and under the contention of exemption, if allowed because the tax is not on the shares but on the corporation, all national banks would go scot free of all taxes. And yet we are authorized to state from the Corporation Commission that it is not the financial view of this matter which they would call to the attention of the court, by the legal phases of the same. We simply contend that a statute, which results in such disastrous consequences financially to the state should not be, by the court, interpreted as contended for by the appellant, unless the meaning of the statute is clear beyond doubt, without inference and without presumption. And we maintain that the plaintiffs have not shown, and cannot show, that the intention of the Legislature is clear beyond all doubt in respect to this matter."

In reply to that, the plaintiff's counsel subsequently contended that only a very small part of the bonds would be bought by the banks in this state. If so, such a very small demand could not materially affect the price of the bonds. Indeed, the only evidence adduced before the Corporation Commission that the exemption of the shares of stock would affect the price of these bonds is that of a witness who thought, perhaps, the price would be raised three-fourths of one per cent. That was only his opinion, and the contrary opinion, that the price of the bonds would not be affected at all, is probably entertained by the large majority of the bank officials of this state.

Exemptions of any property from its fair and just share of public burdens increases the taxation paid by all other property. Such exemption has, indeed, been expressly prohibited by the state Constitution. It may with truth be said that no legislation can be more unjust or more odious. For many years the state contended for the annulment of an exemption from taxation which had been granted to two great railroads in the state. Such grant had been made at a time when railroads were an "infant industry" and the state thought their construction should be encouraged by contribution from the other taxpayers by exempting those railroads from taxation. Besides, at that time there was no provision in the Constitution, as now, forbidding the exemption of any property. Yet the state strongly contended for years that the exemption was unjust and illegal, and finally the repealing act was held valid by this court in Railroad v. Alsbrook, 110 N. C. 137, 14 S. E. 652, which opinion was affirmed upon a writ of error by the United States Supreme Court. In that opinion by this court (110 N. C. 147, 14 S. E. 653), it was said, quoting from Chase, C. J., and Miller and Field, JJ., in Washington v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 441, 19 L. Ed. 498: "We do not believe that any legislative body, sitting under a state Constitution of the usual character, has a right to sell, to give, or to bargain away forever the taxing power of the state. * * * If the Legislature can exempt in perpetuity, one piece of land, it can exempt all land. It can as well exempt persons as corporations. They go on to say that rich men and rich corporations, with the appliances they are known to use, may obtain perpetual exemption 'from taxation and cast the burden of government and the payment of debts on those who are too poor or too honest to buy such immunity'; and they say further: 'With as full respect for the authority of former decisions as belongs, from teaching and habit, to judges trained in the common-law system of jurisprudence, we think that there may be questions touching the powers of legislative bodies, which can never be finally closed by the decisions of the courts, and the one we have here considered is of this character. We are strengthened in this view of the subject by the fact that a series of dissents from this doctrine by some of our predecessors shows that it has never received the full assent of this court, and, referring to those dissents for more elaborate defense of our views, we content ourselves with thus renewing the protest against a doctrine which we think must be finally abandoned.'"

In the above case, we were holding invalid an exemption from taxation granted under a Constitution which did not forbid such exemption, and purely on the ground that the Legislature could not grant an irrevocable exemption. In the present case, the exemption is not given by any words which refer to shares of stock or to shareholders and is a most far-fetched deduction from the use of the word "indirect," and, if it can be construed to convey the meaning the plaintiffs contend, then the exemption is in direct violation of the Constitution of the state.

It has been uniformly held by the United States Supreme Court, by courts of other states, and by this court, that in respect to corporations "the Legislature can levy any two or more of the following taxes, simultaneously: (1) On the franchise (including dividends); (2) on the capital stock; (3) on the tangible property of the corporation; and (4) on the shares in the hands of the shareholders. The tax on the two subjects last named is imperative." Commissioners v. Tobacco Co., 116 N. C. 441, 21 S. E. 423, and cases there cited. That action was brought by an eminent lawyer, now a member of this court, whose contentions to the above effect were sustained. Notwithstanding that it was there held that a corporation must pay tax on all its property, like every one else, the counsel for defendant says truly that "not a bank in North Carolina to-day pays one cent of tax to the state, county or town, for franchise tax, income tax, nor any tax whatever upon its capital stock (which taxes are optional with the Legislature), nor upon any of its property (which last tax is imperative by the Constitution), save the tax on its banking house and furniture and the like" (in this case $12,700), and even that tax is recouped by unconstitutionally deducting the amount of the property thus taxed from the assessment of the shares against the shareholders. This is in direct violation of the Constitution. If the farmers, and other citizens, and all other corporations, were treated to a like total exemption from all taxation, they, too, would show a great degree of prosperity.

To sum up: "Exemptions from taxation are regarded as in derogation of the sovereign and of the common right and, therefore, not to be extended beyond the exact and express requirements of the language used, construed strictissimi juris." Railroad v. Thomas, 132 U. S. 174, 10 Sup. Ct. 68, 33 L. Ed. 302. Here there are no words conferring an exemption upon stockholders in the banks, and it requires an ingenious and most unusual interpretation of the words "indirect tax" to confer an exemption upon the plaintiffs.

"Where a doubt arises as to the existence of the exemption, it is to be decided in favor of the state." Bank v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 495, 26 L. Ed. 810. Here it requires an ingenious construction, an unusual one, of a single word to raise a doubt in favor of the exemption.

"The exemption must be clearly stated and will not be inferred from facts which do not irresistibly point to the existence of a contract." Judson on Taxation, § 86. There can be no lawful contract of exemption made, even if the Legislature had so intended, because their action would be in violation of the Constitution.

"No claim of exemption from taxation can be sustained unless established beyond all doubt." Railroad v. Supervisors, 93 U. S. 595, 23 L. Ed. 814; Railroad v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 569, 7 Sup. Ct. 693, 30 L. Ed. 732. In this case, of the nine judicial officers to whom, under the laws of this state, this matter has been submitted, only three, a bare majority of this court, considered that such exemption has been granted. The three corporation commissioners, the judge of the superior court, and two judges of this court, have a contrary opinion. Surely the point is not "established beyond all doubt"—the test which the Supreme Court of the United States applies.

Such exemptions must be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms. Railroad v. Alsbrough, 110 N. C. 158, 14 S. E. 652. Can any one claim that such is the case here when neither "shares" nor "shareholders," nor exemption to them, are named in the statute, which only refers to exemption of the bonds when owned as the surplus of the bank.

The buyers of the bonds, if the court holds that the shareholders are exempt on their stock, will claim that the decision of this court is a contract, an exemption of bank shares annexed to the exemption of $4,000,000 of bonds, being a double exemption, for 40 years, and that such exemption is irrevocable, even though the Legislature should strike out the act, or the court should hereafter express a contrary opinion, either in another suit or by a rehearing in this case and change of opinion by one member of the court, as now constituted, or by a change in its personnel. This dissenting opinion will not be without its value if it puts the bond buyers upon notice that if the act, as thus construed, is unconstitutional, no valid contract of exemption of shares has been granted.

There is nothing in the judgment of the Corporation Commission of which the plaintiffs have a right to complain.

HOKE, J. (dissenting). I am constrained to differ from the court in its decision of this case, and, the question presented being a matter of importance both to the parties litigant and to the public, I deem it proper that I should state briefly the reason for my position.

It has been long an accepted principle that the shares of stock in a bank, when owned by individuals, are entirely separate and distinct from the corporate property and assets. This was held for law in Van Allen et al. v. Nolan et al., and several other cases of like import, sometimes called the bank tax cases, decided as far back as 1865, and reported in 70 U. S. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229. The question there chiefly determined was whether the bonds of the United States government should be first deducted in estimating the value of shares of stock in the hands of individual owners for the purpose of state taxation, permissible under the federal statute; and it was held that while the bonds of the federal government were exempt from any and all forms of taxation, direct or indirect, yet the shares of stock owned by individuals, being an entirely distinct and separate species of property, the government bonds, though held and owned by the bank, should not be deducted in determining the value of these shares.

In the case referred to, Associate Justice Nelson, delivering the opinion, thus states the principle and the reason for it as follows: "But in addition to this view, the tax on the shares is not a tax on the capital of the bank. The corporation is the legal owner of all the property of the bank, real and personal; and within the powers conferred upon it by the charter, and for the purposes for which it was created, can deal with the corporate property as absolutely as a private individual can deal with his own. This is familiar law, and will be found in every work that may be opened on the subject of corporations. * * * The interest of the shareholder entitles him to participate in the net profits earned by the bank in the employment of its capital, during the existence of its charter, in proportion to the number of his shares; and, upon its dissolution or termination, to his proportion of the property that may remain of the corporation after the payment of its debts. This is a distinct, independent interest or property, held by the shareholder like any other property that may belong to him." Van Allen

v. Nolan, 70 U. S. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229. While this principle was originally established by a divided court, it has been since repeatedly affirmed and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States, as in Bank v. Tenn., 161 U. S. 134, 16 Sup. Ct. 456, 40 L. Ed. 645, Bank v. Des Moines, 206 U. S. 518, 27 Sup. Ct. 571, 51 L. Ed. 901, and many other cases; and has been so long recognized and acted upon by courts and Legislatures that, in the impressive language of Associate Justice Moody, delivering the opinion in the case last cited, "It has come to be inextricably mingled with all taxing systems, and cannot be disregarded without bringing them into confusion that would be little short of chaos."

The decisions of our own state are equally pronounced in recognition of this principle. Commissioners v. Tobacco Co., 116 N. C. 441, 21 S. E. 423; Belo v. Commissioners, 82 N. C. 415, 33 Am. Rep. 688. In the last case, Chief Justice Smith, speaking to this question, said: "In an able opinion of the author of that valuable work on Railways, commenting on the law, he says: 'We here find the clear recognition of this kind of corporate property, taxable to the corporation, and the shares in the hands of the corporators, distinctly defined as a fourth species of corporate property, taxable only to the owners or holders: (1) The capital stock; (2) the corporate property; (3) the franchise of the corporation, all of which is taxable to the corporation; and the shares in the capital stock which are taxable only to the shareholders.' 1 Red. Am. Cases, 497. A tax on the shares of stockholders in a corporation is a different thing from a tax on the corporation itself, or its stock, and may be laid irrespective of any taxation of the corporation where no contract relations forbid it. Cooley, Const. Lim. 169; Field on Corp., 521. * * * In Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229, it is held that shares in a national bank may be taxed to the holder, although the whole capital is invested in securities of the national government, which an act of Congress declares to be exempt from taxation by state authority."

This being the doctrine as it now universally prevails, the revenue acts of the state establishing the method of taxation applicable to banks provide that the shares of stock of all banks of this state, both state and national, shall be taxed as the property of the individual owners, and for that purpose said shares shall be assessed at their market value, and, if they have no market value, then at their actual value; that this actual value, when there is no market value, shall be ascertained and determined by adding together the capital stock surplus and undivided profits and deducting therefrom the value of the real and personal property on which it pays tax under local assessment, and insolvent debts, if properly itemized and sworn to, may also be deducted. It will be noted here that the shares of stock are assessed and taxed, and the deductions are to be made only in determining the value of these shares as property of individual owners, and separate and distinct from the property and assets of the bank, and the only deductions allowed by the law are the real and personal property locally assessed and taxed and insolvent debts.

This, then, being the provision of the law under which the taxes are assessed, the Legislature of 1909 enacted chapter 510, Laws 1909, entitled "An act to issue bonds, etc., to care for the insane of the state," and, after providing for such issue to an amount of $500,000, the statute contains the following section: "Sec. 4. The said bonds and coupons shall be exempt from all state, county or municipal taxation or assessment, direct or indirect, general or special, whether imposed for purposes of general revenue or otherwise, and the interest paid thereon shall not be subject to taxation as for income, nor shall said bonds and coupons be subject to taxation when constituting a part of the surplus of any bank, trust company or other corporation." It is contended that, under and by virtue of this provision, the bonds to be issued under this act shall not be considered in determining the value of shares in the hands of individual owners for purposes of taxation under the revenue laws above referred to.

This being a claim for exemption from taxation, it can only be allowed in case the claim is clearly established. Railroad v. Alsbrook, 110 N. C. 137, 14 S. E. 652; Railroad v. Mo., 120 U. S. 569, 7 Sup. Ct. 693, 30 L. Ed. 732; Railroad v. Supervisors, 93 U. S. 595, 23 L. Ed. 814; Judson on Taxation, § 86. In Alsbrook's Case, supra, it was held: "(2) The grant of an exemption from taxation must be expressed by words too plain to be mistaken; if a doubt arise as to the intent of the Legislature, that doubt must be resolved in favor of the state." In Railroad v. Mo., supra, it was held: "Immunity from taxation will not be recognized unless granted in terms too plain to be mistaken." These decisions, while quoted as indicating the only condition under which an exemption from taxation should ever be allowed, can hardly be considered apposite to the question presented; for, bearing in mind the cardinal principle that shares of stock in the hands of individual owners are entirely distinct from property of the bank, the statute in question nowhere provides that the valuation of these shares, as the property of the individual holders, should be in any way diminished by reason of the ownership of the bonds in question on the part of the bank, nor in my opinion does it use words that justify or permit of any doubt on that question. The section quoted provides: (1) That the bonds shall be exempt from all taxation, direct or indirect, etc. (2) That the interest thereon shall not be subject to taxation as for income. (3) Nor shall they be taxed when constituting a part of the surplus of the bank. And in language both plain and explicit these are all the exemptions which the statute sanctions or allows. There is nothing obscure or ambiguous in them, and in such case the courts have no power to add what is, to my mind, an entirely distinct provision, to wit: "Nor shall said bonds be considered in determining the value of the shares when assessed and taxed as the property of the individual stockholders."

The first exemption specified in the law, "Shall not be subject to taxation direct or indirect," comes clearly under the decisions referred to, which hold that United States government bonds shall not be deducted in estimating the value of the shares in national banks for purposes of taxation. An exemption by statute cannot be expressed in terms more comprehensive and searching than that which arises from the principle that the bonds of our national government may not be taxed by the states. Such a power involves its very existence as an independent sovereignty, and, notwithstanding this, these bonds, when owned by a bank, are not deducted in determining the value of the shares, because, as stated, the shares are an entirely distinct and separate species of property.

The terms of the second exemption in the statute are not relevant to the discussion, and the third, "Nor shall the bonds be taxed when constituting part of the surplus of the bank," in clear and express terms applies to the bonds when constituting part of the corporate property, and in no way affects the valuation of the shares which are the property of the individual.

It is insisted, in support of the proposed change from the express terms of the law, that, unless it shall be interpreted as affecting the valuation of the shares, it would be meaningless; and it is further urged that the history of this legislation and the action of the executive departments of the state government should lend force to the position taken in the principal opinion; but these are considerations and rules of construction and interpretation permissible only when the language of a statute is of doubtful meaning, and have no place when its expressions are plain and do not permit of construction.

In Black on Interpretation of Laws, § 26, quoted with approval in Re Applicants for License, 143 N. C. 3, 55 S. E. 636, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238, it is said: "Sec. 26. The meaning of a statute must first be sought in the language of the statute itself. And further: 'If the language is plain and free from ambiguity and expressed a simple, definite, and sensible meaning, that meaning is conclusively presumed to be the meaning which the Legislature intended to convey.' And in Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) § 267, it is said: 'When the intention of the Legislature is so apparent from the face of the statute that there can be no question as to its meaning, there is no room for construction.'"

In McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 601, Allen, J., quotes with approval the rule as expressed by Johnson, J., in Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 9, as follows: "Whether we are considering an agreement between parties, a statute, or a Constitution, with a view to its interpretation, the thing we are to seek is the thought which it expresses. To ascertain this, the first resort, in all cases, is to the natural signification of the words employed, in the order and grammatical arrangement in which the framers of the instrument have placed them. If, thus regarded, the words embody a definite meaning, which involves no absurdity and no contradiction between different parts of the same writing, then that meaning apparent upon the face of the instrument is the one which alone we are at liberty to say was intended to be conveyed." And in the same opinion it is said further: "In the construction, both of statutes and contracts, the intent of the framers and parties is to be sought first of all in the words and language employed, and if the words are free from ambiguity or doubt, and express plainly, clearly, and distinctly the sense of the framers of the instrument, there is no occasion to resort to other means of interpretation. It is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation, or when the words have a definite and precise meaning, to go elsewhere in search of conjecture in order to restrict or extend the meaning. Statutes should be read and understood according to the natural and most obvious import of the language, without resorting to subtle and forced construction for the purpose of either limiting or extending their operation."

These views are quoted with approval both in the opinion and dissenting opinions in Nance v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 366, 63 S. E. 116, and express a well-recognized principle of law. As heretofore stated, there is nothing in the statute which in express terms, or by any permissible intendment, refers to the omission of these bonds in determining the value of shares when taxed as the property of individual holders, and the courts, in my opinion, are without power to add such a provision to the law.

Speaking generally to the question presented, Associate Justice Peckham, delivering the opinion of the court in Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 146, 147, 16 Sup. Ct. 460 (40 L. Ed. 645), says: "These cases show the principle upon which is founded the rule that a claim for exemption from taxation must be clearly made out. Taxes being the sole means by which sovereignties can maintain their existence, any claim on the part of any one to be exempt from the full payment of his share of taxes on any portion of his property must on that account be clearly defined and founded upon plain language. There must be no doubt or ambiguity in the language used upon which the claim to the exemption is founded. It has been said that a well-founded doubt is fatal to the claim; no application will be indulged in for the purpose of construing the language used as giving the claim for exemption, where such claim is not founded upon the plain and clearly expressed intention of the taxing power. The capital stock of a corporation and the shares into which such stock may be divided and held by individual shareholders are two distinct pieces of property. The capital stock and the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders may both be taxed, and it is not double taxation. Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 573 [18 L. Ed. 229]; People v. Commissioners, 4 Wall. 244 [18 L. Ed. 344] cited in Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 687 [24 L. Ed. 558]. This statement has been reiterated many times in various decisions by this court, and is not now disputed by any one. The surplus belonging to this bank is 'corporate property,' and is distinct from the capital stock in the hands of the corporation. The exemption, in terms, is upon the payment of an annual tax of one-half of one per cent. upon each share of the capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes. The exemption is not, in our judgment, greater in its scope than the subject of the tax. Recognizing, as we do, that there is a different property in that which is described as capital stock from that which is described as corporate property other than capital stock, and remembering the necessity there is for a clear expression of the intention to exempt before the exemption will be granted, we must hold that the surplus has not been granted exemption by the clause contained in the charter under discussion. The very name of 'surplus' implies a difference. There is capital stock, and there is a surplus over, above, and beyond the capital stock, which surplus is the property of the bank until it is divided among stockholders."

There is no one who is more jealous for the honor and reputation of this state and its government than the writer. I know full well that it is their desire and fixed purpose to meet every obligation and duty incumbent upon them as an enlightened, progressive, and Christian people, and where such purpose has been enacted into law their courts should at all times and under all circumstances be swift to enforce it; but this sentiment, deep as it is, does not permit, on the contrary it forbids, that in expounding their laws we should depart from fixed principles of interpretation, or read into their statutes an effect and meaning contrary to the clear import of their terms.

I am of opinion that the judgment below should be affirmed.

(153 N. C. 639.)

MILLER v. PITTS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 197*)—CONTRIBUTION—JUDGMENT AGAINST SURETY—EFFECT AS TO CO-SURETY.

A judgment, recovered by the United States against a surety on a distiller's bond, is at least prima facie evidence of the debt, in a subsequent action in a state court by him against the co-surety for contribution, provided payment by him of the amount recovered is shown or admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 632, 632½; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 187*)—REIMBURSEMENT—JUDGMENT AGAINST SURETY—EFFECT AS TO PRINCIPAL.

A judgment recovered by the United States against a surety on a distiller's bond is at least prima facie evidence of the debt in a subsequent action in a state court by him against his principal for reimbursement, provided payment by him of the amount so recovered is shown or admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 554-556; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Action by L. H. Miller against Abel Pitts and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Sinclair & Carlton, for appellant. W. T. Morgan and T. A. Morphew, for appellees.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff, as a surety on the distiller's bond of the defendant Abel Pitts to recover the amount which he was compelled to pay under a judgment recovered in the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina, against Pitts, as principal, and himself, as surety, for $500, the amount or penalty of said bond. The parties waived a trial by jury, and agreed that the judge might find the facts, and it appears from his findings that the bond was executed by Abel Pitts, as principal, and the defendants Lee Miller and Thomas Epley, as sureties. It further appears that an action was brought upon the said bond for a breach thereof by Pitts, which breach consists in his failing to pay the taxes due from him by law on 363 gallons of spirits, which he had removed from the premises where said distillery was operated without complying with the law by paying the taxes assessed against him. Issues were submitted to the jury at the trial of said case, which, with their answers, are as follows:

"(1) Did the defendants execute the bond sued on? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the defendants commit a breach of said bond? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What amount of damages, if any, has the plaintiff sustained on the bond sued on? Answer: $374.88, with 5 per cent. penalty and interest 12 per cent. from October 1, 1896; $53.68, with 5 per cent. penalty and interest 12 per cent. from March 1, 1896; $26.91, with 5 per cent. penalty and interest 12 per cent. from March 1, 1897."

The United States court rendered judgment upon the verdict for an amount in excess of the penalty of the said bond. Execution was issued upon the said judgment, and the amount of the bond and the costs were paid by the plaintiff, Miller. He brought this action to recover the said amount so paid by him, and offered in evidence a certified copy of the record in the District Court, showing the amount of the recovery there against him and the payment of the same. He contended in the court below, and also in this court, that this record which showed a verdict and judgment against him for the amount which he was compelled to pay, under the execution thereafter issued upon the judgment, was, at least, prima facie evidence that Pitts, as principal, owed the amount, and that he had been compelled to pay it by judicial proceedings in the United States court. There was no controversy as to the fact that the plaintiff had paid the amount of the bond and the costs, but this fact was admitted. The court below ruled that the record of the proceedings in the United States court was not prima facie evidence of the debt and the payment thereof by the plaintiff as a co-surety of the defendant Epley, and it was thereupon adjudged that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the defendant Epley recover his costs. The plaintiff excepted to this judgment and appealed to this court.

We think his honor erred in holding that the record of the United States District Court, which was duly and properly certified, was not prima facie evidence of the indebtedness of Pitts as principal, under the distiller's bond, to the government. The case in that court was tried upon issues submitted to the jury, who found the fact of indebtedness, and judgment was rendered thereon. The plaintiff was thereafter compelled, by the execution issued from that court, to pay the sum of $500, which was the penalty of the bond, and the costs of the suit. It is true that Epley, by his answer in this case, denies that there was any breach of the bond, but he offered no proof in the court below to that effect, and there is no suggestion by him or his counsel that there was any collusion between the government and the defendants in the prosecution of the action in the United States court upon the bond to recover the penalty thereof, or in obtaining the judgment. In 2 Brandt on Suretyship and Guaranty (3d Ed.) § 807, it is stated that: "In an action for contribution between co-sureties, the record of a judgment recovered by the creditor against the principal and one of the sureties, to which the other surety is not a party, is competent evidence to prove the rendition of such judgment by way of inducement to further evidence that the surety, against whom it was rendered, has paid it." See, also, section 805, where it is said that: "In an action of assumpsit by a surety against his principal, to recover indemnity for money paid for the latter by the former, the record of a judgment against the surety, although rendered without notice to the principal, is prima facie evidence of the sum due by the principal of the obligation of the surety to pay, and of the assent of the principal to the payment." Preslar v. Stallworth, 37 Ala. 402. This court, in Armistead v. Harramond, 11 N. C. 339, held that a judgment against an administrator is evidence against his surety of the existence of the debt upon which the judgment was recovered, though it was not at that time evidence against the surety that the administrator had sufficient assets with which to discharge the indebtedness. This case was cited with approval in Brown v. Pike, 74 N. C. 531. In consequence of prior decisions of this court, the act of 1844 (chapter 38) was passed, and in the construction given to that act in Brown v. Pike, supra, the judgment was made evidence against the surety, both as to the existence of the debt and of assets sufficient to pay it, but by the act of 1881, (chapter 8), the Legislature amended the act of 1844 so as to make such a judgment only presumptive evidence against the sureties, whether they were parties to the action in which the judgment was recovered against the principal or not. Revisal 1905, § 285. We think, therefore, it is settled as a general principle of the law that a judgment recovered against a surety is, at least, prima facie evidence, or presumptive evidence, of the debt in an action afterwards brought by him against his principal or co-surety to be indemnified, provided that the payment by him of the amount so recovered is either shown or admitted. Leak v. Covington, 99 N. C. 559, 6 S. E. 241. He recovers of the principal the entire debt which he has paid, and of the surety his ratable part. It was admitted in this case that the principal, Abel Pitts, is insolvent.

It is true the court ruled that the record of the United States District Court was not evidence against the defendant, but it is apparent from the pleadings and findings of fact that there is no real dispute between the parties as to the truth of the matters set out in the record, if it is evidence against the defendant. We, therefore, hold that there was error in the ruling of the court as to the effect of the record, and reverse the judgment. The case will be remanded, with directions to enter a judgment for the plaintiff.

Reversed.

MORSE et al. v. HEIDE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. PILOTS (§ 1*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—REGULATIONS.

The Legislature may authorize a local board to prescribe limits for pilot grounds and require pilots to cruise therein, as well as adopt regulations to promote the purpose of such service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pilots, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-3; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. PILOTS (§ 3*)—REGULATIONS—POWER OF BOARD.

Laws 1907, c. 625, § 2 (Pell's Revisal 1908, c. 104, § 4957b), requires the board of commissioners of navigation and pilotage, from time to time, to establish such regulations as to the arrangement and station of pilots, for the purpose of compelling them to be on duty at all times, as they shall deem advisable, and to impose reasonable fines and penalties to enforce such rules. The commissioners adopted rules prohibiting pilots from leaving their station to go to a neighboring port to pilot a vessel bound from such port for Cape Fear river, except under peculiar circumstances, at the discretion of the chairman of the board and provided that the cruising grounds of Cape Fear pilots should be restricted to a certain area, in which area only they should cruise and offer their services. Held, that the statute authorized the board to adopt such regulations, and the regulations adopted were a reasonable exercise of the authority conferred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pilots, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. PILOTS (§ 10*)—COMPENSATION—FEES FOR CRUISING OUTSIDE GROUNDS.

Acts 1907, c. 625, § 9 (Pell's Revisal 1908, § 4957j), authorizes the board of commissioners of navigation and pilotage to grant written permission to any pilot to run regularly as pilot on steamers between the port of Wilmington and other ports, and gives such pilot all the rights and emoluments of river and bar pilots. Held, that pilots at Cape Fear bar, on which Wilmington is, should be allowed to speak vessels only within the Cape Fear cruising grounds, as fixed by the commission, and they cannot recover fees for services rendered in cruising outside of such grounds.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; O. H. Allen, Judge

Action by T. M. Morse and others against A. S. Heide. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert McClammy, for appellant Rountree & Carr, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover pilotage fees alleged to be due him, and which were held by the defendant to abide the judgment of the court as to whether said Morse is entitled to recover the same. The suit was commenced in the court of a justice of the peace. The defendant filed an answer to which the plaintiff demurred. The justice gave a judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed to the superior court, where the case was heard upon the answer and demurrer. The facts disclosed by the record are that the plaintiff, who was a duly licensed pilot of the Cape Fear bar and river, sailed from Southport for Charleston, S. C., on the boat Herman Oelrichs, and that at or near Charleston, and far beyond the bounds or station established by the board of commissioners of navigation and pilotage for the Cape Fear bar and river, and pretending to be in the performance of his duty as a pilot, spoke the ship Soutra off the lightship near Charleston harbor, and the plaintiff was taken aboard said ship for the purpose of piloting her over the Cape Fear bar at the mouth of the river. When the said vessel had reached the cruising grounds established by the said board of commissioners for the Cape Fear river and bar, L. J. Pepper, who was also a licensed pilot of the said river and bar, spoke the vessel Soutra and demanded the right to pilot her in, which demand was refused on the ground that the Soutra already had a pilot on board; that is, the plaintiff, T. M. Morse. When the Soutra had passed over the bar, certain licensed pilots, including L. J. Pepper, filed a complaint against the plaintiff for violating the rules and regulations of the said board of commissioners with reference to the station or cruising grounds for pilots and their boats, and the matter was heard, and the commissioners decided that the plaintiff had violated said rules and regulations, and ordered that the plaintiff should not pilot the said vessel out to sea, and further decided that he was not entitled to the pilotage fees, either inward or outward, and adjudged that L. J. Pepper was entitled to pilot the vessel out to sea, which was done by him. By agreement, the amount of the fees was deposited with the defendant, who was the agent of the ship, to await the result of this action.

It is conceded that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover if the commissioners acted within the scope of their power in making the rules and regulations as to the station of pilots and their cruising grounds, because the plaintiff had transgressed these rules and regulations, which are as follows:

"(1) No pilot will be permitted to leave his station to go to a neighboring port for the purpose of piloting a vessel bound from that port for the Cape Fear river, unless under peculiar circumstances, at the discretion of the chairman of this board. And every licensed pilot is expected and required to provide the means of boarding and leaving vessels at sea by pilot boats or cutters. Arrangements with tug boats or fishing boats or any other means of approaching or leaving vessels at sea will not be permitted under penalty of the revocation of license at the discretion of the board.

"(2) The cruising grounds of the Cape Fear pilots shall in future (after April 24, 1908) be restricted to that area bounded on the south by Little river and an imaginary line drawn directly southeast from Little river, and bounded on the north by Bogue Inlet, and an imaginary line drawn directly southeast from Bogue Inlet, and in such area only shall Cape Fear pilots cruise and offer their services for pilotage."

The defendant contended that the Legislature had conferred authority upon the board of commissioners of navigation and pilotage, by Laws of 1907, c. 625, § 2 (Pell's Revisal 1908, c. 104, § 4957b), to adopt said rules and regulations. That section is as follows: "The commissioners shall from time to time make and establish such rules and regulations respecting the arrangement and station of pilots for the purpose of compelling them to be on duty at all times, as to them shall seem advisable, and shall impose reasonable fines, forfeitures and penalties for the purpose of enforcing the execution of such rules and regulations."

We have held, in the case of St. George v. Hardie, 147 N. C. 88, 60 S. E. 920, that the act of 1907 is constitutional and is a lawful exercise of the power vested in the Legislature. It is customary to confer upon such boards of navigation and pilotage the power to make reasonable and proper rules and regulations for the government of those who are licensed as pilots, and we can see no reason why this custom is not sanctioned by law, or why the board of commissioners of navigation and pilotage may not, in the exercise of the power thus vested in them, prescribe the limits of cruising grounds and the stations of pilots. 30 Cyc. p. 1611. Nor do we see how any person, who accepts a license which confers upon him the privilege of piloting ships on their inward or outward passage on the river and over the bar, can well complain of the conditions upon which such license is granted, provided they are reasonable, and it must necessarily be that the rules and regulations adopted by the board of navigation and pilotage for the Cape Fear river and bar, to which we have referred, were not only reasonable, but necessary, for the safety of vessels and the convenience of navigation. The plaintiff's counsel, in his brief, as we construe it, deems the general policy of the law to be that there should be an early tender of pilotage services, and that a pilot may, therefore, in the absence of statutory prohibition, cruise for incoming vessels beyond the pilot waters or pilotage grounds of his port. He argues that this prohibition must be by statute directly; but no reason appears to us why the Legislature, if it has the right to prescribe the limit of cruising or pilotage grounds, may not confer authority upon a local board, better acquainted than itself with the nature of the service to be rendered and the conditions and circumstances of the particular case, to carry out the legislative will by marking out the grounds and adopting such rules and regulations as in its judgment will best promote the object and purpose of providing for such a service. No authority was cited to us which sustains the contention of the plaintiff that the Legislature cannot confer such power upon a local board.

The only question, therefore, which is now presented for our consideration, is whether such authority was conferred by Acts 1907, c. 625, and of this we have no doubt. It is true that, as said in some of the decisions, the policy of the law is to induce pilots to cruise somewhat largely, for the purpose of speaking incoming vessels at an early period; but it is also true that it is more important they should not cruise so far afield as to be absent from their post of duty—that is, the proper cruising ground at the mouth of the Cape Fear river—so that there may not be a sufficient number always present to pilot vessels which require their services to cross the bar. If a pilot can go as far from Wilmington as the port of Charleston, how much farther south or north on the coast can he go in order to obtain an advantage over other pilots? If the law permitted such a course to be pursued, it would seriously interfere with the safe and prompt navigation of vessels plying between the different ports. It is much better and safer to hold that the Legislature can, either directly or indirectly, provide for the stations and cruising grounds for pilots somewhere near the port for which vessels are bound. So far as we can see from the facts of this case, the Legislature has made a wise provision in conferring authority upon the board of navigation and pilotage to fix the limits of cruising grounds and to establish pilotage stations, and there has been, in this case, no abuse of the authority thus conferred, but it seems to have been reasonably exercised. 30 Cyc. 1611, and notes.

The authority of the Legislature to act in such matters and to prescribe rules and regulations for the government of pilots seems to have been settled. The Whistler (D. C.) 13 Fed. 295; 30 Cyc. 1615. There is a provision in the statute that the commissioners shall have power to grant permission in writing to any pilot in good standing and authorized to pilot vessels, to run regularly as pilots on steamers between the port of Wilmington and other ports in the United States, and that he shall have all the rights and emoluments that belong to the river and bar pilots. Acts 1907, c. 625, § 9 (Pell's Revisal 1908, § 4957j). We think from the provision of this section, and the general scope of said act as gathered from the terms in which it is expressed so clearly, that it was the intention of the Legislature that pilots at the Cape Fear bar should be allowed to speak vessels only within the cruising grounds, and that their right to recover fees for their services, when tendered and refused, depends upon their compliance with the provisions of the act as thus construed.

Our conclusion is that T. M. Morse, and the other plaintiffs associated with him in the case, are not entitled to recover the fees which they now demand of the defendant, and, therefore, that the judgment of the court below was correct.

GRESHAM MFG. CO. et al. v. CARTHAGE BUGGY CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

SALES (§ 474*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—LIEN OF SELLER.

A manufacturing company sold goods on agreement that the title should remain in the seller until the price had been paid. The contract was signed on the part of the purchasing company by an officer of the company. Held that, if the officer did not have the power to execute the contract, no title to the goods passed to the purchaser, and consequently none would pass to its receiver in insolvency proceedings, but, if by receiving the goods the purchaser ratified the act of the officer in executing the contract, it was bound by its provisions, and therefore the seller had a lien upon the property prior to that of the other creditors of the purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; Lyon, Judge.

R. W. Pleasants and others brought an action against the Carthage Buggy Company, which they alleged to be insolvent, and a receiver was appointed, and the Gresham Manufacturing Company intervened. From a judgment in favor of the creditors as against the Gresham Manufacturing Company, the Manufacturing Company appealed. Judgment reversed and new trial ordered, unless the parties consent to a sale of property furnished the Carthage Buggy Company by the Gresham Manufacturing Company, and a distribution of the proceeds in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court.

Aycock & Winston and Cox & Cox, for appellant. H. F. Seawell and U. L. Spence, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by R. W. Pleasants and others, creditors of the Carthage Buggy Company, to recover judgment on their several claims against the buggy company, which they alleged to be insolvent, and to wind up and settle its affairs; the buggy company having been duly incorporated under the laws of this state. C. S. Brewer was appointed as receiver of the assets of the buggy company, and afterwards the Gresham Manufacturing Company intervened in the cause, and alleged that it had contracted to sell to the buggy company certain articles of personal property which are described in the pleadings, and that the buggy company was indebted to it at the time of the intervention in the sum of $1,725. It also alleged that at the time of the sale it had retained the title to the said goods so sold by it to the buggy company, the contract between the two companies having been reduced to writing and executed on behalf of the buggy company by its secretary and treasurer, and on behalf of the manufacturing company by E. W. Becky. Execution of the contract was proven before a justice of the peace as to the Carthage Buggy Company, by Charles A. Jones, its secretary and treasurer, and purported to have been executed by authority of the board of directors. The plaintiffs in the action claimed that the receiver acquired title to the property and held the same for the payment of the general debts of the corporation, and that the manufacturing company had no prior lien or right thereto by virtue of the contract of sale and the registration of the same. The issue submitted to the jury, with their answers thereto, were as follows: "(1) In what sum is the Carthage Buggy Company indebted to the Gresham Manufacturing Company? Answer: $1,496.86, with interest from the 8th of November, 1908.

"(2) Is the Gresham Manufacturing Company, at this time, entitled to a lien on the materials mentioned in the complaint in preference to all other creditors of the Carthage Buggy Company and the receiver of the Carthage Buggy Company? Answer: No.

"(3) Is the Gresham Manufacturing Company at this time entitled to a lien on the materials described in the complaint as against the Carthage Buggy Company? Answer: Yes."

There was evidence tending to support the contentions of the parties as above stated. The court charged the jury that, if they believed the evidence, they would find, in answer to the first issue, that the buggy company was indebted to the Gresham Manufacturing Company in the sum of $1,496.86, with interest from November 8, 1908. This issue was answered by consent of the parties. The court further charged the jury that, if they believed the evidence, they should answer the second issue, "No." To this instruction the Gresham Manufacturing Company excepted. As to the third issue, the court charged the jury that, if they believed the evidence, they would answer that issue, "Yes." The court refused to adjudge that the Gresham Manufacturing Company was entitled to a lien on the property which it had contracted to sell to the buggy company, but adjudged that the buggy company was indebted to the Gresham Manufacturing Company in the sum of $1,496.86, and that the latter was entitled to a lien on the property sold by it to the buggy company, as between it and the said buggy company, and further adjudged that the debt due by the buggy company to the manufacturing company should be paid by the receiver pro rata with the other debts due by the buggy company out of the proceeds of the sale of said property, upon which the manufacturing company claimed a lien. The court also directed the property to be sold and the proceeds of sale to be held by the receiver for the purpose of distribution under its order, and further adjudged that certain costs of the action should be paid by the Gresham Manufacturing Company to the other creditors, and that the manufacturing company should recover its costs against the buggy company, to be taxed by the clerk and to be paid by the receiver after all the debts of the buggy company shall be satisfied out of the proceeds of the sale of the property. The Gresham Manufacturing Company excepted to the said judgment, and appealed to this court.

We think the court erred in its charge to the jury upon the second issue. This case is governed by Mershon v. Morris, 148 N. C. 48, 61 S. E. 647. The paper writing upon which the Gresham Manufacturing Company relied as creating a lien upon the property was nothing more than an offer by the buggy company to buy the goods and an agreement by the manufacturing company to sell the same, upon condition that the title should remain in the seller until the purchase money had been paid. As said in that case by Justice Connor: "The contract was simply an order for a machine, with the terms or proposition to purchase set out, among others, that the title to the property was to remain in the vendor until paid for. It would be a singular result if the corporation or its receiver could retain the property thus coming into its possession without paying for it, and repudiate so much of the president's proposition as secured to the vendor payment of the purchase money because he did not put the corporate seal to the proposition to buy. If he had no authority to make the contract, or did not observe the form prescribed in doing so, no title passed to the corporation. By ratifying his act and taking the property, it waived any informality, if there was any, in the form of making the contract. It is immaterial whether the paper was recorded. The receiver takes whatever title the corporation had, and nothing more. In no point of view is there any error in his honor's judgment." The case of Duke v. Markham, 105

N. C. 131, 10 S. E. 1017, 18 Am. St. Rep. 889, which was cited by the plaintiffs, has no application to the facts of this case. There the officers of the company, without having had a sufficient corporate meeting for the purpose, and without having any authority so to do, executed a mortgage upon the company's property, while in our case, if the officer did not have the power to execute the instrument, no title passed to the buggy company, and consequently none to its receiver. If by receiving the goods the buggy company ratified the act of the officer in executing the contract, it was bound by its provisions in every respect, including the reservation of title to the Gresham Manufacturing Company until the purchase money had been paid.

The error committed by the court, as above indicated, entitles the Gresham Manufacturing Company to a new trial, but, if the parties see fit to do so, they can have a sale of the property by the order of the court, and a distribution of the proceeds, according to the principles declared in this opinion. The judgment as to the costs will also be modified in accordance with our view of the case.

STATE v. MOORE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§§ 63, 81*)—ILLEGAL SALE—INVALID LICENSE.

A license to sell intoxicating liquors, granted by a county court, upon a petition filed with its clerk less than 30 days before the day for hearing it, as required by Code 1906, c. 32, § 12, is granted without jurisdiction, is void, and may be collaterally attacked upon trial of an indictment for selling without license, and is no defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. §§ 63, 81.*]

Error from Circuit Court, Wetzel County.

U. S. Moore was convicted of selling liquor without a license, and brings error. Affirmed.

M. R. Morris, P. D. Morris, and Thos. P. Jacobs, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., and D. M. Matthews, for the State.

BRANNON, J. U. S. Moore was indicted in the circuit court of Wetzel county for selling liquor without a license, and was found guilty by a jury on facts agreed, and by the judgment of the court was sentenced to pay a fine of $25 and be imprisoned in jail two months. Moore presented as his defense a license for part of a year, and the case turns upon the validity of that license.

We have a statute in Code 1906, c. 32, § 12, which provides that an applicant for license to retail intoxicating liquors shall file a petition with the clerk of the county court "at least thirty days before the session of said court at which the same may be heard." Moore did file a petition on the 4th day of February, 1909, fixing the 2d day of March as the time for hearing such application by the county court, and the clerk published notice of such application as required by that section. On the 2d day of March Moore appeared to prosecute his petition, and 57 residents of the county also appeared and moved the county court to quash the notice, for the reason that said petition had not been filed with the clerk for at least 30 days before the 2d day of March, and the first day of the session of the county court at which the application could be heard, but that it had been filed only 26 days, and said persons then filed a written remonstrance against granting the license. The court adjourned until the 3d of March, and again adjourned until the 4th of March, when said motion to quash and remonstrance were overruled, and an order made granting Moore a retail license.

We have seen that said statute required an applicant for a license to file his petition at least 30 days before its hearing. Is the requirement to file for that length of time imperative and mandatory as to time, and therefore jurisdictional? That is, must that petition be filed for that time in order to enable the county court to grant its consent for license? This being a proceeding, not to cancel the license, but a prosecution under an indictment, the attack upon it is collateral. It is claimed for the defendant that when the court grants the license it is not void, but good until revoked, and that no collateral attack can be made upon it; and on the side of the state it is claimed that without compliance with the statute in the filing of the petition for the time fixed the county court has no jurisdiction or power to act, and that its action is void and affords no protection to the holder of the license. After mature consideration we have concluded that the latter proposition is sound. The county court order is not conclusive in such a matter as that of a court of general jurisdiction. I confess that I have the inclination, as Moore paid his money for the license, to hold otherwise; but an examination of the law and a consideration of the objects of the statute have led me to the conclusion stated. Now, what is the character of this statute provision? Very material. It is designed to give notice to the public that anybody may show cause against the license, because the statute expressly provides that residents of the county may file remonstrance and show cause therefor. The statute gives residents 30 days after the filing of the application. The public is interested in this provision. Certain residents did appear within the time; but may not others have appeared presenting other evidence, showing other cause, against the license, if the requisite time had been allowed? Consider the object of the regulations touching license. Consider the many provisions of chapter 32. They will tell us that that chapter is not only designed for revenue purposes, but that it regards the improper use of liquor as an evil, hurtful to society, and it hedges about a license when granted many provisions against its improper exercise, such as selling to minors, or to persons addicted to intemperance, or under the influence of drink, and on certain election days, and on Sunday, and makes the liquor dealer liable for injuries suffered by members of families of persons to whom liquor has been unlawfully sold, and many other provisions and guards against the improper exercise of the license when granted. Furthermore, the statute is very careful as to persons to whom a license shall be granted, providing that it shall be granted only to fit persons, persons fit to exercise the license. These and many other provisions that could be cited tell us plainly that the statute is designed to restrict and regulate the evil, and to grant license only to fit persons, and only after a prescribed notice, and after a hearing of all residents opposed to it, after they have had notice and opportunity to know of the application. In this important matter, the use of license to sell intoxicating liquors, we know from our statute that the Legislature has been very guardful by restrictions upon the business and made guards against evils resulting therefrom.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The Legislature has prescribed the limit of 30 days after the filing of the petition for a material purpose. It gives that period after the filing of the petition to enable remonstrants to know of the filing of the application. The Legislature has spoken in plain words in this important matter, and how can a court ignore its intent? How can a court enforce that intent if it shall say that a license granted, in willful departure from its requirements, is just as good as if the law had been fully complied with? Will it be said that only a few days ought not to make any difference? If you can dispense with 4 days, why not with 10 or 20? Very rarely should a court dispense with the plain letter of a statute, and surely it should not do so in such a matter as this. I believe this provision for petition and notice has only been incorporated into our liquor law for a few years. One time there was no notice to the public. Now there is. Shall we defeat this amendment of the liquor law by a liberalism which would emasculate it of its object in a vital particular? Let us see what the authorities say. I admit that there is some conflict, some cases holding that a license cannot be collaterally attacked; but I think I may say that the weight and logic of authorities sustain our position in this particular. In this country there is a vast conflict of authorities, and all a court can do is to choose that line which in its opinion is the sound one, and the better enforcing the law as applied to the subject in hand. "It is generally provided, by statute or ordinance, that notice shall be given, in such public manner, of all applications for liquor licenses, for a prescribed period of time, in order that persons interested in contesting particular applications may be fully informed when and where to take action. This is held to be a prerequisite to the jurisdiction of the licensing authorities to pass upon the application, and until the expiration of the time during which the notice must be given they have no power to take any action thereon." Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 158. "Compliance with such requirements is a jurisdictional requisite and essential to the validity of a license." 23 Cyc. 128, is there speaking of the notice. I find it laid down in 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 245, that: "The statutes usually require that petition shall be filed with a designated officer and remain on file for a designated period of time before it is acted upon. The statutes are not directory, but are mandatory, and no jurisdiction to grant a license can be acquired unless this requirement is strictly complied with." That page also says that notice is intended to give as wide publicity as possible, so that if any person knows of any violation of the license law by the applicant, or any valid reason why a license should not be granted to him, he may make objection. This notice is jurisdictional process, and essential to confer power upon the licensing board to act.

In 119 La. 410, 44 South, 156, 12 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 711, is the Louisiana case of State v. Laborde, holding that a license emanating from a body without authority to issue it is no protection against an indictment and its validity must come up on its trial. True there the body had no power to issue it; but that case asserts most definitely that where there is a want of authority to issue the license it can be attacked collaterally. In that case the cases on the subject have undergone review, and the copious note presents additional ones. That note says that the authorities on the question whether in a prosecution the validity of a license can be inquired into are not entirely harmonious, but that the weight of authority supports the rule that such a license is not conclusive upon the state and may be shown to be irregular and void. In Russell v. State, 77 Ala. 89, an affidavit was not such as the statute required and the license was granted upon it. The case was an indictment for selling without license. The court held that "a probate judge acts ministerially in granting a license and is bound to require substantial compliance with all precedent statutory conditions, and while the license itself is prima facie evidence of such compliance, the fact of non-compliance, when affirmatively shown, renders the license void, and its invalidity being thus shown, it affords no protection." Muncey v. Collins, 132 Iowa, 50, 106 N. W. 262, holds that the court has no jurisdiction to act unless statute requirements are complied with. State v. Selbert, 97 Mo. App. 212, 71 S. W. 95, says that "all jurisdictional facts to authorize the granting of dramshop license by the county court must affirmatively appear on the face of the proceedings." I remark just here that it appears in this proceeding that the petition had not been filed the requisite time. That petition is the basis of the proceeding for a license. Notice for the time is essential to jurisdiction. Pisar v. State, 56 Neb. 455, 76 N. W. 869. The statute requiring three weeks' notice is mandatory. Kelper's License, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 512. In State v. Moore, 48 N. C. 276, upon a trial of an indictment a license was offered in defense which had been issued without recommendation from the board of commissioners. The court held the license void, and said that when the record showed the defect the judgment was void. I will add that this court has held that a license granted without the town authority is void, thus enunciating the position that statute requirements must be complied with. Why prolong this opinion by citation of further authority? I will only add that this matter of granting license is one of statute regulation; there is no other chart or guide but the statute; and I enunciate the general proposition that in this important matter it must be complied with. This duty of filing his petition a certain time was one placed imperatively upon Moore and he failed therein. It was his own act. The public has a right to inspect that petition all through the period specified. Whilst there is some hardship in the case, he was bound to know the law, and his attention was specially called to it by those contestants in his presence in the county court, and he was told that his petition had not been filed the requisite time. The petition was his own act, not a public officer's act.

This case may be of little importance in and of itself; but it is of great public importance in view of the fact that our present liquor laws contain the new important feature of allowing residents to oppose a license, and make the application contestable, and subject the applicant to more rigorous scrutiny than by the law prior to that provision. It is important that the statute be sustained by giving it a construction carrying out its policy and purpose.

We must affirm the judgment.

CRAWFORD'S ADM'R v. TURNER'S ADM'R et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EQUITY (§§ 87, 219*)—LEGAL DEMAND—LIMITATIONS.

Whenever a mere legal demand is properly cognizable by suit in equity, the statute of limitations will be observed in relation to it by the equity court; and if the bill discloses the bar of the statute, a demurrer thereto will be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 242-244, 498; Dec. Dig. §§ 87, 219.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 82*)—CLAIMS TO DECEDENT'S ESTATE.

As to a demand which accrues to a decedent's estate after his death, the statutory period of limitation of suit is counted from the time his personal representative qualifies, if that is within five years after his death; but if there is no qualification of a personal representative within five years after his death, then the period is counted from the end of that five years.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County.

Bill by J. Garland Hurst, Sheriff, as administrator with the will annexed of David Crawford, deceased, against W. F. Turner's administrator and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Forrest W. Brown, for appellant. Joseph Trapnell and Benj. Trapnell, for appellees.

ROBINSON, P. This suit was once before in this court on appeal. The decision then announced is reported in 58 W. Va. 600, 52 S. E. 716, 112 Am. St. Rep. 1014. A reference to it suffices to disclose the original character of the suit. By that decision the bill was held to be bad, and the cause remanded with leave to amend. Then amendments of the bill were made in the court below. But the court sustained a demurrer to the bill as amended and dismissed it. From the decree in the premises, the plaintiff brings this appeal. Let us here observe that what we shall say must be read in the light of the former opinion. We shall not iterate what is already in the reports.

The bill as amended charges a personal liability against Ellen Beirne Saunders, one of the heirs of William F. Turner, deceased, and, through the attachment formerly issued in the suit, seeks to enforce the same against land purchased and owned by her in this state. It seeks to collect from her a debt originally due from the estate of the ancestor from whom she inherited other real estate. The liability is charged against her on the ground that she inherited real estate from that ancestor which she sold for a sum largely in excess of the debt demanded. The real estate inherited by her was situate in Illinois. Under the law of that state, she was personally liable to the creditors of the ancestor from whom she inherited the real estate, to the amount of the value thereof, provided the personal assets of the ancestor were insufficient to pay his debts.

As the case comes to us, our consideration is directed wholly to the sufficiency of the bill as amended. Many of the objections to this amended bill need not be noticed. They are precluded from discussion by a single point that is so decisive in showing insufficiency as alone to justify the decree sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill. We shall pass upon no other point in relation to the amended bill's sufficiency. Even if the allegations and proceedings are sufficient in other particulars to fix a liability on Ellen Beirne Saunders, and to call for enforcement of that liability against the land attached, the amended bill is fatally bad and unsustainable, because on its face it plainly discloses that the liability alleged against her was barred at the time the suit was instituted. This insufficiency did not appear on the former appeal. The bill then under consideration was uncertain in its allegations relative to the source from which it sought payment. That bill did not plainly aver from whom it was seeking to collect the debt, or upon what land it sought to charge the same. If the original bill related to land owned by Ellen Beirne Saunders which she had inherited from Turner subject to his debts, or related to a demand against Turner's administrator, the debt may not have been barred as against his estate for all that appeared from the original allegations. But now, with the amendment seeking clearly to make a case of personal liability against Ellen Beirne Saunders, the bar appears on the face of the bill as amended. No facts are set forth to take the case out of the statute—to excuse the plaintiff for delay beyond the legal period. The statute of limitations is applicable on demurrer to a bill in equity. 9 Enc. Dig. Va. & W. Va. Rep. 445.

The demand alleged in the amended bill is purely a pecuniary one. A personal debt is demanded from Ellen Beirne Saunders. Though the jurisdiction for this suit in equity on that alleged personal debt may be well founded, the claim is nevertheless of the character of those ordinarily cognizable at law. It is in fact a mere legal demand. Therefore, the legal statute of limitations is applicable. That statute will be followed by the equity court. Sibley v. Stacey, 53 W. Va. 292, 44 S. E. 420. It bars the claim in five years from the time it begins to run. And notwithstanding the liability arose in Illinois, yet in the enforcement of it our courts will apply our own law of limitation of suit, because that law really refers to the remedy for collection and not to the liability itself. The Illinois law ordaining the liability does not particularly apply time to it—does not by limitation affect it substantively. Minor on Conflict of Laws, § 210.

Now, what is the age of this debt which is presented as a personal liability against Ellen Beirne Saunders. The debt originally accrued to the estate of David Crawford in the year 1861. It accrued against Turner when he received from that estate slaves and money under the mistaken belief that he was entitled to them as an heir of Crawford. When Turner died and his daughter, Ellen Beirne Saunders, inherited the Illinois property, the liability for the debt, if it still existed, was thrust upon her. Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1908, c. 59, § 12. Turner died prior to October 27, 1876. His heir sold the Illinois property in 1879. So Ellen Beirne Saunders became liable, if at all, as early as 1876 to pay this debt to Crawford's estate. Then is it not barred by the long lapse of time? But it was not until 1881 that Crawford's will was produced and probated in Maryland, thereby disclosing that Turner had received slaves and money belonging to others. It was not until this time that the alleged liability of Ellen Beirne Saunders became known. Let us assume, but not decide, that the allegations of the bill are sufficient to excuse the delay in bringing to light the will and the liabilities thereby disclosed—that the bill shows fraud and concealment preventing the running of the statute until the discovery of the will. Even then the statute would begin to run from the date of the probate—August 16, 1881. Five years from that time would bar, if nothing further prevented the running of the statute. So the bar would set in on August 16, 1886.

It may be thought, however, that, as there was no personal representative in this jurisdiction to enforce the liability against property here subject by attachment to it, the statute did not run until the administrator was appointed. Formerly the statute did not run against a claim in favor of decedent's estate, if the claim accrued after the death of the party to whose estate it became due, unless there was a personal representative to assert it. 1 Robinson's Practice (new) 589. No personal representative for Crawford's estate qualified, within the jurisdiction where the liability against Ellen Beirne Saunders could be asserted as this bill undertakes to do, until October 20, 1886. On that date the plaintiff was appointed and qualified as administrator and at once began this suit. But, in determining whether or not the liability is barred, our law makes that appointment to relate back. Thus the delay of the old law has been by statute limited in time. Since the administrator was not appointed within five years after Crawford's death, the appointment is deemed by statute, to have been made on the last day of the five years after his death. Code 1906, c. 104, § 17; 1 Barton's Law Practice, 68; 1 Robinson's Practice (new) 590. Crawford died prior to April 6, 1861. The liability accrued long after his death. So the law deems this administrator to have been appointed prior to April 6, 1866, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned. Then in contemplation of law there was an administrator against whom the statute is deemed to have run long before the date of his actual appointment in 1886. In other words, as to a demand which accrues to a decedent's estate after his death, the statutory period of limitation of suit is counted from the time his personal representative qualifies, if that is within five years after his death; but if there is no qualification of a personal representative within five years after his death, then the period is counted from the end of that five years.

At the latest, even assuming that fraud and concealment taking the case for a time out of the statute of limitations are sufficiently alleged in the bill, time began to run in favor of Ellen Beirne Saunders when the will was produced and probated on August 16, 1881. In any event, the five years of the statutory limitation on the liability then set in. They were out on August 16, 1886—more than two months before the institution of this suit. They had run and barred the liability even before the administrator was appointed.

The bill disclosed plainly that the debt it sought to collect was barred. It set up a dead legal claim which equity will not enforce. The decree dismissing the bill is affirmed.

STATE v. YOE.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1088)—PRESENCE OF ACCUSED—EVIDENCE.

An order in a criminal case, reciting an appearance by the prisoner in discharge of his recognizance and an announcement of his readiness for trial, suffices to show his presence in court in his own proper person at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2766; Dec. Dig. § 1088.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 641, 965*)—TRIAL—ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL.

The clause of section 14 of article 3 of the Constitution (Code 1906, p. li) providing that, in the trial of criminal cases, the accused "shall have the assistance of counsel," is permissive and conditional upon the pleasure of the accused, in its application to the conduct of the trial; and, to make a conviction valid, the record need not affirmatively show the prisoner had the assistance of counsel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1496-1506, 2518-2543; Dec. Dig. §§ 641, 965.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—APPEAL—BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS—RECORD.

Though bills of exception be settled and signed in due time, they are not parts of the record, unless made so by a certificate, or an order, entered upon the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County. Annie Yoes was convicted of grand larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

Lawson Worrell, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., for the State.

POFFENBARGER, J. A writ of error was awarded Annie Yoes to a judgment on a verdict convicting her of grand larceny in the criminal court of McDowell county.

The first assignment of error is based upon the contention that the record fails to show the prisoner was in court in her own proper person during the trial. The order says: "The defendant appeared in discharge of her recognizance entered into herein and both parties announced themselves ready for trial." The issue had been made up at a former term. Her appearance in discharge of her recognizance was necessarily a personal appearance. The recognizance could not otherwise have been discharged. The order shows no appearance by attorney, and yet it says both parties announced themselves ready for trial. Hence it is clear, not only that she appeared in her own proper person, but also that she appeared for the purposes of the trial. This exception is not well taken.

The next assignment is based upon the failure of the record to show that the prisoner was assisted by counsel. The right to have counsel is a mere privilege guaranteed by the Constitution. The provision of the Constitution, relating to the right of a prisoner to have the assistance of counsel, was inserted for the purpose of abrogating the common-law practice under which prisoners, accused of felony, were denied such right, and to restrain the Legislature from denying it by statute. It differs in nature as well as form from the guaranty of trial by jury. The latter is prohibitory in form, while the other is permissive, and conditional upon the pleasure of the accused. Preferring the protection of the court, or choosing to rely upon his own skill and ability, he may not desire the assistance of counsel. No invasion of this guaranty is disclosed, therefore, unless a request for the assistance of counsel appears by the record to have been denied by the court. Barnes v. Commonwealth, 92 Va. 794, 23 S. E. 784; State v. Raney, 63 N. J. Law, 363, 43 Atl. 677; Sahlinger v. People, 102 Ill. 241; 12 Cyc. 533; Cooley Const. Lim. 474, 475.

The other assignments of error involve the consideration of the evidence and other matters not disclosed by the record, unless the bills of exception, found in the printed record, are legally parts of the record. As there is no order making them such, they cannot be so considered. Wells v. Smith, 49 W. Va. 78, 38 S. E. 547; Ketterman v. Railroad Co., 48 W. Va. 606, 37 S. E. 683; Craft v. Mann, 46 W. Va. 478, 33 S. E. 260.

For the reasons stated, the judgment will be affirmed.

CITY OF RICHMOND v. JONES et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1910. Rehearing Denied June 9, 1910.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 67*)—CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION OF PRIOR PATENTEE—OUTER.

There can be no ouster of the constructive possession of an older patentee except by actual adversary possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 384-386; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 85*)—WILD LANDS—ABSENCE OF IMPROVEMENT—EVIDENCE OF REASONS FOR.

Where the question is the adverse possession of a wild and uncultivated island, evidence that good reasons existed why there was not a fence placed around the island and that the land would not be good for cultivation, is inadmissible, since it has no bearing on the adversary character of the possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 501; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 518*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—CONSTRUCTION OF WRITINGS.

Where adverse possession of an island in the constructive possession of an older patentee is claimed, a witness who states that he has made a specialty of the examination of land titles and that he has examined all the land title records of islands and shoals in the river may not give his opinion that the island in question is not within the older patent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2326; Dec. Dig. § 518.*]

4. EJECTMENT (§ 9*)—TITLE TO MAINTAIN.

A plaintiff in ejectment must recover on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of the title of his adversary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

5. EJECTMENT (§ 86*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where, in ejectment to recover an island held by defendant by virtue of an older patent, where plaintiff claims by adverse possession, and in which the plea is not guilty, an instruction which places the burden on defendant to prove that the island is included in the patent under which it claims is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 238-245; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 37*)—EXCLUSIVE POSSESSION—EFFECT OF CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION OF FORMER OWNER.

Where one enters land claiming under a deed or paper title, his possession as against one claiming by adverse possession is extended beyond the portion actually occupied, so as to embrace the entire parcel or lot of land described in the deed or paper writing, and hence such claimed adverse possession is not exclusive of the former owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 144-146; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Error to Law and Equity Court of City of Richmond.

Ejectment by one Jones and another against the City of Richmond. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant brings error. Reversed.

H. R. Pollard and Geo. Wayne Anderson, for plaintiff in error. A. C. Goode and Hunsdon Cary, for defendants in error.

KEITH, P. Jones and another brought an action of ejectment in the law and equity court of the city of Richmond to recover from the city a parcel of land situated in James river. The case was tried before a jury upon the plea of not guilty, and a verdict and judgment rendered for the plaintiffs, which is before us for review upon a writ of error.

The first error assigned is to the admission of certain evidence.

Jones, one of the plaintiffs, was asked: "Would a fence around that island in any way add to the uses to which it can be put?" to which he replied as follows: "The only thing would be to put a fence on the Henrico shore in case of men running around the island and swimming. Of course, it would benefit in that way; but we always tried to plant trees and vines for that purpose to keep anybody from seeing us. Of course, in swimming, we would go into the water naked, and we didn't want anybody to see us."

It appears that the island or a large part thereof had never been inclosed or cultivated, and was still in a state of nature. The city of Richmond was in possession under a grant from the commonwealth, dated July 1, 1840, and there could be no ouster of the constructive possession of the older patentee except by actual adversary possession. Taylor v. Burnsidess, 1 Grat. 165. The object of the plaintiffs in asking the question was to show that the island, though uninclosed, was at the time of the alleged ouster in the actual occupancy of the plaintiffs, as far as it could be under the particular circumstances of the case.

We think that the admission of this question and answer, while not very material, was erroneous and misleading. To show that a fence or other improvement was not made upon the land, however sufficient the reason may have been, certainly did not tend to show occupancy or any element of adversary possession.

The witness was asked: "Is there a sufficiently large area on that island capable of being cultivated which would warrant any man in cultivating it, taking into consideration its distance from the mainland?" to which the witness gave the answer. "No." This is assigned as error, and the assignment must be sustained for the reason just given.

As was said in Taylor v. Burnsidess, supra: "Wild and uncultivated lands cannot be made the subject of adversary possession while they remain completely in a state of nature. A change in their condition to some extent is therefore essential; and the acts by which it is effected are often the strongest evidence of actual possession. Without such change, accomplished or in progress, there can be no residence, cultivation, or improvement; no occupation, use, or enjoyment. Evidence short of this may prove an adversary claim; but in the nature of things cannot establish an adversary possession."

In Harman v. Ratliff, 93 Va. 249, 24 S. E. 1023, it is said: "While lands remain uncultured, or in a state of nature, they are not susceptible of adverse possession against the older patentee, unless by acts of ownership effecting a change in their condition, and to constitute adverse possession there must be occupancy, cultivation, improvement, or other open, notorious, and habitual acts of ownership."

Surely the proof of absence of occupancy and improvement by fencing, cultivation, or otherwise, however good or sufficient the reason for not building, or not fencing, or not cleaning or performing any other act of ownership may be, cannot prove or tend to prove a claim by adversary possession. If it were otherwise, it is conceivable that lands remaining in a state of nature might be recovered by adversary possession, or the possession might be retained against the older patentee by proving, item by item, and circumstance by circumstance, a plausible excuse to the jury for the failure to do or perform this or that act essential to adversary possession.

A witness was introduced in rebuttal on behalf of plaintiffs, who testified that he had made a specialty of the examination of land titles, and that he had attempted to identify all islands in James river from the old pump-house up to the Belt Line bridge, and in doing so he had examined every land grant of islands and shoals in James river in the register of land office, and had also examined the records in the circuit court of Henrico, and that as a result of that investigation he was unable positively to identify that island as the island deeded to the city of Richmond. This evidence was excepted to, and the ruling of the court in admitting it is assigned as error.

In Holleran v. Meisel, 91 Va. 143, 21 S. E. 658, witnesses were introduced to prove that an alleged patent embraced the lands there in controversy, and, while admitting that they could not identify it from the entries or memoranda in the books of patents, deeds, and other documentary evidence, they gave it as their opinion that it included the land in controversy. The court said: "This was not knowledge. It was not the statement of a fact, but merely an opinion. Even if Carrington, who was an examiner of titles, and Redd, who was county surveyor of Henrico county, were experts, this was not a case in which expert testimony was admissible. It was perfectly proper for them, or either of them, to examine the deeds and other documentary evidence given in before the jury, and to state from their knowledge whether the land in controversy was within the boundaries of the entry purporting to be a memorandum of the issue of a patent to Joshua R. Stappa, but not to give merely their opinions upon the subject. Such mode of identification was inadmissible under the law, and the instruction to the jury that they might regard such opinions as proper evidence to that end, if they believed them to be correct inferences from the evidence in the case, was erroneous."

The case before us is even stronger than that cited, for here the witness was allowed to give his opinion, not only upon records and papers which had been introduced in evidence, but upon those which he had examined elsewhere and which had not been introduced before the jury. In the case cited the witness was of opinion that the land in controversy was embraced within the deeds and patents which he had examined, while in this case the witness was of opinion that the land in controversy was not embraced in those deeds and patents. In both cases it is the mere opinion of the witness upon a question which is not the subject of expert or opinion evidence.

The fourth assignment of error, as to the admission of evidence of T. Crawford Redd, is governed by the same principle.

It is assigned as error that the court gave the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs and those under whom they claim title obtained a grant from the commonwealth of Virginia for the island in question in the year 1900, it is necessary, to enable the defendant to recover, if she claims title under a grant in the year 1840, that she should identify the island as the one conveyed to her by said grant by a preponderance of evidence, and, unless the defendant does identify said island by a preponderance of evidence as the one granted to her by the commonwealth of Virginia in the year 1840, they must find for the plaintiffs."

The city of Richmond was the defendant, and not the plaintiffs, in this action. A plaintiff in ejectment must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of the title of his adversary. This proposition is elementary, and needs no authority for its support. When to the plaintiffs' demand the defendant pleaded not guilty, it put in issue the plaintiffs' entire case. The burden of proof was never shifted.

Speaking of the burden of proof in Wallen v. Wallen, 107 Va. 181, 57 S. E. 596, the court said: "Fraud is never presumed, but must always be proved by the party alleging it. This burden never shifts; and while it is necessary for the propounder of a will; the probate of which is resisted on the ground of undue influence, to bring forward evidence to repel evidence of undue influence which has been offered by the other side, the real burden of proof upon the issue of undue influence has not changed, and it is misleading and erroneous, after having instructed the jury correctly on the subject, to further instruct them that the burden of proof in this case lies upon said propounder to satisfy the jury by evidence that the paper writing propounded is the last will and testament of a free and capable testator."

In other words, the burden of proof, where the issue is fraud, is always upon the party alleging the fraud, and never shifts, though in the changing aspects of a case the one party or the other may find it necessary to bring forward evidence to repel that of his opponent; and so with the plea of not guilty in an action of ejectment. The burden of proof rests from the beginning to the end upon the plaintiff to maintain his action. Wigmore, c. 86, and especially section 2489.

Now, in this case, the court tells the jury that if they believe that the plaintiffs claim title under a grant from the commonwealth in the year 1900 to enable the defendant to recover, if it claims title under a grant in 1840, it is necessary that it should identify the island as the one conveyed to it by a preponderance of the proof, placing the defendant, who has to recover nothing but rests secure in its possession until the plaintiffs have established their case, in the attitude of a plaintiff, who can only recover by adducing in support of his contention a preponderance of proof upon the issue joined.

The sixth instruction was as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, even if they believe the island in question is the one which was granted to the city of Richmond under the grant of 1840, yet if the only act of ownership exercised over the island by the city from 1840 to June 1, 1908, was the erection of a dam which did not encroach upon the island or come within 100 feet of it, such act of ownership by the city was not such a possession of the island as will repel the title of the plaintiffs by adverse possession, if such title has been perfected, and has been proven to the satisfaction of the jury by the preponderance of the evidence."

The city of Richmond claims under a grant from the commonwealth given to it in 1840.

In Howdashed v. Krenning, 103 Va. 30, 48 S. E. 491, it is said that: "A grant from the commonwealth confers constructive seisin sufficient to enable the patentee or those claiming under him to recover in an action of ejectment. Actual seisin is not necessary."

So that by this patent the city of Richmond acquired the title, and under it constructive seisin or possession. The plaintiffs had no color of title down to the year 1900, when they also procured a patent from the state. The adverse possession of the plaintiffs, then (assuming for the present that such adverse possession existed), was confined to the land within their actual occupancy.

Where one enters claiming under a deed or paper title, their possession is extended beyond the portion actually occupied so as to embrace the entire parcel or lot of land described in the deed or paper writing. Sharp v. Shenandoah Furnace Co., 100 Va. 27, 40 S. E. 103.

In Green v. Pennington, 105 Va. 801, 54 S. E. 877, it is said that: "Actual possession of a part of a tract of land, under color and claim of title to the whole, is possession of the whole, and this principle applies to the lands of the commonwealth, as against persons not lawfully claiming under her."

But there is no evidence of claim or color of title down to the year 1900. The adversary possession, therefore, of the plaintiffs, conceding it to have existed at any time, had not ripened into a title, except as to such part of the island as was in the actual occupancy and possession of the plaintiffs.

As was said by Judge Buchanan in the case just cited: "The grant put the first patentee of the land constructively into possession, * * * and, being in the constructive possession of the premises, he cannot be disseised or ousted except by an actual invasion of his boundary by some act or acts palpable to the senses, and which will serve to admonish him that his seisin is molested; otherwise, as was said by Judge Baldwin, he might be disseised of his freehold not only without his knowledge, but without the possibility of his knowing it."

From what has been said it follows that the court should have given instruction No. 2, asked for by the defendant, the effect of which would have been to limit the recovery of the plaintiffs by force of adversary possession to that part of the land in controversy so adversely held.

What we have said will be sufficient to settle the law of the case upon a future trial, and for that reason, without passing specifically upon other questions of law presented, or upon the motion to set aside the verdict as contrary to the evidence, we are of opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Reversed.

BROWN v. AUSTIN WESTERN CO., Limited.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1910. Rehearing Denied June 9, 1910.)

1. SALES (§ 168½*)—SALE ON APPROVAL.

Where there is a sale on trial, it is not complete until the approval, and the failure to return the property within the time specified for trial, or within a reasonable time, renders the sale complete.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 409-421; Dec. Dig. § 168½.*]

2. SALES (§ 168½*)—SALE ON APPROVAL—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER.

An order for stone crushers of a specified capacity provided that, on their arrival, defendant would furnish power, cartage, and assistance to give them a fair trial, that, if they equaled the stipulated capacity, defendant would pay the price, if not he would notify plaintiff, and, if plaintiff failed to make the crushers do the prescribed work within 30 days, plaintiff would receive them back. Held that, on plaintiff's failure to make the crushers do the amount of work contracted for, defendant could not demand payment for the expense of the permanent foundations constructed by him for the crushers as a condition precedent to his returning them.

Error to Law and Equity Court of City of Richmond.

Action by the Austin Western Company, Limited, against J. Henry Brown. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Ro. H. Talley, for plaintiff in error. H. St. John Coalter, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This action of assumpsit was brought by the Austin Western Company, Limited, to recover of J. Henry Brown $2,249, the purchase price of two rock crushers. The defendant filed a plea of nonassumpsit, and a special plea of set-offs, amounting to $5,121.60. There was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $2,249 and costs, subject to a credit of $221.60, which we are asked to review and reverse.

It appears that the defendant, J. Henry Brown, owned and operated certain granite quarries in Henrico county, and that the plaintiff manufactured machinery in Chicago. On the 6th day of July, 1906, the defendant placed in the hands of the plaintiff an order for two stone crushers and all necessary driving connections, to be shipped to Richmond, Va. This order was in form a written contract signed by the defendant, which set forth in detail the terms of purchase agreed upon between the parties. It provided that crusher No. 2 should have the capacity of turning out from 18 to 30 tons per hour, and that No. 3 should turn out from 30 to 40 tons per hour; that, upon the arrival of the crushers, the defendant would pay the freight charges, and at his own expense furnish power, cartage, assistance, etc., to give the crushers a fair and thorough trial. It provided further, that, if the crushers should equal the stipulated capacity, the defendant would pay for them according to the terms of the contract, but that, if they did not, he would notify the plaintiff in writing at Chicago of such failure, and that, if within 30 days from the receipt of such notice the plaintiff failed to make the crushers do the prescribed work, then the plaintiff would refund the freight charges and receive back the crushers at the Richmond railroad station from which they had been taken, and would cancel the contract. The crushers are warranted to be thoroughly made of good material and workmanship, capable of doing the work for which they were intended, without breakage, the plaintiff agreeing to replace, free of charge, any parts which may break within 12 months from the date of the contract through fault of material or construction. Finally, it is agreed that the contract embodies the entire understanding, that it is not subject to countermand, and is not to be affected by any verbal agreements.

In pursuance of this contract, the plaintiff delivered at the Richmond railroad station two stone crushers Nos. 2 and 3, which were received by the defendant and removed by him to his granite quarries, having first paid the freight charges as stipulated. The contract provided that the defendant should, at his own expense, furnish the power, cartage, assistance, etc., necessary to give the crushers a fair and thorough trial, and the evidence abundantly shows that the contemplated test could have been made at a cost of from $25 to $35. The defendant, however, before making any test, proceeded to build heavy concrete foundations and other equipment for a permanent plant at a total cost, as alleged, of $2,121.60. After this expensive plant was completed, the defendant placed the crushers in position for permanent use, and then, for the first time, subjected them to any test. The only reason given by him for pursuing this course was that the agent from whom he bought was a friend of his, in whom he had great confidence, and that he did not doubt that his representations with respect to the capacity of the machines was true. When the crushers were finally subjected to trial, the defendant found that they fell very far short of the capacity called for by the contract, and he notified the plaintiff of that fact. There was considerable delay and correspondence about the matter; it being suggested by the plaintiff that the diminished capacity was the result of lack of power in operating the machines. Finally, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant, calling his attention to the clause in the contract giving him the right to return the machines to the Richmond railroad station and to be reimbursed the freight charges paid by him, and insisting that he should, without further delay, decide whether he would keep the machines or return them, and be reimbursed the freight charges which were tendered. The defendant refused to return the crushers, which he had been in the meantime using, unless the plaintiff would agree to pay him the damages he claimed to have suffered as a result of the transaction. These are stated in the special plea of set-offs to be $2,121.60, the cost of the permanent structure and its equipment, and $3,000 cost of removing and storing waste stone from the quarry after he was ordered to stop using the crushers.

Throughout this case the contention on behalf of the defendant has assumed that the contract under consideration evidenced an absolute sale; that the title passed at once upon the delivery of the crushers, with a warranty that they would do a certain amount of work. This position is not tenable. The contract evidences what is termed a "sale on trial." Where there is a sale on trial, there is no sale until the approval is given, either expressly or by implication, resulting from keeping the goods beyond the time allowed for trial, which is a reasonable time if not expressly fixed; and the failure to return the goods within the time specified for trial or within a reasonable time makes the sale absolute. Benjamin on Sales (2d Am. Ed.) § 595; 2 Schouler's Personal Property, pp. 309, 310; Machine Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 585, 15 N. W. 906, 45 Am. Rep. 57.

In the case at bar, the contract, which was filled up in large part by the defendant, furnishes no warrant for the position taken that he could demand payment of the damages claimed in his plea of set-offs as a condition precedent to his returning the machines. The extent of the defendant's right under his contract was to subject the machines to trial at his own cost, and, if they did not equal a certain capacity, to return them to the railroad station at Richmond, and have the freight charges paid by him refunded. This the defendant refused to do, and therefore the sale became absolute, and he became liable to pay the plaintiff the purchase price.

It is by no means clear that the warranty clause in the contract was intended to cover the capacity of the crushers, but, if it was so intended, the title would have to pass before such a warranty could become effective. Bunday v. Machine Company, 148 Mich. 10, 106 N. W. 397, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475. Under the contract before us, the title to the stone crushers never passed until the defendant had tried them and refused to return them. If he kept them after trying them, he thereby waived any warranty express or implied.

The instructions given by the court were in conformity with the view herein taken of the contract, and properly submitted the case to the jury. The instructions asked for by the defendant were wholly in conflict with the principles herein announced, and were properly refused.

There is no error in the judgment complained of, and it is affirmed.

Affirmed.

GRAHAM v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 955*)—NEW TRIAL—DIRECTING RECITALS IN MOTION.

Although the presiding judge had approved the brief of evidence filed with a motion for a new trial, yet where, on the hearing of the motion, counsel for the movant presented an amendment thereto, complaining of the admission of certain evidence, and the adverse counsel objected to the approval of such recitals, and although counsel for the movant stated that his recollection was clear on the subject, while neither counsel for the respondent nor the judge was clear in his recollection, a reversal is not required because the judge sent for the official stenographer, had him examine his notes, and corrected the recitals of the ground of the motion and the brief of evidence, as to the evidence in question, in accordance with the stenographic report as to the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 955.*]

2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

Under the recitals of the ground for new trial set forth in such amendment and the note of the judge appended thereto, it cannot be held that a reversal is necessary.

3. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The evidence amply supported the verdict, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Early County; W. C. Worrell, Judge.

GILLILAND v. CHARLESTON & W. C. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. May 11, 1910. On Rehearing, June 1, 1910.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 278*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a brakeman while attempting to couple an engine to a car, evidence held to justify a finding of a negligent failure of the railroad to maintain the coupling device in proper repair.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

A brakeman of about a week's experience, who in coupling cars containing defective coupling appliances observed a custom in vogue and was injured while at work, and who had previously pursued such method in the presence of the conductor, and who had seen the conductor use such method, and who had not been warned as to the custom being dangerous, and who without any objection from the conductor pursued the method at the time of the accident, was not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089-1132; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 173*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN TRIAL COURT.

Assumption of risk not interposed by a master sued by a servant for a personal injury either as a ground of nonsuit or new trial will not be considered on appeal.

On Rehearing.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 204*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—STATUTES.

Under Const. art. 9, § 15, providing that knowledge by a railroad employe of the defective condition of any machinery shall be no defense to an action for injury caused thereby, except as to conductors and engineers in charge of unsafe cars or engines, a brakeman injured while attempting to couple cars containing defective coupling devices did not assume the risk because he had knowledge of the defect.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; C. C. Featherstone, Special Judge.

Action by Samuel Gilliland against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cothran, Dean & Cothran, for appellant.
Jos. A. McCullough and Geo. M. Pritchard, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action for damages, alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, through the negligence of the defendant. The acts of negligence on the part of the defendant, and the detailed manner in which the plaintiff was injured, are thus alleged in the complaint:

"Plaintiff was ordered by the conductor to couple the engine to the box car next to it upon the side track, which was engaged in the handling of interstate traffic, and signaled the engineer back for the purpose of making such coupling; that the said box car was provided with an automatic coupler, which was manipulated by means of a crank, projecting upon the side of the car, and by means of which the car could be coupled or uncoupled without necessitating one's going between said cars for such purpose, and if the said coupler had been, on this occasion, in proper condition, the said coupling would have been effected without necessitating plaintiff's using his hands or feet for the purpose of effecting the said coupling, and the injury which plaintiff sustained, as hereinafter complained of, would have been avoided; but the defendant carelessly and negligently permitted the said coupler to become defective and out of ordinary repair, so that, when plaintiff attempted to adjust the lips by manipulating the crank, one of the lips of the coupler would not open, as it would have done had the coupler been in ordinary repair, and the said coupling was not made when the engine backed, thereupon the plaintiff signed the engineer forward, for the purpose of adjusting the said coupler with his hand, which he did, and, taking his position on the side of the car, he signed the engine back. When plaintiff signed the engine back for the second time, for the purpose of making the said coupling, when the said engine was within what appeared to the plaintiff to be a safe distance from the coupler plaintiff first observed that the bumpers on the said box car and the engine were out of adjustment and would not match, and in order for the coupling to be effected force would have to be applied to the bumpers for the purpose of putting them in position where they would match and come together so as to couple by impact. It appears to the plaintiff, and, upon information and belief, plaintiff alleges, that it would so appear to any man of ordinary prudence and foresight that by pushing with his hand or kicking with his foot the bumper attached to the engine the said coupling could be effected, and while the engine was backing, as plaintiff then believed, at a slow rate of speed, and it appearing perfectly safe so to do, and it being rendered necessary by reason of the worn and defective condition of the bumpers, which were out of repair, due to the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, plaintiff did kick the said bumper, as it approached the box car, using all due care, when suddenly and unexpectedly the said engine backed at a greater rate of speed than plaintiff was accustomed, or had a right to expect, and his left foot was caught between the said bumpers and horribly mangled to such an extent as to necessitate amputation. The plaintiff alleges that in applying his foot to the said bumper he observed a custom which had been in vogue upon the defendant's road, with its knowledge and consent since his employ and for several years; that he had never been warned of the danger incident thereto; that he had frequently pursued this method when necessary, in the presence of the conductor and other employees of the said road; that he has often seen the conductor himself pursue the same method; that in his effort to effect the coupling in this manner, in the presence of the conductor of the defendant railway, and under his immediate supervision, he adopted what appeared to him to be the safest method, and one with no risk attached, and the plaintiff exercised due care and caution, and in doing the said work acted as a man of ordinary firmness and prudence would have acted, as he is informed and believes under the circumstances."

The defendant denied the allegations of negligence, and set up the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant's attorneys made a motion for a nonsuit, on the grounds that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the testimony showed that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The motion was refused. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000. Thereafter, the defendant made a motion for a new trial, and for an order revoking the order refusing the nonsuit, on the same grounds as those urged upon the motion for nonsuit. This motion was also refused, and the defendant appealed, upon exceptions which present, practically, but two questions: (1) Whether there was any testimony tending to sustain the allegations of the complaint as to negligence; and (2) whether the testimony showed that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

We will consider, first, whether there was any testimony tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant. The plaintiff testified as follows: "Q. What were you required to do? A. To couple up the cars on the side track. Q. Who ordered you to do that? A. The conductor. Q. State whether or not he was there present superintending and supervising your work. A. Yes, sir; he was there. Q. What did you do when the engine came back on the side track? A. It came back and hit the first time and the coupling wouldn't make. Q. Why wouldn't it make? A. Because it wouldn't match. Q. What do you mean by that? A. It didn't hit right. They have got to hit right before they will go together and the pin will fasten. It has one way to fail. It was too far to one side. They have a play backwards and forth, and it was pushed a little too far one way. Q. If the coupler had been in ordinary condition and worked as it was intended to work, what would have been their position? A. They would match. Q. Why wouldn't this coupling match? A. Because one was pushed too far to one side. Q. Was that the way it was intended to work? A. No, sir. Q. How was it intended to work? A. It ought to work in the center. They have a play, and they go backwards and forwards. I don't know how far. That one was not fixed right, and it needed adjustment. Q. Did it couple when the engine came back? A. No, sir. Q. State whether or not if it had been in proper condition it would have coupled when it was back. (Objected to by Mr. Cothran: The witness has not said it was out of order, or that there was a defect in it.) Q. Was there a defect in that coupling? A. Yes, sir; there was a lip on the car, and it wouldn't open. Q. I believe you stated awhile ago, when they were working right, when they come together, they ought to couple. A. Yes, sir."

John Huntsinger, a witness for the plaintiff, thus testified: "Q. Are you familiar with the automatic coupler, the coupling we have been talking about, coupled by the manipulation of a crank on the side of the cars? A. Yes, sir. Q. I wish you would tell the jury, whether or not, where the bumpers and the coupling are in ordinary repair an engine and a box car, notwithstanding the play which the bumpers necessarily have, whether if they are in ordinary repair, when they come together, will they couple or not? A. Yes, sir; they will couple. In some cases on a sharp curve you have to open both nipples, we call them, on the end of the drawhead; the drawhead extends through the cars, and when they come together if the curve is very sharp, and they are worn the least bit they won't couple, and we then open both nipples. Q. Suppose you are not on a curve, but on a straight line? A. Well, sir, they ought to couple anywhere."

There is other testimony to the same effect, which it is unnecessary to reproduce. This testimony tends to sustain the allegations of negligence set out in the complaint, and the exceptions raising this question are overruled.

We will consider, next, whether the testimony showed that there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The plaintiff testified as follows: "Q. You say that you had pursued this method before?

A. Yes, sir. Q. State whether or not it was in the presence of the conductor? A. Yes, sir; it was. Q. Tell the jury whether or not— You say that you had been brakeman about a week? A. Yes, sir. Q. Tell the jury whether or not you had ever been warned as to any such custom being dangerous? A. No, sir. Q. Tell them whether or not you had seen the conductor and other officials of the railroad do the same thing? A. Yes, sir. Q. Had you seen this conductor do it, the man in charge of this train? A. Yes, sir. Q. State whether or not this particular conductor was right there and saw you doing this work? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did he make any objection to it, the way you were doing it? A. No, sir." Under such circumstances it cannot be said that there was negligence per se on the part of the plaintiff. Youngblood v. Ry., 60 S. C. 9, 38 S. E. 232, 85 Am. St. Rep. 824; Carson v. Ry., 68 S. C. 55, 46 S. E. 525; Hall v. Ry., 81 S. C. 522, 62 S. E. 848; Brown v. Ry., 82 S. C. 528, 64 S. E. 522; Lyon v. Ry., 66 S. E. 282.

We have not discussed the question whether it appeared from the evidence that the plaintiff assumed the risk which caused the injury, as this was not made a ground for nonsuit or for a new trial. We may say, however, that the testimony does not show that he assumed such risk.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

On Rehearing.

This is a petition for a rehearing. The only ground which we deem it necessary to discuss, other than in a general way is: "That the court has inadvertently stated that the defense of assumption of risk was not interposed by the defendant, either as a ground of nonsuit or new trial." The record shows that this was not urged as a ground for nonsuit, but was relied upon as a ground for a new trial. The court, however, said: "We have not discussed the question whether it appeared from the evidence that the plaintiff assumed the risk which caused the injury, as this was not made a ground of nonsuit or for a new trial. We may say, however, that the testimony does not show that he assumed such risk." Thus showing that the question was considered by the court, and that the statement "that it was not made a ground for a new trial," while erroneous, was not prejudicial to the rights of the appellant.

Furthermore, section 15 of article 9 of the Constitution, relative to railroad corporations, provides that "knowledge by any employé injured, of the defective or unsafe character or condition of any machinery, ways or appliances, shall be no defense to an action for injury caused thereby, except as to conductors or engineers, in charge of dangerous or unsafe cars or engines, voluntarily operated by them," and the plaintiff was neither a conductor nor an engineer.

After careful consideration of the other grounds for a rehearing, this court is satisfied that no material question of law or of fact has either been overlooked or disregarded.

It is therefore ordered that the petition be dismissed, and that the order heretofore granted staying the remittitur be revoked.

PITTS v. CURTIS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 25, 1910.)

1. SALES (§ 208*)—CONTRACT—IDENTIFICATION OF PROPERTY—NECESSITY.

A contract of sale for a large number of articles, not identified in the contract, will pass title if the articles sold are separated and understood by the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 561; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 460*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—EXPLAINING DEEDS—IDENTIFYING TRACTS.

If the language of a deed is applicable to several tracts or species of property, parol evidence is admissible to show what property was intended to be conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2115-2128; Dec. Dig. § 460.*]

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALE OF STANDING TIMBER.

Since growing timber is a part of the realty, deeds thereto are governed by the law applicable to realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—STANDING TIMBER—CONVEYANCE—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY.

A deed conveyed to plaintiff all of the grantor's pine, oak and poplar timber that plaintiff might want for lumber that would measure 16 inches across the stump, and upwards. Held, that even if the deed was not void for indefiniteness, in absence of evidence identifying the timber conveyed, it was not effective to pass title to any timber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Council, Judge.

Action by J. D. Pitts against John Curtis and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, and case dismissed.

These issues were submitted:

(1) Is the plaintiff the owner of the timber trees sued for, as alleged? Answer: "Yes (by court)."

(2) What damage has plaintiff sustained by reason of the defendants cutting and removing said timber trees? Answer: "$1,833."

From the judgment rendered, the defendants appeal.

J. F. Spainhour, Hudgins, Watson & Johnston, and W. T. Morgan, for appellants. Pless & Winborne, for respondent.

BROWN, J. Plaintiff claims title under a deed dated January 15, 1901, executed by S. C. McNeely to plaintiff purporting to convey the timber alleged to have been wrongfully cut and removed by defendant Curtis. The descriptive part of this conveyance is as follows: "I, S. C. McNeely, of the first part, do this day sell and convey to the party of the second part all my pine, oak and poplar timber that the said J. D. Pitts may want for lumber that will measure 16 inches across stump and upward at 40 cents per tree; all under that size that said Pitts may want at 30 cents per tree." Defendant Curtis claims under a deed executed by S. C. McNeely to his wife, Mary, dated October 23, 1897, and recorded August 29, 1904, fully and particularly describing and conveying the lands (three tracts) upon which the timber in controversy was growing. On October —, 1909, Mary McNeely and her husband conveyed the timber upon these lands to defendant by deed fully describing the lands and timber and referring specifically to the above-named deed to the wife. Assuming for the sake of the argument that the deed to plaintiff is not absolutely void for indefiniteness and insufficiency of description, there is no evidence in the record which identifies the timber upon which the instrument could operate. It does not undertake to convey all of grantor's timber, but only such portion of it as the grantee may want for lumber. Even if the instrument is not wholly void, it could only be made effective by evidence that at the time of its execution, and accompanying the act of selling, the parties entered upon the grantors' land, selected and plainly marked the trees which the grantee then and there selected.

The precedents sustain the general proposition that a sale of a part of a larger number of articles of property, not distinguishable upon the face of the contract, will be operative to pass title if at the time they are separated and understood by the parties. Goff v. Pope, 83 N. C. 123; Harris v. Woodward, 96 N. C. 232, 1 S. E. 544; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 287, 288. Prof. Greenleaf lays down the general doctrine in these words: "If the language of the instrument is applicable to several persons, to several tracts of land, to several species of goods, parol evidence is admissible of any extrinsic circumstances tending to show what person or persons or what things were intended by the party or to ascertain his meaning in any other respect." This language, of course, is not intended to apply to an indefinite and uncertain description that fits no property, but where its uncertainty arises from the fact that it fits more than one article of property, and there such evidence is admitted to show what is meant. In respect to personal property, Chief Justice Bearson states the rule in the "buggy case" (Blakeley v. Patrick, 67 N. C. 40, 12 Am. Rep. 600), wherein he says: "To vest the title and ownership in any particular buggies, it was necessary to set them apart, so as to make a constructive delivery and effect an executed contract. In the absence of such identification, the agreement, as we have seen, was executory only." The case is cited, approved, and the same principle applied by Chief Justice Smith in Carpenter v. Medford, 99 N. C. 499, 6 S. E. 786, 6 Am. St. Rep. 535, to the sale of timber trees, wherein he says: "It is very clear that the selection and marking of the trees accompanying the sale separates and distinguishes the subject-matter of the contract from all other trees of the same kind upon the premises so as to transfer the property therein." "The trees were designated, after examination by marks of identification, the only way in which it could be done."

We have in recent years settled upon and adhered to the theory that growing timber is a part of the realty, and deeds and contracts concerning it are governed by the laws applicable to that kind of property. Hawkins v. Lumber Co., 139 N. C. 160, 51 S. E. 852. It may be, as contended by defendants, that upon that principle the deed to plaintiff is absolutely void for uncertainty of description as to the "thing granted"; but it is unnecessary to pass on that contention, as the only evidence that could possibly help out the conveyance is entirely lacking.

Therefore his honor should have sustained the motion to nonsuit.

Reversed and dismissed.

(152 N. C. 472)

ROANOKE RAPIDS POWER CO. v. ROANOKE NAVIGATION & WATER POWER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 4, 1910.)

1. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 39*) — RIPARIAN OWNERS — USE OF WATER — EXTENT OF RIGHT.

Defendant's rights to divert the waters of the Roanoke river into a canal were based on statutory rights acquired by its predecessor. The first statute under which it claimed (Acts 1812, c. 843) provided only for improving navigation. Acts 1817, c. 959, provided that, in view of the fact that the proprietors of lands through which the canal was authorized to extend might desire to erect mills, the canal should not be used except for navigation without the consent of such proprietors, and empowered defendant's predecessor to agree with the proprietors as to the proportion of the expense for constructing a canal for navigation and manufacturing purposes, and denied the right to any such proprietor to withdraw any water from the canal for his mill. Acts 1874-75, c. 198, directed the dissolution of defendant's predecessor, and judgment of dissolution was rendered, and a sale of its property made by the receiver to defendant. Priv. Acts 1885, c. 57, confirmed said sale, and provided that the act should not interfere with the rights of any persons operating mills, or prevent any person owning land on the Roanoke river from operating or erecting any mill run by water power, provided that he should not unreasonably interfere with the rights of any person or corporation, and authorized defendant to improve the canal for manufacturing purposes, and to use the water of the Roanoke river, to be drawn through the canal, for navigation, manufacturing, and other purposes. Defendant's predecessor diverted by a wing dam only sufficient water for navigation purposes, and defendant attempted to divert no more until about 1897, which was after plaintiff had acquired the land along the river between the intake of the canal and its outlet. Held, that defendant had no right to obstruct the flow of the river in order to draw the water into its canal for manufacturing purposes solely; that plaintiff's delay in asserting its rights is not sufficient to constitute an estoppel or acquiescence; and that an extension of the wing dam should be enjoined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

2. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 39*) — RIPARIAN OWNERS — USE OF WATER — EXTENT OF RIGHT.

Priv. Acts 1891, c. 2, § 2, subsec. 2, amending plaintiff's charter, authorizes plaintiff to develop and utilize the water power of the Roanoke river along the Great Falls thereof for manufacturing purposes, and to that end to erect and maintain all necessary dams, waste-ways, and obstructions in said river, and cut such canals from and to such river on its lands as may be required to fully develop and utilize such power, provided that, in so doing, the rights of others shall not be unreasonably interfered with to their injury. Held, that plaintiff had the right to challenge the right of defendant to divert the flow of water in the Roanoke river from plaintiff's property, and this right was not affected by an agreement relating to the location of a few acres of land owned by defendant, or by correspondence passing between them, in which it was expressly stated that there was no waiver of any rights; the agreement and correspondence being intended merely as a temporary arrangement until matters in dispute should be finally decided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

3. COURTS (§ 90*)—PREVIOUS DECISIONS AS PRECEDENTS.

The case of Bass v. Navigation Co., 111 N. C. 439, 18 S. E. 402, 19 L. R. A. 247, decides only two questions: (1) That on the dissolution of the Roanoke Navigation Company its property did not revert to the original owner; and (2) that the parcel license given by the navigation company to place a bridge over its canal was revocable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 720*)—RES JUDICATA—MATTERS CONCLUDED.

A former judgment is res judicata only as to those matters which were in issue and passed on therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1251; Dec. Dig. § 720.*]

5. ARBITRATION AND AWARD (§ 82*)—AWARD—CONCLUSIVENESS.

An award is conclusive on the parties there-to only as to matters submitted to the arbitrators and passed on by them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Halifax County; Guion, Judge.

Action by the Roanoke Rapids Power Company against the Roanoke Navigation & Water Power Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions to issue the injunction prayed for.

This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for the interference, by the defendant, with its water rights in the Roanoke river, and to enjoin the defendant from further interference therewith. The case was heard in the court below upon the following facts, which were agreed upon by the parties and submitted to the court for its decision:

(1) The plaintiff and the defendant are corporations duly chartered and organized under the laws of this state.

(2) The plaintiff was originally chartered under the name of "The Great Falls Water Power, Manufacturing & Improvement Company," but its corporate name was changed to that which it now bears by an act of the General Assembly passed at the session of 1895. With this change in its corporate name, it exists under and by virtue of letters of incorporation granted the 18th day of August, 1890, by the clerk of the superior court and by an act of the General Assembly, amendatory of said letters, ratified January 20, 1891 (Acts 1891, c. 2), which act is to be considered as a part of this case.

(3) The defendant company is successor to the Roanoke Navigation Company, which company derived its charter rights from the following acts of the Legislature: (a) Acts 1812, c. 848; (b) Acts 1815, c. 896; (c) Acts 1816, c. 929; (d) Acts 1817, c. 959; (e) Acts 1885, c. 57.

(4) On June 1 and 8, 1880, in a quo warranto proceeding against the Roanoke Navigation Company, then pending in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, Va., which was instituted pursuant to a resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia, adopted at its session of 1877 and 1878, judgments were entered, copies of which are hereto attached as a part of the facts agreed. There was no appeal from said judgments, and the court had jurisdiction to hear and determine said proceedings in so far as they affected the privileges and franchises exercised by said company within the state of Virginia and no further. The effect of the proceedings and judgment in the said cause was to vacate and annul the charter of the Roanoke Navigation Company in Virginia, and to restrain the said company from exercising any of the franchises, powers, and privileges granted by the charter which it received from the Legislature of that state.

(5) The navigation of Roanoke river was opened up by the Roanoke Navigation Company, pursuant to its aforesaid charters, from Weldon, N. C., westward to Clarksville, Va., and beyond. The boats used in this navigation were known as "bateaux," from 60 to 65 feet long, 6 to 8 feet wide, drawing, when loaded, about 18 inches of water, with a capacity of from five to eight tons each, and were propelled by poling.

(6) The works and improvements of the Roanoke Navigation Company between Weldon, N. C., and Gaston, N. C., consisted of two canals, one around Eaton's Falls and the other, being the main canal, around the Great Falls. From the head of Eaton's Falls, which is a little over half a mile below Gaston, to the foot of the Great Falls at Weldon, the river falls about 104 feet, and, from the head of the Great Falls to the foot thereof at Weldon, a distance of about nine miles, and around which the main canal of the Roanoke Navigation Company was cut, the river falls about 90 feet. On account of these falls and other obstructions, there never has been, and cannot be, any water communication on Roanoke river between Weldon and Gaston, except by means of said canals.

(7) The obstructions to navigation between Gaston, N. C., and Clarksville, Va., were projecting ledges, points of rock, and steep slopes at falls or rapids occurring at intervals along said river, most of them being of minor importance, but several being of such character as to require considerable effort and expenditure to effect safe channels through or by them for the aforesaid bateaux. These obstructions were removed by the Roanoke Navigation Company with the aid of wing dams, and by blasting and cutting sluices through them, so that channels were secured through or by them sufficient for the safe passage of the bateaux heretofore described. Ordinarily it required seven days for these boats to make a round trip between Gaston and Clarksville. Occasionally it was done in five days. The navigation so established by the Roanoke Navigation Company began about 1824, continued for many years, and reached large proportions. The country along the river between said points was then, and is now, well settled and fertile and produced large quantities of tobacco, corn, wheat, and cotton for market, practically all of which was transported over the river by bateaux until some time between 1850 and 1856, and during that period said boats carried into the adjacent country practically all of the goods, wares, etc., required for its use and trade, so that practically the entire commerce of said country, even beyond Clarksville, up the Dan and Staunton rivers, was carried upon the river and canal. When said transportation was at its full height, there were engaged therein on the river and canal about 353 of said bateaux, which carried a commerce of the estimated value of $6,000,000 per year. About 1854 or 1856, there having been built railroads to Gaston and from Manson, N. C., to Clarksville, Va., which furnished quicker or more expeditious transportation than said boats, the public ceased to patronize the boats on the canal from Weldon to Gaston, and navigation was discontinued. The canal ceased to be used thereafter, and the locks were not kept up, and got in such condition that boats could not pass through them, and have not since been used for navigation. At said time the transportation by means of said boats from Gaston to Clarksville also materially decreased until about 1864, when the railroad from Manson to Clarksville was torn up. Thereafter the commerce upon said river by means of bateaux from Gaston, where they connected with the railroad, to Clarksville, again assumed large proportions, there being one firm of tobacco manufacturers at Clarksville who shipped by said boats 1,000,000 pounds of manufactured tobacco a year during part of said time. There was also operated on Staunton river for several years, about 1875, a steamboat, "Nellie," of about 12 tons capacity, which plied the river from Randolph, about 15 miles above Clarksville, to about 17 miles above Randolph, and sometimes as far as Brookneal, about 30 miles above Randolph. The bateaux had traffic connections with the railroads, and through bills of lading for freight were issued. The bateaux continued to navigate the river from Gaston to Clarksville until about 1887, after which time only about three of the boats continued said navigation for about six months in the year, carrying about 1,000 bales of cotton and about 400 tons of fertilizer per year, until about 1893 or 1894. After that time traffic was entirely discontinued, except from Clarksville down the river for 18 or 20 miles, where some of said boats are still operating. It has never been practicable for said boats to pass some of the obstructions in said river between Gaston and Clarksville, except through the channels made by the Roanoke Navigation Company, and at present it is not practicable for said boats, when loaded, to ascend and descend the river between the state line and Gaston, owing to the fact that several of the works erected by said company are not in sufficiently good repair to furnish a safe way through said obstructions. The Roanoke river is navigable by steamboats of considerable size from its mouth to Weldon. At its mouth it communicates, by Albemarle Sound, with the ocean, and by the Dismal Swamp Canal with Norfolk, Va. The aforesaid obstructions in the river between Gaston and Clarksville would prevent the passage of steamboats, but the river between said obstructions, which consists of ledges and points of rock and steep slopes at the rapids, is of a character and depth sufficient for the navigation of such boats of from 20 to 30 tons capacity. The Roanoke river from Gaston to Clarksville is from 500 to 1,300 feet wide, the water varying therein from one to ten feet in depth. The places where the depth is one foot are at several rapids or ledges, where water flows over the same. The average depth of the river between said points at low water is about 2½ feet. Congress has made appropriations which have been expended in the improvement of the navigation of the Dan and Staunton rivers above Randolph, which rivers by their conjunction form the Roanoke. A steamboat now runs on the river between Randolph and Brookneal, a distance of about 30 miles, over a part of the river so improved by the government.

(8) The distance by the river from Weldon, N. C., to Gaston, N. C., is 13½ miles, from Gaston, N. C., to the state line is 24 miles, and from the state line to Clarksville, Va., is 30 miles.

(9) The General Assembly of North Carolina, at its session of 1874-75 (Laws 1874-75, c. 198), passed an act for the dissolution of the "Roanoke Navigation Company," which is to be taken as a part of this case.

(10) The action for dissolution which the Attorney General by said act was authorized and directed to institute was brought in the superior court of Halifax county, and at the fall term, 1881, judgment of dissolution was rendered and a receiver appointed to take charge of and make sale of the property of the company. Said property was sold and conveyed by the receiver in 1883, the conveyance being to the purchasers under the corporate name of the "Roanoke Navigation & Water Power Company."

(11) The General Assembly of North Carolina at its session of 1885 (Laws 1885, c. 57) passed an act confirming said sale and conveyance, a copy of which act is herewith filed as a part of this agreement.

(12) The defendant, so far as this action is concerned, has acquired no property other than that it acquired at the receiver's sale, except the purchase by it from Charles Shaw and wife by deed dated October 24, 1906, of the lower end of Moseley's Island, formerly known as Jones' Island, containing about 245 acres, which deed is recorded in Northampton county, in book 135, at page 218. The property acquired at the receiver's sale consists, so far as this controversy is concerned, of a strip of land 165 feet wide, through which its canal flows around the Great Falls and extending from the upper terminus of said canal to the town of Weldon, a distance of about nine miles, and four acres of land at the "locks" of the canal, which property it owns in fee. It was purchased and condemned by the Roanoke Navigation Company under its charter, and through its entire length a canal was cut. The boundaries of said 165-foot strip, especially the northern boundary thereof, are described in the award of Lanier and Armfield, and the agreement of May 28, 1897, hereinafter set out.

(13) A controversy having arisen between the defendant and one George P. Phillips, the owner of the Cadwalader Jones tract of land, as to certain rights claimed by Phillips, as incident to his said land, and in order to test the right of defendant to use its canal and the waters of the river for manufacturing purposes, as against the alleged rights of Phillips, as owner of said land, the same was by agreement submitted to Messrs. M. V. Lanier and R. F. Armfield as arbitrators, who rendered their final award on August 30, 1889. The submission and award are made a part of this case. Under the award, George P. Phillips was declared to be the owner in fee of a parcel of land lying on the southerly side of said canal property. It is a triangular piece of land, the location of which will appear from a map annexed as an exhibit to this agreement. It is also declared that Phillips was the owner in fee of all the land between the northerly boundary of said canal property and Roanoke river. This is a narrow strip of land extending from the upper terminus of the defendant's canal easterly to the eastern boundary. These two parcels of land are indicated on the map as the "C. Jones" tract. On the 1st day of February, 1892, the plaintiff purchased this property from Eva P. Phillips, widow and sole legatee and devisee of George P. Phillips, who died in 1891, the deed for which was duly recorded in Halifax county. The plaintiff had full notice of said award at the time of purchasing said land, and all its other property.

(14) The defendant did not repair, improve, or develop its said property, owing to its controversy with Phillips, until the same was determined as aforesaid. In January, 1890, it started to work on its property, enlarging its said canal through its entire length, a distance of about nine miles, and completed this work some time in 1892, at an expenditure of over $100,000. About the time defendant commenced its work, negotiations were opened by it with one T. L. Emry for the purchase of the tract of land indicated on the map as the T. L. Emry, or Moore tract, but a price could not be agreed upon, and defendant declined to purchase. Shortly thereafter Emry sold said tract to other parties, designated in the following section as "promoters."

(15) About three months after the defendant commenced this work, negotiations were opened by Emry with the promoters of the plaintiff company for the purchase of the Moore or Emry tract of land, designated on the map, with a view of forming the plaintiff corporation for the purpose of developing the power now owned by the plaintiff. This purpose coming to the knowledge of the Hon. J. D. Cameron, then president of the defendant company, he on the 19th of September, 1890, addressed a letter to the president of the plaintiff company, to which letter the president of the plaintiff company made two replies. The substance of this correspondence was that the president of the defendant company claimed that the said company had acquired the right to the exclusive use of so much of the waters of the Roanoke river as it might at any time need for navigation, manufacturing, or other purposes, and he objected to any use of the waters of the said river, or the construction of any dam or other works, by the plaintiff company, which would in any manner injure, impair, or interfere with the property rights, franchises, or privileges of the defendant company. The president of the plaintiff company claimed that his company did not intend to interfere with any of the legal rights of the defendant company which it had acquired in the waters of the Roanoke river, but he denied that it had any right, exclusive or otherwise, at that or any future time, to use the waters of said river for purposes other than those of navigation, and asserted the right of his company to use the waters of the river not required for the said purposes of navigation, and to have them flow down the entire channel of the stream, so that the lower proprietors and owners of riparian or water rights on the margin of the stream might have the free and uninterrupted use of the same. At the time said letter of September 19, 1890, of the Honorable J. D. Cameron was written, the plaintiff had acquired the said Emry or Moore tract, and shortly thereafter its other properties and rights, which it holds in fee. Its said properties consist of a large body of land lying in, on, and along both sides of and bounded by Roanoke river, along that stretch of said stream known as the Great Falls, and divided by said stream into two unequal parts, the one situated in Northampton county, N. C. and the other part in Halifax county, N. C. Its lands in Northampton county contain about 400 acres, known as the Squire, Garner, Grant, and Thomas and Lee tracts, and have a continuous river front of over three miles, extending from Green's creek eastward down and along and bounded by the Roanoke river. Its lands in Halifax county contain about 2,300 acres, consisting of several tracts known as the M. A. Hamilton, T. L. Emry (also known as the Moore tract), B. T. Bockover, R. N. Ivey, and C. Jones tracts, and have a continuous river front of between four and five miles, beginning at a point where the upper terminus of the defendant's aforesaid canal property (the aforesaid 165-foot strip of land) taps or touches Roanoke river, and thence eastwardly down and along and bounded by said river, and is divided by the aforesaid property of the defendant into two unequal parts or parcels. One of said parcels and the smaller is a narrow strip of land of varying width, lying between the northern boundary of defendant's canal property, which boundary has heretofore been defined, and Roanoke river. The other and larger parcel lies between the southern boundary of the aforesaid canal property of the defendant and Chocayotte creek. The plaintiff also owns in fee all the islands in Roanoke river, from Goat Island to Holly Island, inclusive of both; also Haynes and Crittendon Islands, below Holly Island. For a fuller description of the above-described properties, both of the plaintiff and the defendant, and for a better understanding of their location with reference to each other, reference is made to the map filed herewith as a part of this agreement. There are a number of small islands between Goat Island and Holly Island which are not shown on the map; it being considered necessary to give only the most prominent and important ones.

(16) In the spring of 1891, the plaintiff began developing the water power of that part of Roanoke river flowing by and to its property. Its dams and other works for developing its said water power are located from one to two miles below the upper, and from four to five miles above the lower, terminus of the defendant's canal, so that all the water flowing into said canal is diverted entirely from plaintiff's property, works, and dam, and carried past and beyond the same and discharged at the lower terminus of defendant's canal at Weldon. For a better understanding of the location of said dam and works, especially with reference to the aforesaid properties of the plaintiff and defendant, reference is hereto made to the aforesaid map or plat marked "Exhibit P." Up to 1898 plaintiff had expended in the purchase of its property and rights and in developing its water power about $250,000, and since then it has expended about $200,000 more in such development.

(17) The dimensions of defendant's canal, as constructed and used by its predecessors, the Roanoke Navigation Company, and which was cut and graded for navigation purposes, was about 25 feet wide at the top of the water level and 16 feet wide at its bottom, and from 2 to 3 feet deep and with a very slight fall or current. The quantity of water which was taken into and flowed through the canal did not exceed 50 cubic feet per second. The present dimensions of said canal are about 35 feet wide at the top of its water level and 25 feet wide at its bottom, and about 4 feet deep, with an increased fall or current; it being enlarged and regraded for hydraulic purposes. In addition to such enlargement and gradation of the canal, the defendant, about the latter part of 1897, built a rock breakwater, constructed of loose stone piled together from or near the upper terminus of the canal, and extending about one-third of the distance across Little river, and which was not further extended until some time in 1901, when the same was extended entirely across Little river. Plaintiff had no knowledge of the construction of said breakwater across said river until September, 1907, and on October 30, 1907, it notified the president of the defendant company of that fact by letter, and threatened that, unless the same was removed, it would institute suit to abate the same and for damages. No dam or obstruction in and across said river or any part thereof was ever constructed by the Roanoke Navigation Company, except a wing dam, extending about 100 feet into said river at said point, and of less elevation than the aforesaid rock breakwater. By reason of the enlargement and gradation of said canal, the greater part of the flow of said Little river during the stages of low water is diverted into the canal and from the property of the plaintiff. The defendant's canal, as enlarged and with said dam across Little river, diverts substantially a greater quantity of water than the old canal diverted. Little river is the smaller of the two channels made by Roanoke river dividing and flowing around Moseley's Island. It carries one-fourth of the flow of the entire river, whereas the other and larger channel carries three-fourths of said flow. The waters of the larger channel are made inaccessible to defendant's canal by said island, as their works are now constructed, but both channels unite at the lower end of said island and before reaching the mouth of the plaintiff's canal, all of which is shown by the annexed map or plat.

(18) All the water drawn into defendant's canal is to develop power for manufacturing purposes, and is used solely for that purpose. The canal, by reason of the works of the defendant, is so disconnected from the river that boats cannot pass from one to the other, and defendant has no purpose of opening up or using said canal for navigation purposes unless there should arise some public requirement therefor.

(19) While, before the erection of said dam by the defendant, plaintiff had expended over $300,000 in the purchase and development of its property, and was still making large expenditures in the development of its water power for future leases, the plaintiff and the few lessees of its water power had been little, if any, inconvenienced by the diversion of water by the defendant, and had sustained little actual damage thereby until within four or five months of the institution of this action. For these reasons, the plaintiff had made no demand upon the defendant to abate such diversion. In 1902 the plaintiff was negotiating for other leases, and, actuated by this and also by the information that defendant contemplated increasing such diversion, the president of the plaintiff company on December 18, 1902, wrote the president of the defendant company, protesting against such action. During the year 1906 plaintiff succeeded in making large leases of its power, to be furnished by September 1, 1907. When demand was made upon it for such additional power, it was unable to supply a large part thereof on account of the diversion of water by defendant, and this inability continued for several months during the fall of 1907, and until the plaintiff could make large additions to its dam it was then extending across the river.

(20) As shown by the map hereto annexed, plaintiff has now extended its dam entirely across the river, by which it is enabled to develop water power to the amount of 8,000 horse power, but with its present works and developments it will require the entire flow of the river in its normal stages to enable it to do so. The defendant's canal by reason of its said enlargement and grading and the extension of said breakwater or dam diverts water from plaintiff's canal and works, which, if allowed to flow into them, would develop a large amount of power. Of this 8,000 horse power plaintiff has already leased 4,000 and the lessees thereof have been using the same since January 1, 1908. The remaining 4,000 horse power will be converted into electrical power, and the plaintiff has erected and equipped a power house for generating the same. Of this electrical power it has leased about 800 horse power, and can dispose of the remainder within the next one or two years, unless the aforesaid diversion of the defendant continues.

(21) The said water which the plaintiff claims the right to draw into its canal to develop said 8,000 horse power is for use in the manner and for the purposes following, to wit: A sufficient quantity of said water is to be delivered from its canal, through pipes or sluices, to the wheels or turbines of the owners of the mill sites, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, on the lands of the said millowners, to generate in conjunction with said wheels or turbines, under the head of water maintained in the canal, 4,000 horse power. This power is for the operation of the mills and machinery of said millowners upon their said lands. This is the 4,000 horse power plaintiff has already leased, as aforesaid. Mill site No. 1 is owned by the United Industrial Company, No. 2 by the Roanoke Mills Company, and No. 3 by the Roanoke Rapids Paper Manufacturing Company, and are located as shown on the map herewith filed. They were originally parts of the Emry, or Moore, tract of land. Sites Nos. 1 and 2 were donated, and mill site No. 3 was sold and conveyed by plaintiff in consideration of the donees and grantees erecting mills thereon and leasing water power from the plaintiff to operate the same. The water taken by said mills from plaintiff's canal is discharged and returned to the river from said mills before passing the lands of any other riparian proprietor, and flows down the river, along plaintiff's lands. The remainder of the water is to be used to operate the electric power plant located on plaintiff's lands by which the plaintiff proposes to generate 4,000 horse power. This power will be transmitted and used to operate machinery or mills to be erected by plaintiff, or used by other parties when plaintiff may be able to lease the same. The water used to generate said power is discharged on plaintiff's land and returned to the river before passing any other riparian owner. Eight hundred horse power has been already leased, to be used in the operation of mills on mill sites Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiff has now no mills or factories upon its lands other than the said electrical power house.

(22) The main contention of the plaintiff in this action is that it has the right to have abated or enjoined the alleged diversion by the defendant of the water of Roanoke river into its canal; and, while it is admitted that plaintiff has thereby sustained such damages and will continue to sustain such damages so long as substantial diversion continues, if said diversion or any part thereof is wrongful, it is agreed that there shall be no recovery of actual damages in this action, but this shall be without prejudice and with the reservation to the plaintiff of the right to institute a separate action for any damages it has already or may hereafter sustain; but the aforesaid admission, which is made for the above purpose, that plaintiff has sustained actual damages, shall not be used as evidence against the defendant in any action it may hereafter institute against the defendant for the recovery of damages. It is further agreed that no such subsequent action shall be barred by the statute of limitations further than it already is.

(23) In 1896 a controversy arose between the plaintiff and the defendant as to the location of four acres of land owned by the defendant at or near the locks, and as to other matters, and, in order to adjust and settle the same, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement for that purpose. When this agreement was entered into, the contentions of the plaintiff and the defendants as to their respective rights to the use of the water of Roanoke river were well understood by them. At the time of entering into this agreement, plaintiff knew that defendant had enlarged its canal to its present dimensions, and was using the water solely for manufacturing purposes. The plan adopted by the defendant and put into execution for developing its water power was to utilize the water drawn into its canal, first, at the "locks," about four miles below the upper terminus of its canal, where all the water so used was and is returned to said canal, from which point it flows through said canal to Weldon, and is used and discharged. The plan adopted by the plaintiff for developing its water power was in the manner and at the place its said power is now developed and used. These respective plans were known and understood by both parties before and at the time of the aforesaid agreement, and the same was entered into in furtherance of said plans.

(24) At the time said agreement of May 28, 1897, was entered into, the defendant had not leased any of its water power. Its first lease of power was to the Weldon Cotton Manufacturing Company on the 1st day of February, 1899, when it contracted to furnish it with horse power to an amount not to exceed 250 horse power. Said company had never used to exceed 100 horse power. In the summer of 1900 defendant commenced the erection of a power house at the "locks," located about four miles below the upper terminus of its canal. In contemplation of such erection, the defendant contracted with the Patterson Textile Company on August 29, 1900, to furnish it with not exceeding 1,000 electrical horse power, beginning on January 1, 1901. It did not begin to furnish the power until September 1, 1901. It has furnished at no time to exceed 800 electrical horse power.

(25) Defendant, relying on the decisions in the George P. Phillips Case and the case of Bass v. Navigation Company, 111 N. C. 439, 18 S. E. 402, 19 L. R. A. 247, as a determination of its rights to enlarge its canal and use the water of the river drawn through it for manufacturing purposes, did enlarge and repair the same, at the expense aforesaid, to wit, over $100,000, and built thereon a large corn and flour mill at Weldon, an electric power house at Weldon, which furnishes electric lights for said town, its stores, factories, and residences, and an electric power plant at Roanoke Rapids, which furnishes electric lights to said town, and power plant, by transmission, for the operation of a large damask mill of the Patterson Textile Company at Rosemary. Said improvements cost about $300,000. Defendant's canal is so constructed that it can use the water drawn through the same to operate its power plant at its lock at Roanoke Rapids under the fall of about 30 feet, and by reason of said locks return the same water to the canal, so that it is carried on to Weldon, where it is again used under a fall of 45 feet. Plaintiff has in its canal only one fall of about 30 feet. The Patterson Textile Company, heretofore referred to, desiring to build a large damask mill at Rosemary, to be operated by power from defendant's canal, and being advised of plaintiff's contentions that defendant had no right to draw water from the river in excess of that used by the Roanoke Navigation Company, or to apply the same to manufacturing purposes, before building said mill examined the decisions in said Phillips and Bass Cases, and, being advised that they were, and relying on them as, adjudications of the said questions in favor of the defendant, erected said mill, dependent upon the power of defendant's canal for its operations, and entered into a contract with defendant accordingly to furnish it not exceeding 1,000 electrical horse power. Said mill cost about $350,000. The Weldon Cotton Manufacturing Company's mills were also built on defendant's canal, to be operated by its power. The aforesaid Patterson Textile Company's mills and the town of Roanoke Rapids can be served as readily from the power plant of the plaintiff as from that of the defendant. The corn and flour mill of the defendant was completed in 1892, and its power house at Weldon was erected in 1898.

It was further agreed by the parties that the presiding judge should hear and determine the matters in controversy upon the case agreed, and enter judgment accordingly. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, denying the plaintiff's prayer for an injunction, and dismissing the action. Plaintiff, having duly excepted, appealed to this court.

W. E. Daniel and Claude Kitchin, for appellant. E. L. Travis, Geo. Green, J. H. Pou, and T. M. Mordecai, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for a nuisance which it alleges was committed by the defendant, and to enjoin the continuance of the same, which the plaintiff also alleges has caused special damage to it by reason of the diversion of the waters of the Roanoke river from the usual and natural flow by and along the lands of the plaintiff, which are situated below the intake or upper end of the defendant's canal. The plaintiff bases its right to recover on the ground that, as the owner of the land through which the river would flow in its natural state, it is a lower riparian proprietor, and that the defendant has no legal right to so obstruct the flow of the water in one of the prongs of the Roanoke river, known as Little river, as to diminish the volume of water which would otherwise flow by and through plaintiff's land, except to the extent that the defendant may have acquired the right, under the charter of its predecessor, the Roanoke Navigation Company, to use the water, and for that purpose to obstruct the flow of said stream in a reasonable manner and consistently with the rights and privileges granted to it. We think the decision of the case must depend upon the construction of the charters of the Roanoke Navigation Company, under which the defendant claims, and all the acts of assembly which relate to the rights and privileges of that company and of its successor, the defendant, with regard to the use of the waters of the Roanoke river for the purposes specified in the said acts.

Act 1812, c. 848, provides only for improving the navigation of Roanoke river from the town of Halifax to the place where the Virginia line intersects the same. It is not necessary that we should refer to the acts of 1815 and 1816, which amended the act of 1812, because the provisions of those acts do not affect materially the decision of the question presented in this case. By the act of 1817, the Legislature of this state adopted an act which was passed by the General Assembly of Virginia in 1816, and which provided for improving the navigation of the Roanoke river and its branches. It is provided in sections 4 and 5 of the latter act as follows:

"Whereas, some of the places through which it may be necessary to conduct the said canals may be convenient for erecting mills, forges and other waterworks and the person possessing such situations may desire to improve the same:

"Be it therefore enacted, that the water, or any part conveyed through any canal cut or made by the said company, shall not be used for any purpose but navigation, unless the consent of the proprietors of the lands through which the same shall be led, be first had, and the said president and directors, or a majority of them, are hereby empowered and directed, if it can be conveniently done, to answer both the purposes of navigation and the waterworks aforesaid, to enter into reasonable agreements with the proprietors of such situations, concerning the just proportion of the expenses of making large canals, or cuts capable of carrying such volume or volumes of water as may be sufficient for the purposes of navigation, and also for any such waterworks as aforesaid; but in no case whatever shall the owner or proprietor of such land, through which any canal may be cut as aforesaid, withdraw from any canal, cut by the aforesaid company, the water for the purpose of working any mill, forges or other waterworks whatever."

The act of 1812 provided only for improving the navigation of the Roanoke river, and made no provision for the use of its waters for any other purpose. It is contended by the defendant that the act of 1817, the provision of which we have just quoted, enlarged the rights, privileges, and franchises of the Roanoke Navigation Company, so that by the said act it acquired not only the right to improve the navigation of the river, but also to use its waters for manufacturing and other purposes, and that, by reason of the provisions of the said act, it was not restricted in the quantity of water taken by it from the stream to so much as might be necessary only for the purpose of navigation as it was by the act of 1812. In the exercise of the rights, privileges, and franchises conferred by the said acts, the Roanoke Navigation Company constructed a canal and diverted the waters of the river into it by what is known in the case as a "wing dam," which extended about 100 feet into the river. The navigation of the river through the said canal began in 1824 and continued until 1854, when it was abandoned, and it has not since been resumed. The plaintiff has extended the said wing dam entirely across Little river, and has thereby practically obstructed the flow of the stream, so that the plaintiff does not receive any benefit therefrom, but the use of the said river by it, as a riparian owner or proprietor, if it is entitled to be so considered, has been totally destroyed.

It is clear from the statement of facts which we have made that the defendant by the dissolution and sale of the franchise and property of the Roanoke Navigation Company, under the act of the Legislature of 1874-75, and by virtue of the judicial proceedings authorized by the said act, did not by the deed of the commissioner, which was made under a decree of the court, acquire anything except "the rights, franchises, privileges, works and property of the Roanoke Navigation Company between the towns of Gaston and Weldon and at Weldon." The deed of the commissioner, Mr. Hill, does not convey anything else, nor does Act 1885, c. 57, which ratified the sale and conveyance of the commissioner, confer any other rights, franchises, or privileges or franchises, or vest in the defendant any other property or effects than those which were required by the deed of the commissioner. The primary object, and we may say the chief purpose, of the acts of 1812 and 1817 were to promote and improve the navigation of the Roanoke river by the construction of a canal, and the right to use the water of the canal for the other purposes mentioned in the act of 1817 was intended to be subsidiary or subordinate to the main purpose, and not to permit the Roanoke Navigation Company to take more water from the river through its canal than should be necessary for improving the navigation of the stream. The Legislature did not contemplate that a greater quantity of water should be taken from the river than would be necessary for the purpose of navigation, and within this prescribed limit the navigation company was authorized to contract with the proprietors of lands bordering on the canal for the use of the water in the canal when required to supply motive power for milling, manufacturing or other industrial plants mentioned in the act. It would seem that the company placed this construction upon the act because it so cut its canal with reference to the diversion of water from the river as to supply a sufficient quantity for the purposes of navigation only by erecting the wing dam; and, while the canal was in use and operation for 30 years, it did not assert the right to obstruct the flow of the water to any greater extent than had been done in the beginning, nor was any attempt made to do so by its successor until about the year 1897, when it built a rock breakwater, extending about one-third of the distance across Little river and which was not further extended to the other bank of the river until some time in the year 1901.

In the construction of the legislative acts, under which the defendant acquired its rights, privileges, and franchises, as the successor of the Roanoke Navigation Company, by virtue of the judicial sale to which we have referred, we can derive little or no aid from the authorities, nor did counsel cite any. The original company constructed the wing dam under the power given to it by the act of 1812, as amended by the act of 1817, and deemed it sufficient for all purposes of navigation and so used it for a period of 30 years. It does not appear in this case that it was necessary to extend that dam to the opposite bank of the stream for the purpose of supplying an additional quantity of water for improving the navigation of the river as contemplated by the said act. It is very clear, we think, that the Legislature, by the acts of 1812 and 1817, did not intend to permit any obstruction of the Roanoke river for the sole purpose of using its waters for manufacturing purposes. The title and the language of the two acts forbid any such construction. The right to establish manufacturing plants on the canal was intended to be incidental to the navigation of the river, and the latter could be obstructed only to the extent that it was necessary to improve its navigation. The defendant contends that it has acquired the right to obstruct the river by virtue of Act 1885, c. 57, but we do not think that statute will bear any such construction. It is provided by section 6 of the act as follows: "This act shall not materially interfere with the legal or vested rights of any persons owning or operating mills in Northampton county, or prevent any person owning land on Roanoke river from operating or erecting any mill or other structure to be operated by water power, and using the water of said river for operating said mill or other structure: Provided, in so doing he shall not interfere with the legal or vested rights of any other person or corporation in any unreasonable manner." The right given to the defendant by section 7 to erect buildings or make other improvements upon the canal for the purpose of manufacturing, and by section 1 to use the water of the Roanoke river, to be drawn through the canal, for navigation, manufacturing, and other purposes, refers only as the context of the act clearly shows to the same rights, privileges, and franchises that were given by the acts of 1812 and 1817 to the Roanoke Navigation Company. This construction of these two sections is entirely consistent with the language of section 6, which forbids the defendant from obstructing or interfering with the right of any lower riparian proprietor on the Roanoke river from erecting and operating any mill by the use of the water of the said river. And any other construction would nullify that section. The plaintiff has complied with the proviso in that section, for it appears in this case that the water which passes through its canal is returned to the river before it reaches the land of any lower proprietor, and therefore there has been no interference by it with the right of any other person or corporation.

The next question presented in the case is whether the plaintiff is in a position to challenge the right of the defendant to obstruct the flow of water in the Roanoke river. We do not think it is necessary for us to decide, in order to pass upon this question, whether or not the plaintiff is a riparian owner in the sense that it has the right to use the water of the river for manufacturing purposes, though there are authorities for the contention of the plaintiff that it has such right and all the rights of a riparian owner, and especially that it had "a right to the undisturbed flow of the river which passed along the whole frontage of its property in the manner in which it had formerly been accustomed to pass." Land Company v. Hotel Company, 132 N. C. 517, 44 S. E. 39, 61 L. R. A. 937; Gould on Waters, §§ 149, 204; 1 Farnam on Waters, §§ 287-288, 598-602; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. Ed. 984; 29 Cyc. 333-335; Webster v. Harris, 111 Tenn. 663, 69 S. W. 782, 59 L. R. A. 332; Lamprey v. State, 52 Minn. 181, 53 N. W. 1139, 18 L. R. A. 670, 38 Am. St. Rep. 526; Sanborn v. Ice Co., 82 Minn. 43, 84 N. W. 641, 51 L. R. A. 829, 88 Am. St. Rep. 401. But whether or not the plaintiff had the right to use the waters of the Roanoke river, as claimed by it, we think that the act of 1891, amending its charter, does expressly confer such right, and that the proviso in subsection 2 of section 2 does not restrict its right in this respect, as, if the defendant acquired only the property rights, privileges, and franchises of the Roanoke Navigation Company, the operations of the plaintiff do not interfere with its rights, if it had no authority to extend its dam across the river to the bank on the other side, but only the right to obstruct the river by the wing dam, which was built by its predecessor. Nor do we think that the rights of the parties were changed or affected by their agreement dated May 28, 1897, or the correspondence between them, as it is evident from their express language that they did not intend to waive or surrender any of their rights, which are now in controversy in this case, but the said rights are distinctly reserved. The said agreement and correspondence were intended merely to provide a temporary arrangement between the parties which was to last until the matters in dispute between them should be finally decided.

The defendant further contends that the plaintiff is concluded or estopped by the award which settled the controversy between George P. Phillips and the defendant concerning the boundaries of the property of the defendant and its rights in the canal; the plaintiff having afterwards purchased the Phillips land. The fourth section of the award is as follows: "The Roanoke Navigation & Water Power Company has the right under its charter, without the consent of the said Phillips, to enlarge its canal as it may see fit upon its own land aforesaid, but not to condemn land for such purpose, and it has also the right, without the consent of the said Phillips, to own, use, and enjoy the use of the water of the Roanoke river to be drawn into or through said canal, as well for navigation as manufacturing and other purposes, and to rent or lease the same, and to erect and operate manufacturing establishments upon its own land, both that now owned or hereafter acquired under its charter, or to rent or lease the same and to sell and alien any of its said property, all without the consent of the said George P. Phillips." The arbitrators intended by their award merely to fix the boundaries of the defendant's property and to define its right to use the canal and the waters of the Roanoke river for navigation and manufacturing purposes, as conferred by the acts of 1812 and 1817, and to confine it within the limits prescribed by the said acts. This is apparent from the striking similarity between the words employed by the arbitrators in their award and the language of the two acts to which we have referred. They did not intend that the defendant should possess or enjoy any other rights, privileges, or franchises than were acquired by the deed of the commissioner, executed under the order of the court and the act of the Legislature of 1885, which ratified the same. The question as to the quantity of water which the defendant was entitled to draw from the Roanoke river without the consent of Phillips was not submitted to the arbitrators for their decision, nor involved in the controversy between the parties, so far as appears from the submission or the award. The question which the arbitrators decided, and which was submitted to them, was whether the defendant as between it and Phillips had the right to divert any water from the river into its canal.

We have read very carefully the case of Bass v. Navigation Company, 111 N. C. 439, 18 S. E. 402, 19 L. R. A. 247, upon which the defendant relies as deciding what rights it has in the waters of the Roanoke river by virtue of the statutes and proceedings to which we have referred. We find only two questions decided in that case, and they are: (1) Whether by the dissolution of the corporation known as the Roanoke Navigation Company the property which it acquired by purchase or otherwise reverted to the original owners; and (2) whether the parol license to construct a bridge over the canal which was formerly given by the Roanoke Navigation Company was revocable. The court decided that there was no reverter, and that the license was revocable. We do not see how the questions now under consideration in this action were presented in that case, and the language of the court excludes the idea that they were considered or decided. We are therefore of the opinion that neither the award in the Phillips Case nor the decision in the Bass Case adjudicated the rights of the parties which are involved in this suit, nor do they render applicable to this case the rule of stare decisis, as laid down in the case of Hill v. Railroad Company, 143 N. C. 539, 55 S. E. 854, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606, as they establish no rule of property pertinent to the facts of this case, which require us to adhere to them as decisive of the questions we now have under consideration. If the arbitrators in the Phillips Case or the court in the Bass Case intended to pass upon the question as to whether the defendant had the right to extend its dam across Little river so as to completely obstruct the stream, and thereby to prevent the use of the waters of the river by the lower riparian proprietors, they would have made some reference to the right of the defendant so to do in plain language. Instead of doing so, it was assumed that the defendant possessed only the rights and privileges with reference to the river and the diversion of its waters which it acquired from the Roanoke Navigation Company, and which had been conferred upon the latter by its charter and the amendments thereof.

It appears in the case agreed that the defendant has acquired by prescription if not by purchase at the judicial sale the right to obstruct the flow of Roanoke river by continuing to maintain what is known in the case as the "wing dam," which was originally erected by its predecessor, but it has no right to impede the flow of the stream beyond the end of said dam—that is to say, by any extension of the same—and to the extent that it has done so it should have been enjoined by the court below, as there has been no sufficient delay by the defendant in asserting its right to the removal of the obstruction to constitute an acquiescence on its part, or an estoppel against it. Pugh v. Wheeler, 19 N. C. 50; Emery v. Railroad, 102 N. C. 232, 9 S. E. 139, 11 Am. St. Rep. 727; Geer v. Water Company, 127 N. C. 349, 37 S. E. 474. The plaintiff has acquired no easement as against the lower proprietors on the river to obstruct the same. Griffin v. Foster, 53 N. C. 337.

The question as to the amount of damages the plaintiff may be entitled to recover is not now before us upon the case agreed. Our conclusion is that the court erred in refusing the injunction to the extent above indicated, and the case is therefore remanded to the court below, with instructions to issue an injunction against the defendant restraining it from maintaining the dam across Little river, except that part of the said dam which was originally erected by the Roanoke Navigation Company, and which is known in the case as the "wing dam." The amount of damages which the plaintiff is entitled to recover will be determined hereafter, according to the stipulation contained in the case agreed.

VOLIVA v. RICHMOND CEDAR WORKS.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 88*)—COMPUTATION OF PERIOD—NONRESIDENCE.

The appointment of a local agent on whom process can be served by a foreign corporation put in force the statute of limitations, which is suspended by Revisal 1905, § 366, as to non-resident defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 463; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 818*)—FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.

A judgment against a foreign corporation based on service of process on an agent appointed to receive service is entitled to full faith and credit in another state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1460-1465; Dec. Dig. § 818.*]

On rehearing. Petition allowed.

For former opinion, see 67 S. E. 42.

BROWN, J. The defendant is a foreign corporation owning property and doing business in this state prior to the act complained of and up to this time. The alleged damage occurred in 1904, and this action was commenced November 12, 1908. The defendant at all times maintained a process agent in the state, upon whom service could be had, and upon whom service actually was had in the case now being considered. The defendant pleaded the three-year statute of limitations. This court held that the plea is not available to a nonresident corporation.

Some of the earlier utterances of this court upon the subject would indicate that the plea is open to a nonresident corporation upon which service of process can be had within the state and against which a personal judgment may be rendered. Armfield v. Moore, 97 N. C. 34, 2 S. E. 347; Williams v. B. & L. Association, 131 N. C. 267, 42 S. E. 607. In this last case Mr. Justice Clark, speaking for the court, and quoting with approval Armfield v. Moore says: "The plain intent of the statute is to put nonresidents on the same footing as residents, and not to protect them from an action unless they have been for two years exposed to service of summons." Since those decisions it has been held by this court that the plea is never available to a nonresident corporation, although it may have fully complied with our statutes (Revisal 1905, § 1243) and appointed and maintained an agent here upon whom process can be at all times served. Green v. Insurance Co., 139 N. C. 309, 51 S. E. 887, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 623, and cases cited. We are now of opinion that these last cases are not well decided, and that the better doctrine, more consonant with reason and justice, is that expressed in the citation from Williams v. B. & L. Association.

The overwhelming weight of judicial precedent recognizes the doctrine as expounded by the Supreme Court of Iowa in Wall v. Railway, 69 Iowa, 501, 29 N. W. 428: "The theory of the statute of limitations is that it operates to bar all actions except as against persons and corporations upon whom notice of the action cannot be served because of their nonresidence. If such notice be served, and a personal judgment obtained which can be enforced in the mode provided by law against the property of such person or corporation, wherever found, then such person or corporation is not a nonresident as contemplated by the statute of limitations." To the same effect are the following cases, and particularly the strong case of Huss v. Central Railroad & Banking Co., 66 Ala. 472; Sidway v. Land & Live Stock Co., 187 Mo. 673, 86 S. W. 150; Lawrence v. Ballou, 50 Cal. 258; Hubbard v. Mortgage Co., 14 Ill. App. 40; St. Paul v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 45 Minn. 387, 48 N. W. 17; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Pool, 72 Miss. 487, 16 South. 753; Colonial, etc., Mortgage Co. v. Northwest Thresher Co. (1905) 14 N. D. 147, 103 N. W. 915, 70 L. R. A. 814, 116 Am. St. Rep. 642; Turcott v. Yazoo, etc., R. Co., 101 Tenn. 102, 45 S. W. 1067, 40 L. R. A. 768, 70 Am. St. Rep. 661; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Duerson, 28, Grat. (Va.) 630; Thompson v. Texas Land, etc., Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 856; U. S. Express Co. v. Ware, 87 U. S. 543, 22 L. Ed. 422; Taylor v. Union Pac. R. Co. (C. C.) 123 Fed. 155; McCabe v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (C. C.) 13 Fed. 827; Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 50 N. W. 565; Id., 86 Iowa, 608, 53 N. W. 421, 18 L. R. A. 524; Abell v. Penn. Mut. L. Ins. Co., 18 W. Va. 400; Norris v. Atlas Steamship Co. (C. C.) 37 Fed. 426; Johnson, etc., Dry Goods Co. v. Cornell, 4 Okl. 412, 46 Pac. 860.

After adverting to the few decisions to the contrary, 13 Am. & Eng. Ency. p. 904, says: "The majority of decisions maintain a rule believed to be more consonant with justice. The rule, briefly stated, is that if, under the laws of the domestic state, the corporation has placed itself in such a position that it may be served with process, it may avail itself of the statute of limitations when sued. Ability to obtain service of process is the test of the running of the statute of limitations." To same effect is 25 Cyc. 1238, which cites in support of the text, among a large number of cases, our own case of Williams v. B. & L. Association, supra.

In Murfree on Foreign Corporations it is said: "As to the second question, whether a foreign company, when sued, can plead the bar of the statute in defense, it may be said that the great weight of authority is in favor of the conclusion suggested above that the true test of the running of the statute is the liability of the party, invoking its bar, to the service of process during the whole of the period prescribed, that, if the operations of the company within the jurisdiction were such as to render it liable to suit, then it may plead the statute." The soundness of this doctrine has nowhere been more forcibly stated than by Mr. Justice Pleasants in Penn. Co. v. Sloan, 1 Ill. App. 364, a most instructive and well-reasoned case. The Tennessee court, in Turcott v. R. R., 101 Tenn. 102, 45 S. W. 1067, 40 L. R. A. 768, 70 Am. St. Rep. 661, holds on a statute exactly like ours that a corporation is a person, within the purview of the statute, excluding absences from the state in computing the time for the running of the statute of limitations, and that a foreign corporation doing business in the state upon which service of process may be made may plead the statutes of limitations. The Constitution of Alabama contains a provision similar to our statute, requiring all foreign corporations doing business within the state to maintain an agent upon whom service of process may be made. That court held that such corporation could plead the statutes of limitation. Huss v. Railroad, 66 Ala. 475. In rendering the opinion, Chief Justice Brickell says: "The true test of the running of the statute of limitations is the liability of the party invoking its bar to the service of process during the whole of the period prescribed. If there is the continuous liability, the residence or domicile of the party is immaterial." In Express Co. v. Ware, 87 U. S. 543, 22 L. Ed. 422, the Supreme Court of the United States held: "A statute of limitations as against a foreign corporation begins to run from the time such corporation has a person within the state upon whom process to commence a suit may be served." The Court of Appeals of New York, it seems, at one time held to the contrary, but what is called the "New York rule" by Mr. Murfree has not been often followed. In speaking of it the Supreme Court of the United States says, through Mr. Justice Bradley: "These decisions upon the construction of the statute are binding upon us, whatever we may think of their soundness on general principals." Tloga Railroad Co. v. Railroad, 87 U. S. 143, 22 L. Ed. 331. In the same case Mr. Justice Miller says: "The liability to suit, where process can at all times be served, must in the nature of things be the test of the running of the statute. A different rule applied to an individual because he is a citizen or resident of another state is a violation at once of equal justice and of the rights conferred by the second section of the fourth article of the federal Constitution that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." The latest decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holds that a foreign corporation owning property and doing business within a state and amenable to its process is a "person," and as such is protected by the equal protection clause of the United States Constitution. Railway v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 30 Sup. Ct. 287, 54 L. Ed.—.

Statutes like ours, requiring all foreign corporations doing business within the state to maintain an agent therein upon whom process may be served, have been enacted in a great majority of the states, and in nearly all of them where the question has arisen the right to plead the statutes of limitation of such state has been accorded. This is the more consonant with elementary principals of justice because a judgment obtained by such service in the courts of the state is entitled to the full faith and credit in another state as it is in the state where rendered. St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 1 Sup. Ct. 354, 27 L. Ed. 222; 13 Am. & Eng. Ency. 895.

For these reasons, we think that our precedents to the contrary should no longer be authoritative.

We are of the opinion that the action is barred.

Error. Petition allowed.

WALKER and MANNING, JJ., concur fully in the above opinion, but think that the judgment should not be retroactive upon the principle expressed in the concurring opinion of Justice Walker in State v. Fulton, 149 N. C. 492, 63 S. E. 145; State v. Bell, 186 N. C. 674, 49 S. E. 163.

BENNETT v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Anson County; W. J. Adams, Judge.

Action by J. B. Bennett against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Civil action for damages for personal injury, alleged in the complaint to have been received in Savannah, Ga., in May, 1901. These issues were submitted:

"(1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to his injury as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

"(3) Did the plaintiff voluntarily assume the risk of the work he was doing at the time he was injured, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

"(4) Is the plaintiff's cause of action barred by the statute of limitations? Answer: No.

"(5) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: Three hundred ($300) dollars."

From the judgment rendered, the defendant appealed.

Robinson & Caudle, for appellant. Tillett & Guthrie, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury that upon the allegations of the complaint and the plaintiff's testimony, as well as all the evidence, the action is barred by the statute of limitations. This question has been fully considered at this term upon petition to rehear the case of Voliva v.

Richmond Cedar Works, 68 S. E. 200. The disposition of that case upon rehearing controls this. The prayer for instruction should have been given, and the jury directed to answer the fourth issue, "Yes."
Error. Reversed.

HASKETT v. TYRRELL COUNTY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

COUNTIES (§ 173*)—CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF JAIL—ISSUANCE OF BONDS—EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT STATUTE.

County commissioners on February 1, 1909, passed a resolution declaring it necessary to build a jail, and on the following day entered into a contract for the construction of the jail in which it agreed to issue bonds to the contractor, and on March 1, 1909, the contractor delivered a written order to the commissioners directing them to deliver the bonds to a third person. Held that, while it was within the power of the General Assembly to restrict county commissioners in the incurring of debts, such contract was not invalidated by an act ratified on March 2, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 413), which prohibited such county from contracting for any public building without first advertising for bids and annulling the contract of February 2, 1909, since the bonds issued in pursuance of such contract were, in effect, delivered on March 1st.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tyrrell County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by M. F. Haskett against Tyrrell County and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ward & Grimes, for appellant. I. M. Meekins, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. On February 1, 1909, the county commissioners of Tyrrell passed a resolution that it was necessary to build a jail for said county, and contracted with the "Stewart Jail Works" to build the same for the sum of $6,895. On the succeeding day, said board contracted with the Stewart Jail Works, in order to raise funds to pay for said work, to issue $6,500 in 6 per cent. bonds, i. e., 13 bonds of $500 each, bond No. 1 to fall due February 1, 1918, and one bond to fall due February 1st of each succeeding year till all of said bonds should be paid for which bonds the said jail works should pay cash at par. On March 1, 1909, I. M. Meekins presented to the commissioners a written request from the Stewart Jail Works to turn over to him said $6,500 of bonds for them, stating that he would pay cash for the same. Meekins on that day paid the commissioners $500 in cash and gave his check for $6,000 on a bank in Norfolk, Va., which was paid on presentation. The bonds were left with the company treasurer till the check was paid, whereupon the bonds were duly delivered and are now held by an innocent purchaser for value. The $6,500 received for the bonds has been paid out from time to time to the contractors for building said jail.

On March 2, 1909, the General Assembly ratified an act (Laws 1909, c. 413) which prohibited the county of Tyrrell to contract for work on any public building without first advertising for bids, in the manner therein prescribed, and annulling the resolution of February 2d to issue the bonds, and prescribing that bonds for such purposes should be issued only with the approval of a commission named in the act.

It was within the power of the General Assembly to restrict the company commissioners in incurring debt even for necessary purposes (Burgin v. Smith, 151 N. C. 561, 66 S. E. 607); but the act ratified March 2, 1909, came too late so far as this transaction is concerned. A "jail" is a public necessity, and the county commissioners, in the absence of statutory restriction, had the power to make the contract of February 1st to build the same (Burgin v. Smith, supra; Vaughn v. Com'rs, 117 N. C. 432, 23 S. E. 354) and to issue bonds to raise money to pay for the work (Com'rs v. Webb, 148 N. C. 123, 61 S. E. 670). The contract for sale of bonds February 2, 1909, was valid, as the statute then stood. The bonds were in effect delivered March 1st, when the commissioners received part cash and part in a check. The bonds were held as the property of the purchaser, as security for payment of the check, which was paid on presentation.

Fraud vitiates everything; but none is alleged and proven in this case. The judge properly denied the motion for a restraining order and injunction.

Affirmed.

POWERS et al. v. BAKER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 41*)—RECORDED DEED—CLERICAL ERROR IN COPYING.

When a recorded deed purported to be acknowledged before "J. N., Nee and Deputy Consul General, U. S. A.," and it appears N. was at the time a "Vice and Deputy Consul General of U. S.," "Nee" must be held to be a clerical error in copying for "Vice."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 224; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 18*)—WHO MAY TAKE—CONSULAR OFFICERS—"CONSUL."

Rev. St. U. S. § 1674 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1149), in force in 1880 when a deed executed in London, England, was acknowledged before the United States "vice and deputy consul general," provided for "vice" and "deputy" consuls. Section 1750 (page 1196) conferred on every "consular officer" the "authority and powers of a notary public." Revisal 1906, § 1024, validates acknowledgments before "vice consuls and vice consuls general." Held, in view of the above, Code, § 1245 (4), which authorized such acknowledgments before "any ambassador, minister, consul or commercial agent of the U. S.," included any consul, whether consul, consul general, or vice consul or deputy consul.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 85; Dec. Dig. § 18;*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1480-1481.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 194*)—DEFECTS—CURATIVE STATUTES.

Statutes of the nature of Revisal 1905, § 1024, validating acknowledgments before consular officers, have always been within the power of the Legislature, though such statute would not be valid against a duly registered deed from the grantor, or a lien acquired against the grantor, before the validating act, but the validating of the probate of a deed would be good against a party not claiming under the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 548; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

4. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 6*)—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF WIFE—PRIVY EXAMINATION.

If there was a defect in the privy examination of the wife of grantor, she might, if she outlived him, claim her dower against a party claiming under the deed, but that would not concern a party not claiming under grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 51-53; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

5. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 164*)—GRANT—DESCRIPTION.

If land lay in a certain county when entered, and, on creation of a new county, lay in the latter when granted, the grant is not invalidated because, following the words of the entry, it describes it as being in the old county.

Appeal from Superior Court, Graham County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by Carolyn S. Powers and others against J. Q. Baker and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. No error.

Dillard & Bell, for appellants. A. D. Raby, T. A. Morphey, and Avery & Avery, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. The plaintiff claims title under a grant No. 3,993, issued in 1877 to Jos. L. Stickney, upon an entry No. 6,317, made by him February 23, 1857. Stickney conveyed to the plaintiff by deed executed January 1, 1880, in London, England. The first exception is that the execution of this deed purports to have been acknowledged before "Joshua Nunn, Nee and Deputy Consul General, U. S. A." "Nee" is clearly a clerical error in copying for "Vice," for the evidence shows that Nunn at that time was "Vice and Deputy Consul General of U. S.," in London. He signs himself in above capacity and "ex officio notary public." The judge of probate of Graham county adjudged that "the foregoing deed has been duly acknowledged" and ordered it to registration. Rev. St. U. S. § 1674 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1149), in force at that date, provides for "vice" and "deputy" consuls, and section 1750 (page 1196) confers upon every "consular officer" the "authority and powers of a notary public."

Code N. C. § 1245 (4), authorized such acknowledgments to be taken before "any ambassador, minister, consul or commercial agent of the U. S." This would seem to include any consul, whether consul, consul general or vice or deputy in view of the United States statute, supra, giving to every "consular officer" the authority and power of a notary public. It was so held in Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533; 1 A. & E. Enc. 506, note 1. But to make the matter sure, the curative statute (Laws 1905, c. 451, § 2, now Revisal 1905, § 1024) validates acknowledgments before "vice consuls and vice consuls general." Validating statutes of this nature have always been within the power of the General Assembly (Tatom v. White, 95 N. C. 453), though such statute would not be valid against a deed from the same grantor duly registered, or a lien acquired against the grantor, before the validating act (Barrett v. Barrett, 120 N. C. 127, 26 S. E. 691, 36 L. R. A. 226). But the validation of the probate of a deed from Stickney to the plaintiff would be good against the defendant, who does not claim under Stickney.

The second exception is that there is a defect in the privy examination of the wife of Stickney. If so, she might claim her dower against the plaintiffs if she outlived her husband, but that is a matter that does not concern the defendant. The land when entered was in Cherokee county. When granted it lay, as the jury finds, in Graham, because that county had been then cut off in 1872 from Cherokee. There is nothing irregular in this. Harris v. Norman, 96 N. C. 59, 2 S. E. 72, has no application. There the entry and surveys were of land in Watauga, when at the time of the entry and survey the land claimed lay in Mitchell and had never been in Watauga. The grant to Stickney is of "640 acres lying and being in the county of Cherokee, section No. — in district No. 6, warrant No. 6,317, it being part of the land lately acquired by treaty from the Cherokee Indians, and sold in obedience to an act of the General Assembly of this state, bounded as follows, viz.: Beginning on a Spanish oak and hickory and runs west with Mauney's lien three hundred and twenty poles to a stake at the corner of E. L. Morron's survey, thence north three hundred and twenty poles to a rock in Big Snow Bird creek, thence east three hundred and twenty poles to a cucumber, thence south to the beginning, as by the plat on file in the office of the Secretary of State." The court properly held that if in fact the land lay in Cherokee when entered and by reason of the creation of Graham county it lay in the latter county when granted, the fact that the grant, following the words of the entry, described the land as being in Cherokee would not invalidate the grant.

There was uncontradicted evidence that Big Snow Bird creek is entirely in Graham county, and evidence identifying the beginning corner and the location of the land, as claimed by the plaintiffs, but it was in evidence that district No. 6 is still in Cherokee. The plaintiffs contended that this was a mere clerical error for No. 9, in which district their evidence showed that the beginning corner and boundaries actually lay, which district is now in Graham. The court charged the jury: "Now, if you should find from the evidence from the time the survey was actually made that the corner of 6,317 was established at the point marked 'Hickory', and the other corners made as called for in the deed at that location, then it would be your duty to answer the third issue, 'Yes.'" The defendant's exception to this charge cannot be sustained. Higdon v. Rice, 119 N. C. 623, 26 S. E. 256, and cases there cited. In Houser v. Belton, 32 N. C. 358, 51 Am. Dec. 391, the jury were allowed to find that a corner which in the deed read "east" of a certain creek should have been written "west." Here the real contention was over the location of the land, and the jury, upon evidence and on a proper charge, have found the issue for the plaintiffs.

No error.

1. MORTGAGES (§ 90*)—NECESSITY OF REGISTRATION.

Although Revisal 1905, § 982, provides that a mortgage shall be a lien only from its registration as between the parties to a mortgage or deed, the instrument is valid without registration; and it is also valid as against the personal representative of the mortgagor.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 402*)—SALE OF PROPERTY—PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Under Revisal 1905, § 87, subd. 1, providing that debts of a decedent which by law have a specific lien on property are debts of the first class as to order of payment, an unregistered mortgage upon property of a decedent is a debt of the first class having a specific lien, with priority over all other classes of debt, and on a sale of the property by the mortgagor's administrator, after payment of a prior mortgage, the remaining proceeds should have been devoted to the payment of the unregistered mortgage, and not to other claims, after notice of the plaintiff's mortgage.

defendant, administrator, and the surety on his administration bond, a sum due by the defendant's intestate which was secured by a second mortgage on realty, which mortgage was unregistered at the date of the debtor's death, and remained so for some time after the order to sell the realty to make assets.

The appellant states in his brief: "The sole question before the court is: Will a mortgage not recorded till after the death of the mortgagor create a lien from the date of its registration as against other simple debts?" But in fact no subsequent registration is necessary. Revisal, § 982, provides that a mortgage shall be a lien only from its registration. But, as between the parties, a mortgage or deed is valid without registration. Wallace v. Cohen, 111 N. C. 103, 15 S. E. 892; Deal v. Palmer, 72 N. C. 582; Leggett v. Bullock, 44 N. C. 283. The personal representative stands in the shoes of his testator or intestate, and the unregistered mortgage has the same lien as it had between the parties. The mortgaged property brought enough to pay both mortgages over and above the costs of the sale. After paying off the costs of sale including defendant's commissions on the sale and the taxes on the mortgaged property, and the first mortgage, the surplus left should have applied to the lien of plaintiff's unregistered second mortgage. It was a specific lien with priority over all other classes of debt (Revisal, § 87 (1)) to the extent of the net proceeds of the realty covered by the mortgage. Jones on Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 509, Jones, Chattel Mortgages, § 239, which are cited with approval in Williams v. Jones, 95 N. C. 508; Hinkle v. Greene, 125 N. C. 489, 35 S. E. 554. It seems that the personal representative of the debtor applied the proceeds of the sale of the realty, after paying off the amount of the first mortgage, to other claims, after notice of the plaintiff's unregistered mortgage. He was evidently under the erroneous impression that, the plaintiff's mortgage being unregistered at the death of the mortgagor, the plaintiff had no specific lien. This was error.

The judgment below is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Watauga County; Council, Judge.

Action by W. L. Bryan against Chas. H. Cowles and another, executors of Calvin J. Cowles, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Plaintiff brought this action against C. J. Cowles, deceased, defendants' testator, before his decease, and after his death the present defendants qualified as his executors and were made parties. Plaintiff in first cause of action sues for $10,950, which he alleges is due him under a paper writing, dated February 13, 1897, and hereinafter set out on account of the alleged sale of the defendants' testator's timber lands; and in a second cause of action he sues for the same amount, which he alleges is due him upon the quantum meruit on account of alleged sale of said lands. Defendants denied any and all liability for plaintiff's claim. On the trial the jury rendered the following verdict: "In what sum, if any, are defendants indebted to the plaintiff? Answer: $5,000." Judgment on verdict for plaintiff, and defendants excepted and appealed.

Finley & Hendren, T. C. Bowie, and Manly & Hendren, for appellants. L. D. Lowe and T. A. Love, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. We have carefully considered the record and exceptions noted, and are of opinion that there has been no reversible error committed to defendants' prejudice.

It appeared that in 1903, 1904, and 1905, the testator, Calvin J. Cowles, had conveyed large bodies of mountain land, to wit, over 7,300 acres, to certain purchasers at an average price of $4 per acre; the amount received therefor being $29,364.40, and plaintiff claimed that these sales were brought about as result of plaintiff's labor and efforts, and under and by virtue of a special contract between plaintiff and defendant plaintiff was to have all the proceeds of said sale over and above $2.50 per acre net to the owner, C. J. Cowles; the amount of plaintiff's demand in this aspect of the case being something over $10,000. In case this claim is not established, plaintiff makes demand on a quantum meruit for services rendered in effecting said sales. The court submitted the claim to the jury in both aspects and on a single issue, and the jury, as stated, rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor for $5,000, for which judgment was entered.

On consideration of the testimony, we concur with defendants in the position that the plaintiff has failed to establish his claim made on the special contract. According to plaintiff, this phase of his demand was made to rest on a letter written by the testator to plaintiff, in reference to a sale of these lands, bearing date February 18, 1897, and in terms as follows: "Wilkesboro, N. C., February 18, 1897. W. L. Bryan, Esq.—Dear Sir: I am glad you contemplate a visit to Washington City to effect a sale of a large body of mountain land; and as I have property of that kind which I would like to find a market for, I authorize you to make sale of as much as six thousand acres, at not less than two and 50-100 dollars per acre, net; one and 25-100 dollars cash and one and 25-100 dollars on one, two and three years, bearing six per cent. interest, interest payable annually, and the deferred payments secured by mortgage on the land situated in Wilkes and Watauga counties and west of Lewis Creek Fork. I repeat the price per acre, which is to be two dollars and fifty cents, net. Of course, I give good titles; but to enable me to clear them of liens it may be necessary for the purchasers to advance money or to pay into the office a part of the above purchase money. Wishing you success, I am, respectfully, Calvin J. Cowles"—with evidence tending to show a sale after and in pursuance of authority contained in the letter.

Defendants, denying that plaintiff properly interpreted the letter, further offered in evidence two letters of later date in terms as follows:

"Wilkesboro, N. C., July 1, 1897. W. L. Bryan, Esq.—Dear Sir: Yours of the 12th ult. duly received. Nothing since from you. We are now four (4) months away from the period of your deal with Pennsylvania friends; and, so far as I can see, there is little if any progress to the goal. The money promised and so much needed. This is extremely discouraging. Being compelled to have money, I have concluded to throw my lands open to the first applicant. If you come first, you have it; but if others come first, with the cash or its equivalent, before you do, why, just let him have it. So you see where I stand. Land for sale. 'First come, first served.' I hope you will get it, but all depends on celerity. Respectfully yours, [Signed] Calvin J. Cowles."

"Wilkesboro, N. C., July 19, 1897. W. L. Bryan, Esq.—Dear Sir: Yours of 2d, 8d and — inst., to hand—three letters. So far, nobody has appeared amongst us with money to buy lands; and, speaking for myself, I repeat that I am open for a trade. You have doubtless been disappointed. This has led to disappointment all along the line. If your folks were here now, or if they beat the Dotson set, you will get my land; but I cannot extend the time only when the money is in sight. My necessities are too great to allow much lapse. S. J. G. and Absher have given H. an option of thirty days only. Yours truly, [Signed] Calvin J. Cowles."

And we are disposed to agree with defendants that if the letter relied on by plaintiff had amounted to the contract, as claimed by him, these subsequent letters written before any sale or contract or option looking to that end had been effected would have amounted to a revocation of the agreement; but we do not think that a proper construction of the first letter supports the plaintiff's position, that it was a binding agreement to allow plaintiff all over $2.50 that the lands might net defendant. It was simply an authority to sell at the price indicated, and if more was obtained, the increase was to inure to the owner's benefit, the plaintiff to be paid for what his services were worth, if such was the understanding and agreement of the parties in the light of all the attending facts and circumstances. We are of opinion, therefore, that his honor should not have submitted the plaintiff's demand to the jury in the aspect of a claim under and by virtue of a special contract. We do not think, however, that this should be held for reversible error, because it is perfectly plain, from a perusal of the testimony and the charge of the court and verdict, that this claim was rejected by the jury. The lands sold were over 7,000 acres at an admitted price of $4 per acre, and, if the jury had sustained plaintiff's demand on a general contract, the claim would have been not less than $10,000. The jury have, therefore, evidently awarded this verdict on the quantum meruit, and, unless there was error in submitting the claim in this phase of the matter, we do not think the result of the trial should be disturbed. Rhyne v. Rhyne, 151 N. C. 400, 68 S. E. 348.

There was abundant testimony to support such a claim. The evidence on the part of plaintiff tended to show that after the writing of the letter of February, 1897, the plaintiff was engaged for six years and over in the endeavor to effect a sale of these lands for testator; that he spent both time and money in such service, and that this was done with the full knowledge and approval of the testator; and that the sale was brought about by reason of plaintiff's labor and efforts to that end. This view of the case was submitted to the jury under a charge free from error, and their verdict is justified on the testimony and the familiar principle last stated in Winkler v. Killian, 141 N. C. 575, 54 S. E. 540, 115 Am. St. Rep. 694, as follows: "It is ordinarily true that where services are rendered by one person for another, which are knowingly and voluntarily accepted, without more, the law presumes that such services are given and received in expectation of being paid for, and will imply a promise to pay what they are reasonably worth."

There is no error disclosed in the record, and the judgment in plaintiff's favor is affirmed.

No error.

HARBISON v. ALLEN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 73*)—DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP — RELIEF EXCEEDING JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT.

A cause between citizens of different states, wherein plaintiff sought $2,000 damages and a permanent injunction to prevent his land from becoming "wholly worthless," is removable as a cause wherein the relief asked for exceeds the jurisdictional amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

2. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 116*)—EFFECT OF VALID PETITION—DISSOLUTION OF INJUNCTION.

On filing in apt time a valid petition, the court's jurisdiction is determined, and defendant's remedy, as to an injunction granted in the cause, is by motion in the federal court to dissolve it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; M. H. Justice, Judge.

Action by J. M. Harbison against W. H. Allen and others. Defendants' motion to remove the cause was refused, and they appeal. Reversed.

Avery & Ervin, for appellants. J. F. Spainhour, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. It was error to refuse the motion of the defendants to remove the cause to the United States Circuit Court. The petition and bond were filed in apt time. The court finds as a fact that the controversy is wholly between citizens of different states and wholly determinable between them. The court further finds that plaintiff, in his complaint, asks damages in the amount of $2,000 and a permanent injunction against defendants, and that defendants claim in their petition for removal that the granting of this injunction will deprive them of property to the amount of $3,000 over and above the $2,000 claimed by plaintiff for damages accrued. Upon these findings, defendants were entitled to a removal of the cause.

In Corp. Com. v. R. R., 135 N. C. 80, 47 S. E. 229, the court cites with approval, R. R. v. McConnell (C. C.) 82 Fed. 85, which lays down the rule in equity cases as to removals: "It is the value of the whole object of the suit to complainant which determines the amount in controversy."

In Ayers v. Watson, 113 U. S. 594, 5 Sup. Ct. 641, 28 L. Ed. 1068 (a case decided when the jurisdictional amount was $500 instead of $2,000, as now), Justice Bradley, for the court, says: "The plaintiff's petition demanded the recovery of the land and $500 damages. This was certainly a demand for more than $500, unless it can be supposed that the land itself was worth nothing at all, which will hardly be presumed. Sheriff v. Turner, 119 Fed. (C. C.) 231; R. R. v. Conningham (C. C.) 103 Fed. 708; Smith v. Bivins (C. C.) 56 Fed. 352."

In the case at bar the plaintiff seeks $2,000 damages and a permanent injunction. Plaintiff states in his complaint that, unless defendant is restrained, plaintiff's two tracts of land "will be rendered wholly worthless." He claims $2,000 for damages already done. That is as far as he could go without making his cause removable. But he goes further, and asks the benefit of a permanent injunction to prevent his lands from becoming "wholly worthless." If that relief is worth one penny, he has exceeded the jurisdictional amount, upon his own showing.

"Where a bill in equity is filed to abate a nuisance or to set aside a deed, or for a decree giving other mandatory or preventive relief, it is the value of the property of which the defendant may be deprived by the decree sought which is the test of jurisdiction, and not the claim of plaintiff alone." Baltimore v. Postal Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 502; 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 270.

"Where the object of a suit is to restrain the use of property by a party other than the owner, the right to use the property is the matter in dispute, and the value of such right determines the question of jurisdiction." Olson v. R. R. (C. C.) 44 Fed. 1.

"The sum or value of the matter in dispute which conditions the jurisdiction of a federal court is the amount or value of that which the complainant seeks to recover, or the amount or value of that which the defendant will lose if the complainant obtains the recovery he seeks." Cowell v. Water Co., 121 Fed. 53, 57 O. C. A. 393.

"It is conceded that the pecuniary value of the matter in dispute may be determined not only by the money judgment prayed, where such is the case, but in some cases by the increased or diminished value of the property directly affected by the relief, or by the pecuniary results to one of the parties immediately from the judgment." Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 174, 9 Sup. Ct. 569, 32 L. Ed. 895.

"Where property itself, or its title, is in litigation, or some question per se affecting its enjoyment and possession, its value is the real matter in controversy, as distinguished from the claim of the contending parties." 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 726.

"In a suit in equity for an injunction, the value of the matter in dispute is that of the object of the bill, namely, the value to the complainant of the right for which he prays protection, or the value to defendant of the acts of which plaintiff prays prevention, together with the amount of damages which plaintiff claims he has already sustained, and prays to have awarded to him." 84 Cyc. 1235; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 107, 17 Sup. Ct. 262, 41 L. Ed. 648.

The appellants ask that we also pass upon the exception for granting the injunction. But upon filing in apt time a valid petition to remove, the jurisdiction of the state court determined. The remedy of the appellants is by motion in the federal court to dissolve the injunction.

Reversed.

"H. L. Godwin. [Seal.]"

His honor submitted the following issues to the jury, which were responded to as set out: "(1) Did the plaintiff and the defendant Bud Tart execute the contract set out in the complaint? Answer: Yes. (2) Did Bud Tart, at the time of executing the said contract have sufficient mental capacity to make same? Answer: No. (3) If not, did the plaintiff have notice of said mental incapacity? Answer: Yes. (4) What was the value of said lot on the 17th day of June, 1902? Answer: $360. (5) What was the value of the improvements put on said land by H. L. Godwin? Answer: $1,000. (6) What was the annual rental value of the lands before the improvements were put upon it by the plaintiff? Answer: Nothing. (7) What was the annual rental value after the improvements were put upon it by the plaintiff? Answer: $100."

Upon the verdict, his honor rendered the following judgment: "This cause came on for trial at the November term, 1909, of the superior court of Harnett county, before W. R. Allen, judge, and a jury, and the jury having returned their verdict, as appears in the record, it is, upon said verdict and the admissions in the pleadings, considered and adjudged that the defendant Bud Tart is the owner in fee of the lot described in the complaint, and that he is entitled to recover possession thereof of the plaintiff, H. L. Godwin, upon the payment to him of the sum of one thousand dollars, the value of the improvements placed on said land by the plaintiff. And it further appearing to the court that the defendants still refuse to perform the contract referred to in the issue, and that they demand possession of said lot, it is further considered and adjudged that said sum of one thousand dollars is due to the plaintiff, H. L. Godwin, and the same is a lien on said lot, and, upon failure to pay the same within ninety days, it is ordered that the said lot be sold for the satisfaction thereof by N. A. Townsend and E. F. Young, now appointed commissioners for that purpose, who shall report their proceedings to this court. It is further ordered that each party pay his costs. Let the pleadings be amended, if so advised."

The plaintiff testified, over the objection of the defendant, that he had been in possession of the lot since June, 1902; that he knew Bud Tart had been in the asylum; that he returned to the asylum at Raleigh; that the building put by him on the lot cost him $475, not exceeding $500; that its rental value was $100 per year; that he had received the rents; that he had tendered the amount he was to pay to defendant Parker, as guardian of Bud Tart, and demanded a deed from him; that Parker declined to make the deed. Another witness for plaintiff testified that Bud Tart, at times, looked dangerous. The summons showed service on Dr. James McKee, superintendent of the State's Hospital at Raleigh, N. C., where Bud Tart was confined; the service was made June 17, 1905. There was evidence that the unimproved lot was worth, in June, 1902, from $300 to $400, and that it had since then increased in value. The defendant tendered the following judgment: "This cause coming on to be heard and being heard before his honor, W. R. Allen, and a jury, and the issues answered as follows (here follow the issues as set out above): It is now considered, ordered, and adjudged that the defendants, Bud Tart and his guardian, T. A. Parker, recover of the plaintiff, H. L. Godwin, the possession of the said land described in the complaint; and it is further ordered and decreed that the paper writing or contract referred to and set out in the complaint be canceled of record; and it is further adjudged that the plaintiff pay the costs of this action, to be taxed by the clerk."

To the judgment of the court, defendant excepted and appealed to this court.

E. F. Young and H. E. Norris, for appellant. Godwin & Townsend and J. C. Clifford, for appellee.

MANNING, J. In our opinion, the judgment of his honor is not supported by the adjudications of this court. The jury found that Bud Tart was insane at the time he attempted to contract with the plaintiff, and his insanity was known to the plaintiff. Upon a verdict establishing the same facts, this court, in Creekmore v. Baxter, 121 N. C. 31, 27 S. E. 994, said: "The first two issues found facts which constitute fraud in law. No other kind of fraud was charged in the pleadings; and the third issue, referring to actual fraud in fact, is neither necessary nor contradictory. It cannot be doubted that any one dealing with an insane person, knowing his insanity, deals with him at his own peril." "The ground upon which courts of equity interfere to set aside the contracts and other acts, however solemn, of persons who are idiots, lunatics, and otherwise non compos mentis, is fraud. Such persons being incapable, in point of capacity, to enter into any valid contract or to do any valid act, every person dealing with them, knowing their incapacity, is deemed to perpetrate a meditated fraud upon them and their rights." Story, Eq. Jur. § 227; Adams, Eq. 183; Odom v. Riddick, 104 N. C. 515, 10 S. E. 609, 7 L. R. A. 118, 17 Am. St. Rep. 686; In Sprinkle v. Wellborn, 140 N. C. 163, 52 S. E. 668, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 111 Am. St. Rep. 827, Mr. Justice Walker, speaking for this court, said: "If, therefore, one person induces another, who lacks this capacity or this freedom, to enter into an apparent contract, equity will not recognize the transaction, however, as one author says, it may be fenced by formal observances, but, deeming it fraudulent, will in proper cases afford relief against it at the suit of the party imposed upon. Fetter on Equity, 143. On this ground, the contracts of idiots, lunatics, and other persons non compos mentis are generally regarded, in a certain sense, as invalid. It has been said by many courts that the contracts of a lunatic, made after the fact of insanity has been judicially ascertained, are absolutely void, and that he can have no power to contract at all until there is reversal of the finding and he is permitted to resume control of his property. Fetter, Eq. 143; Odom v. Riddick, 104 N. C. 515 [10 S. E. 609, 7 L. R. A. 118, 17 Am. St. Rep. 686]." Beeson v. Smith, 149 N. C. 142, 62 S. E. 888. The plaintiff's evidence established the fact that the insanity of Bud Tart had been judicially ascertained, for it appeared that he had previously been committed to the State's Hospital for the care of the insane, and the verdict establishes the fact of his insanity at the time of the alleged contract, to the knowledge of the plaintiff. In Creekmore v. Baxter, supra, this court said: "Courts of equity always protect innocent purchasers as far as possible, and ordinarily place the parties back in statu quo, when it can be done without injury to either; but if any one contracts with a lunatic, knowing his insanity, he must bear alone whatever loss arises from the transaction." The evidence of the plaintiff himself shows, however, that a reversal of the judgment can work no loss or inequity to him; he has now had possession of the property for nearly eight years, at a rental of $100 per year, and the improvements put by him on the lot cost him, by his own evidence, $475. From this statement it clearly appears that the plaintiff will sustain no loss by the improvements placed by him upon the property. In no event is he entitled to betterments. It is our opinion that his honor should have signed the judgment tendered by the defendant, and that he was in error in signing the judgment tendered by plaintiff. We therefore reverse the judgment of his honor and direct judgment to be entered in accordance with this opinion, without liability to the plaintiff to further account for the rents and profits by him received to June 17, 1910, and without charge to the defendant for the taxes which may have been assessed against said property, and which are to be a charge against the plaintiff. The plaintiff will pay the costs of this action.

Reversed.

COORE v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 264*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—PLEADING—"MATERIAL VARIANCE."

A complaint by an injured brakeman alleged that the engineer negligently, and without any warning, applied the steam, and violently jerked the slack out of the train, causing plaintiff to miss his footing, whereby he was thrown between the cars, etc., and that when the engineer started the train he was working on top in the act of stepping from one car to another, and that as the train was started and the cars were jerked apart he fell between them and was injured. Held, that there was no variance between the complaint and evidence that the engineer started the train at a high rate of speed, and that if there was it was immaterial, in view of Revisal 1905, § 515, providing no variance shall be deemed material unless the adverse party is actually misled to his prejudice in suing on the merits.

2. PLEADING (§ 398*)—MATERIAL VARIANCE—PROOF OF BEING MISLED—NECESSITY.

Under Revisal 1905, § 515, providing that a party claiming to have been misled by a variance in maintaining his case on the merits shall prove that fact and in what respect he has been so misled, the variance will be deemed immaterial in the absence of such proof.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 137*)—INJURY TO BRAKEMAN—NEGLIGENCE OF CONDUCTOR OR ENGINEER—RECOVERY THEREOF.

If a conductor orders a brakeman to go up on the cars, release the brakes, and signal to the engineer when to start, and while he is performing this duty the engineer moves the train in obedience to a signal from the conductor, and the brakeman is thereby thrown from a car and injured as the proximate result of the negligence of the conductor or engineer, he may recover therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by Thos. J. Coore against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Douglas & Lyon and H. F. Seawell, for appellant. Walter H. Neal and U. L. Spence, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by him while engaged in the performance of his duties as a brakeman in the service of the defendant. The plaintiff alleged that he was ordered by the conductor to go up on the freight cars, which were coupled to an engine, for the purpose of giving a signal to the engineer to start the train, and of attending to his other duties. That when he was on the top of one of the cars, and about to step to another car, the engineer, without any signal or warning from him, but after receiving a signal from the conductor to go ahead, suddenly and negligently started the train and violently jerked out the slack, which caused him to fall as he was passing from one car to the other. There was evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant. The plaintiff, when testifying in his own behalf, was permitted by the court to state that "the engineer started off at a high rate of speed—quick start." The defendant objected to this testimony upon the ground that it is not alleged in the complaint that the engineer started the train at a high rate of speed. The allegation of the complaint is that the engineer suddenly, negligently, carelessly, and without any signal or warning to the plaintiff, applied the steam to the engine and violently jerked the slack out of the said train, pulling the cars further apart, and causing the plaintiff to miss his footing, and thereby he was thrown between the said cars and seriously injured. It is further alleged that, at the time the train was started by the engineer, the plaintiff was walking along the running board on the top of the car, and was in the act of stepping on the running board of the car immediately in the rear, which was coupled to the one upon which he was walking, and that as the train was started and the cars were jerked apart he fell between them and was injured.

It is provided by Revisal 1905, §§ 515, 516, as follows: "No variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof shall be deemed material, unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action upon the merits. Whenever it shall be alleged that a party has been so misled, that fact shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court, and in what respect he has been misled; and thereupon the judge may order the pleading to be amended upon such terms as shall be just.

Where the variance is not material as provided in the preceding section, the judge may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment without costs."

We do not think there was any substantial variance between the allegation of the complaint and the proof. If there was any variance at all, it was immaterial, and, if material, the defendant did not comply with the requirements of the sections in the Revisal to which we have referred. There was, though, no variance, as it clearly appears by the allegation in the complaint and the proof that the plaintiff was injured before the train had acquired any speed, and that his fall between the cars was caused by the sudden and unexpected movement of the train, which jerked the cars apart. This exception is without any merit.

The court permitted the plaintiff, as a witness, in his own behalf, to testify that he was acting carefully when he stepped from the one car to the other, but afterwards withdrew this testimony from the consideration of the jury. The defendant duly excepted to the testimony, but the withdrawal of the same cured the error of the court, if any was committed. Bridgers v. Dill, 97 N. C. 225, 1 S. E. 767; Cowles v. Lovin, 135 N. C. 488, 47 S. E. 610.

The defendant requested the court to charge the jury that the defendant, upon the allegations of the complaint and proof, is not liable for a sudden, violent, or careless jerk of the train, nor for a jerk without a signal, unless the same was necessary in the handling of the train, there being no evidence that it was unnecessary. We think the instruction was substantially given by the court, except in the following respect: The court charged the jury that if the engineer should not have started the train without a signal from the plaintiff, and he did start it and jerked the cars apart, so that the plaintiff was thrown between the cars and engine, and if the jury should further find that the act of the engineer was the proximate cause of the injury, they should answer the first issue, "Yes;" and if they did not find the facts to be as above stated, they should answer the issue, "No." If the conductor ordered the plaintiff to go up on the cars, release the brakes, and signal to the engineer when to start the train, and while the plaintiff was in the performance of his duty the engineer moved the train in obedience to a signal from the conductor, who had given the order to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was thereby thrown from the car and injured, as the proximate result of the negligent act of the conductor or the engineer, we are unable to see why the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. Redman v. Railroad, 150 N. C. 400, 64 S. E. 195; Railroad v. Murray, 55 Kan. 336, 40 Pac. 646.

It is unnecessary to consider the other exceptions, as some of them were withdrawn, and those remaining have been sufficiently considered and disposed of by what we have already said.

No error.

HIGHWAY COMMISSION OF VALLEY-TOWN TP. v. C. A. WEBB & CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. TOWNS (§ 52*)—PUBLIC ROADS—BONDS—POWER TO ISSUE.

Under Laws 1905, c. 210, as amended by Laws 1909, c. 237, authorizing the highway commission of Valleytown township to improve the public roads of the township, and to issue bonds of the township not exceeding $25,000 to pay necessary expenses, the commission has no power to issue bonds in addition to the $25,000 without the special approval of the Legislature.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 72*)—INDEBTEDNESS—NECESSARY EXPENSES—TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

While the special approval of the Legislature is not required to enable a municipality to contract a debt for necessary expenses, the Legislature may prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such a debt, or any other debt, may be incurred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Submitted controversy by the Highway Commission of Valleytown Township against C. A. Webb & Co. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dillard & Bell and T. H. Calvert, for appellant.

WALKER, J. This case was submitted to the court below as a controversy without action, under the statute, to determine the validity of certain bonds proposed to be issued by the plaintiff, and which the defendants had contracted to purchase. They refused to pay for the bonds upon the ground that the plaintiff had no power to issue them, and that, therefore, when issued, they would be invalid. It appears from the case agreed that the plaintiff was incorporated by the Public Acts of 1905, c. 210, and was vested with all the powers, rights, duties, and authority of the board of county commissioners, with respect to the public roads of Valleytown township. By the acts of 1909, c. 237, the plaintiff was authorized to improve and macadamize the public roads of the said township, and for that purpose it was authorized to issue coupon bonds of the township "for an amount sufficient, not exceeding $25,000, to pay the necessary expenses of constructing and improving and macadamizing the public roads in the township, and to sell the same publicly or privately, at not less than their par value." Bonds to the amount of $25,000 were issued in accordance with the terms and provisions of the act of 1909, and were sold by the commission, and the proceeds applied in constructing, improving, and macadamizing the public roads in the township, but it was found that the amount realized from the sale of the bonds, namely, $25,000, was not sufficient to carry out the scheme of improvement contemplated by the commission. It was thereupon decided that additional bonds be issued, to an amount not exceeding $75,000, and the defendants contracted to buy the same. The question, therefore, is whether the commission has the power, under the law, to issue any additional bonds without the special approval of the Legislature. This question has been so recently decided, after a thorough investigation and full discussion by this court, that it would seem to be now well settled that no such power resides in the commission. While the expense of improving and macadamizing the public roads may be conceded, for the sake of argument, to be a necessary expense, we held in Wadsworth v. Concord, 133 N. C. 587, 45 S. E. 948, that wherever the debt of a municipality is to be incurred, even for a necessary expense, it is within the province of the Legislature to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which municipal corporations may enter into a contract, by which such a debt is incurred. This principle was approved in Davis v. Fremont, 135 N. C. 538, 47 S. E. 671. We recognized the correctness of the principle in the case of Wharton v. Greensboro, 149 N. C. 62, 62 S. E. 740. In the recent case of Burgin v. Smith, 151 N. C. 561, 66 S. E. 607, the subject was fully discussed by Mr. Justice Manning, and it was held by the court that where the right to incur a debt, even for a necessary expense, was limited to a certain amount by an act of the Legislature, that amount could not be exceeded where the contract was an entire one, and we further held that the Legislature had the constitutional power to restrict or limit the amount of indebtedness to be incurred by a county or municipality, even for a necessary expense. The court cited and approved Hightower v. Raleigh, 150 N. C. 569, 65 S. E. 279, in which we held that, "while it is within the province of the court to determine what are necessary public buildings, and what classes of expenditure fall within the definition of necessary expenses of a municipal corporation, the authority for determining the kind of building which is needed, or what would be a reasonable cost for it, is not within the purview of the judicial authority, but is vested in the Legislature and the municipal authorities, and not in the courts." We have held at this term, in Ellison v.

Williamston, 67 S. E. 255, that the Legislature has the power to restrict the authority of a municipality to issue bonds. The case of Burgin v. Smith, was approved, and it was said by Mr. Justice Hoke, when referring to the previous decisions of this court upon the question now presented, that where the limit as to the amount of bonds is fixed by the Legislature in the act authorizing them to be issued by the municipality, the latter cannot exceed that limit without further legislative sanction. It may be said generally that in all such cases the Legislature has plenary power to control the action of the municipalities in this state in the creation of any indebtedness, even for necessary expenses, and there is nothing in the Constitution which is in conflict with this statement of the law. When that instrument is read as a whole, it appears to have been the intention that the Legislature should have complete control and authority in such matters. We do not mean to say that the special approval of the General Assembly is required in order that a municipality may contract a debt for necessary expenses, but only to decide that where the Legislature does take action and restrict the right of a municipality to contract a debt, even for necessary expenses, by limiting the indebtedness to a certain amount, it is only exercising power which is clearly recognized by the Constitution. There was no error in the ruling of the court, by which its decision was given against the plaintiff upon the case agreed.

Affirmed.

WELLS et al. v. BOARD OF COMRS OF CHEROKEE COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 118*)—DAMAGES—ACTION—NATURE—MONEY DEMAND.

A suit to compel county commissioners to pay damages caused by laying out a road improvement is one to enforce a money demand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

2. HIGHWAYS (§ 118*)—ESTABLISHMENT—DAMAGES—LIABILITY.

Acts 1905, c. 210, providing for the government of the roads of a particular township by a special commission, exempts the township from the general road law, including the provision of Revisal 1905, § 2885, making damages assessed for new roads a county charge; and hence the remedy to recover damages assessed is against the township road officers, and not against the county commissioners.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Ferguson, Judge.

Mandamus suit by H. N. Wells and others against the Board of Commissioners of Cherokee County. From a judgment for defendant, petitioners appeal. Petition dismissed.

Upon the hearing his honor rendered the following judgment:

"In the above-entitled case the summons was made returnable to August term of the superior court. See summons. An alternative mandamus issued returnable on second Monday in August, being the first day of said term, commanding the board of commissioners to pay, or cause to be paid, the several sums of the respective petitioners, or show cause why they did not. It appears from the statute creating the highway commission of Valletown township and the petition filed herein that the proceedings were regular, and that the jury assessed the damages as claimed by the respective petitioners, and that the report of the jury was confirmed by the said highway commission of Valletown township, and that demand has been made on the board of commissioners for payment of the respective sums assessed as damages, and payment refused. On the call of the petition for hearing the respondents did not answer, but moved the court to transfer the case to the appearance or summons docket, to be tried as other civil actions. This motion was based on the contention that the suit was for a money demand. With light before the court, the motion of the board of county commissioners was granted and the petitioners excepted. The board of commissioners filed a demurrer to the petition. After argument it was agreed by and between counsel that the judge should take the papers and review the former ruling as well as to render judgment on the demurrer and render his decision out of term.

"I am of the opinion: That the statute creating the highway commission is authorized by the Constitution. That, so far as appears from the petition, the proceedings were regular and damages assessed just. I regard the report of the jury laying off the roads and assessing the damage, and the confirmation of the report of the highway commission of equal and no greater force than the report of a jury appointed by the board of commissioners under section 2685 of Revisal of 1905. That in neither instance is the county or individual bound by the report but the same is subject to review by the board of county commissioners. That said board may allow the claim for damages as reported, or may increase or decrease the damages as awarded, or disallow it altogether, and from such order the individual may appeal to the superior court if so advised, or taxpayer of the county, by making himself a party to the action, may appeal to the superior court. This being my view of the law and method of procedure, I sustain the demurrer, and adjudge that the petitioners pay the cost of the proceeding. The petitioners, if so advised, have leave to formally present the report to the board of commissioners of Cherokee county, take such other course as to them may seem most advisable."

Dillard & Bell, for appellants. Ben Posey and W. M. Axley, for appellee.

BROWN, J. As we construe the act to improve the public roads in Valletown township, in Cherokee township, Cherokee county (chapter 210, Acts 1905), this proceeding cannot be maintained. We agree with his honor that the mandamus is sought to enforce a money demand, but, in our opinion it is not a money demand payable from the general funds of Cherokee county, and a mandamus will not lie against its board of commissioners to compel payments.

The aforesaid act created a body corporate under the name of the highway commission of Valletown township, and gave to such commission complete jurisdiction over the roads of that township, including the laying out of new roads as well as the repair and maintenance of all roads. The act provides for the election of commissioners by the justice of the peace of the township and also for the appointment of a secretary and treasurer. It also provides that all road taxes for Valletown township in the hands of the sheriff be paid over to such treasurer, and that all moneys arising from taxes in that township levied for road purposes be kept separate to be expended upon the roads of the township. Section 4 of the act provides: "The treasurer of said highway commission shall make payments out of the road funds belonging to said township only upon the written order signed by the president and secretary of the commission." It is contended that by section 2685 of the Revisal of 1905 the damages assessed on account of laying out public roads are deemed and made a county charge. That is true under the general road law, but Valletown township has a road law of its own which exempts it from the general road law of the state.

Under that law, the remedy of petitioners is to be had by proceedings against that corporate body and treasurer thereof.

Petition dismissed.

FORTUNE v. HUNT et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. DEEDS (§ 129*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTEREST CONVEYED.

A deed stated that in consideration of $800 the grantor conveyed the property specified to the grantee named, who was the widow of the grantor's son, "during her widowhood, then to her children, the heirs of" said son. The grantor warranted the premises to said grantee during her lifetime or widowhood, then to the said heirs of her husband (the grantor's son) forever, in the following manner, to wit, William Hunt is to pay $50 to E. S. Hunt, $50 to John Hunt, and $5 to Collace Hunt, and to the heirs of my daughter Elizabeth Hunt, namely, Alsaline and Sarah Hunt, $50. The above obligation being filled, the lands above described to belong to William Hunt and his heirs, forever." Held, that the deed should be construed as giving the widow a life estate, with remainder in fee to her children who were the children of the grantor's son, and as charging the interest of one of the children, William Hunt, with the payment of $155.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 984*)—ORDERS REVIEWABLE—TAXATION OF COSTS.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1268 (7), providing that all costs and expenses in partition proceedings, whether by sale or actual division, shall be taxed against either party or apportioned among the parties in the discretion of the court, taxation of costs in partition proceedings is irreviewable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Action by Mrs. M. E. Fortune against Hal Hunt and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 149 N. C. 358, 63 S. E. 82.

J. M. Carson, for appellants. McBrayer & McBrayer, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is a petition for partition, transferred upon "issue of title" joined to the superior court. The deed executed in 1870 recites that in consideration of $800 the grantor conveys the property to "Elizabeth Hunt" (who was the widow of grantor's son, Alferia Hunt) "during her widowhood, then to her children, the heirs of said Alferia Hunt." Said children took "as heirs" in fee simple, for in the warranty clause the grantor warrants the premises to "said Elizabeth Hunt during her lifetime or widowhood, then to the said heirs of her husband, Alferia Hunt, forever, in the following manner, to wit: William Hunt is to pay $50 to E. S. Hunt, $50 to John Hunt, $5 to Collace Hunt, and to the heirs of my daughter Elizabeth Hunt, namely Alsaline and Sarah Hunt, $50. The above obligation being filled the lands above described to belong to William Hunt and his heirs, forever."

It will be noted that the life tenant paid $800. It is to be presumed that the remainder, given by the grantor to his grandchildren, was worth much more. It is unreasonable to suppose that the grant to them in the conveying clause is revoked by the warranty clause, or that immediately after the warranty clause warrants the premises to "the heirs of Alferia Hunt, forever," it should immediately deprive them of it in favor of William Hunt upon payment by him to Collace Hunt of $5, on payment to A. W. Hunt of nothing, on payment to Elizabeth Hunt of $50, and $50 to her daughters. It is true that the warranty clause says that on payment of above sums "the lands above described to belong to William Hunt and his heirs, forever." But this is strictly construed, au pied du lettre, it gave to William Hunt the life estate of the widow as well as all the five shares of the remaindermen. This would contradict the entire conveying clause and all the first part of the warranty clause, both of which gave the land to the mother for life with remainder to the five "heirs." The true meaning is, of course, that upon payment by William of the $155 William Hunt's interest in the lands as already "described" is to go to him. The grantor was evidently charging his share with said $155, which $155 it is not even claimed that he has ever paid, though the deed was made 40 years ago, and the other heirs have not sought to make him pay it, even now. Had the clause meant to cancel all the previous parts of the deed, William and his heirs are barred by the delay for 40 years to pay the $155 and take the property.

We think his honor correctly held that this conveyance was to the widow for life, with remainder to the five children named, "heirs of Alferia" (the deceased son of grantor) in fee simple, and one of them (John) being dead without issue, and, the life tenant being lately deceased, the proceeds of the sale were properly decreed to be divided into four shares, the heirs, or assignees, of each of the four taking one-fourth, as recited in the judgment. The recital in the warranty does not vitiate the conveying clause. It was a crude attempt to charge William Hunt's share with payment of the sundry amounts set out, but there is no judgment charging said sums and neither side excepts. If there are repugnant clauses in a deed, the first will control. Wilkins v. Norman, 139 N. C. 40, 51 S. E. 797, 111 Am. St. Rep. 767.

Revisal 1905, § 1268 (7), provides that "all costs and expenses" in partition proceedings, whether by sale or actual division, shall be "taxed against either party or apportioned among the parties, in the discretion of the court." The taxation of costs is therefore irreviewable. The judgment is, in all respects, affirmed.

Action by W. J. Brookshire against the Asheville Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and action dismissed.

Martin & Wright, for appellant. Craig, Martin & Thomason, for appellee.

BROWN, J. This action was brought to recover damages from the defendant on account of an alleged injury to plaintiff while working for defendant in the capacity of lineman, while defendant was engaged in the business of operating a street railway and "putting up and taking down telegraph and telephone poles and wires."

1. While possibly not necessary to a decision of this case, yet we deem it proper to say for future guidance that we approve the opinion in Hemphill v. Lumber Co., 141 N. C. 487, 54 S. E. 420, and regard it as settled in this state that the fellow-servant act (Revisal 1905, § 2646) applies to street railways.

2. We are, however, of opinion that there is no sufficient evidence of negligence in the record, and that the motion to nonsuit should have been sustained. The only witnesses examined were the plaintiff and his brother, Jim Brookshire, and their evidence tends to prove that the injury to plaintiff was the result of an accident that ordinary prescience could not foresee nor ordinary care guard against. They, with four others, were engaged in unloading large poles from a car, and placing them in position for use on defendant's line. One pole rolled into the edge of the lake at Riverside Park. In getting it out, Williams and Wilson "were toting on left-hand side of pole," plaintiff and King on right-hand side, and Jim Brookshire and Reagan were "toting the tip end of the pole." There is no substantial difference in the testimony of the two witnesses. Jim Brookshire testified that "the pole was lying up along the side of the lake, and we started to 'tote' the pole up the lake, and we all reached down to get it up, and Mr. Wilson and Mr. Williams were so much taller than my brother and Mr. Lon King, and that threw most of the weight on them, and the pole gave a kind of turn, and let my brother and Mr. Lon King drop down a little, and we started off with the pole, and Mr. Wilson said, 'Jeff, come up with the pole,' and Jeff straightened up, and my brother said, 'Let it down, boys; I am hurt.'" The court below should have sustained the motion to nonsuit, and it is so ordered. Reversed, and action dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Justice, Judge.

Action by W. A. Hipp against the Champion Fibre Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action to recover damages for alleged negligence of defendant company causing physical injury to plaintiff. There was evidence tending to show that plaintiff, one of a squad of hands engaged in moving a lot of economizers, in shape something like a steam radiator, each weighing not less than 2,000 pounds, had his hand seriously hurt by reason of a negligent order given by Ben Wright, who was foreman in charge of the work. The testimony on part of plaintiff tended to show that Ben Wright at the time was in the position of vice principal of de-defendant company. This was denied by defendant, and the alleged negligence was also denied, and evidence offered in support of both positions.

The jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Was the defendant, Champion Fibre Company, a corporation at the date of plaintiff's injury? Answer: Yes; by consent.

"(2) Was the plaintiff, W. A. Hipp, injured by the negligence of the defendant, Champion Fibre Company, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $750."

Judgment on the verdict for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Martin & Wright, for appellant. Craig, Martin & Thomason, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). We find no reversible error in the record. Defendant is correct in the position taken that our statute, abolishing what is known as the "fellow-servant doctrine," applies only to railroads, and therefore does not affect the questions presented on this appeal. Under a proper charge, however, the jury have necessarily found that by reason of authority expressly conferred the foreman, Ben Wright, was acting on this occasion as vice principal of defendant company, and the position referred to therefore becomes no longer of moment.

On this question of vice principal the court, among other things, charged the jury as follows: "Now it is contended by the defendant that Ben Wright was a mere foreman, having charge and direction of the work simply and laying out the work and controlling the hands simply in doing the work, that then he would be a fellow servant, and the corporation would not be liable for his negligence. In order to establish the relation between the corporation and Ben Wright of middleman or alter ego, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show by the greater weight of the evidence that the foreman, Ben Wright, occupied the position of the company in this respect, and that he had the right to give the order and to force obedience to it. Not necessarily that he had the right to hire hands and to discharge them, but that he had the power to command them, and that they understood that it was their duty to obey him, and if he had the right to report and procure their discharge, or firing of the hands, why that would be the same as if he could discharge them himself, and if they understood and he understood that that relation did exist, and the relation really did exist between them, that he occupied the position of the company in the direction of the work, and that he had the power to report and bring about their discharge, why, then he would be the alter ego." There was evidence on the part of plaintiff requiring an expression on this view of the case, and the charge is in substantial accord with the position of this court on the subject, as expressed in Turner v. Lumber Co., 119 N. C. 387, 26 S. E. 23, and in which it was held as follows: "The test of the question whether one in charge of other servants is to be regarded as a fellow servant or vice principal is whether those who act under his orders have just reason for believing that neglect or disobedience of orders will be followed by dismissal." Considering the case in this aspect, that the foreman was vice principal of defendant company, we think there was ample evidence requiring that the question of actionable negligence should be submitted to the jury. The testimony on the part of plaintiff tended to show, and this the jury have accepted, that plaintiff, with a lot of hands, under the charge and direction of Ben Wright, the foreman and vice principal, were engaged in moving from a higher to a lower level a lot of economizers, weighing each not less than 2,000 pounds, and in shape something like a steam radiator. It was not a work of an ordinary kind, simple in its nature and placing, involving the principles applied in Dunn's Case, 151 N. C. 313, 66 S. E. 134, or in House's Case, 67 S. E. 981, or Brookshire's Case, at the present term,¹ but to do it properly, and in safety, required careful management and supervision. The method pursued in the present case was for some of the hands to push the implement to the edge of the higher platform until it was nearly on a balance, and then, when the skids were placed by other hands, it was toppled over onto the skids, and allowed to slide to the lower level. The hands who were shoving the economizer were not in a position to see those who were placing the skids, and in the present instance the foreman, who was standing to one side and in a position to see and observe both, and charged with the duty of giving careful directions, ordered the plaintiff and another hand to place the skids, and, before they could step back he ordered the men on the upper platform to shove the economizer forward onto the skids, and plaintiff's hand was thereby caught and injured.

The jury, we think, were well justified in finding this to be a negligent order, and the case is one very similar to that of Wade v. Contracting Co., 149 N. C. 177, 62 S. E. 919.

On the facts established by the verdict, this authority is decisive against defendant.

There is no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Union County; W. J. Adams, Judge.

Action by John H. Richardson against Sarah A. Richardson and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Stack and J. J. Parker, for appellant. Adams, Jerome & Armfield, for appellees.

WALKER, J. This is an action for waste, alleged to have been committed by the defendant, who is the owner of a life estate in the land, by virtue of a devise contained in the will of her husband, John Richardson, which is as follows: "I give and devise to my beloved wife three hundred and ninety-six acres of land, more or less, it being the home place whereon I now live, to have and to hold during her lifetime, and at her death I will and direct that lot No. 1 (as I have already divided it), containing 208½ acres, more or less, shall descend to and belong to John Richardson, son of S. J. Richardson, during his lifetime, and at his death the said land shall belong to his children, if he shall leave any living, and in case he shall leave no living children at his death, in that event said land shall belong to his brothers, viz.: James Richardson, Lathan Richardson, Eli Richardson and Frank Richardson." The action is brought by John Richardson, son of S. J. Richardson, to whom a life estate in remainder was devised in the said will, to take effect at the death of Sarah A. Richardson, the widow. There was a limitation over at the death of the said John Richardson to his children. It is contended by the defendant that the plaintiff cannot maintain this action, as, by the will of John Richardson, he acquired only a contingent remainder, and it is conceded that an action for waste cannot be brought by a contingent remainderman, but, for the protection of his right or interest, he must resort to the remedy by injunction. Latham v. Lumber Co., 139 N. C. 9, 51 N. E. 780, 111 Am. St. Rep. 764.

The only question which we deem it necessary to discuss and decide is whether the plaintiff, John Richardson, by the terms of the will, acquired a vested or a contingent remainder. There are, according to Mr. Fearne, four kinds of contingent remainders: (1) Where the remainder depends entirely on a contingent determination of the preceding estate itself, as if A. makes a feoffment to the use of B. till C. returns from Rome, and after such return of C. then to remain over in fee. Here the particular estate is limited to determine on the return of C. and only on that determination of it is the remainder to take effect, but that is an event which possibly may never happen, therefore the remainder which depends entirely upon the determination of the preceding estate by it is contingent. (2) The second kind of contingent remainder is where some uncertain event, unconnected with and collateral to the determination of the preceding estate, is by the nature of the limitation to precede the remainder. Thus, as Lord Coke says, if a lease for life be made to A., B., and C., and if B. survives C., then the remainder to B. and his heirs. Here the want of B.'s surviving C. does not affect the determination of the particular estate; nevertheless, it must precede and give effect to B.'s remainder, but, as such an event is dubious, the remainder is contingent. In the contingent remainders which fall under this head, the event which makes them contingent does not in any way depend on the manner in which the particular estate determines, as, whether it determines in one manner or another, the remainder takes place equally. This distinguishes them from the first sort. (3) The third kind of contingent remainder is where it is limited to take effect upon an event which, though it certainly must happen some time or other, yet may not happen until after the determination of the particular estate. For it is a rule of law that a remainder must vest, either during the continuance of the particular estate or at the very instant of its determination. So that if the event does not happen during the continuance of the particular estate, the remainder becomes void. Thus, if a lease be made to A. for his life, and after the death of B. remainder to another in fee, this remainder is contingent, for though B. must die some time or other, yet he may survive A., by whose death the particular estate will determine and the remainder become void. (4) The fourth kind of contingent remainder is where it is limited to a person not ascertained, or not in being at the time when such limitation is made. Thus, if a lease be made to one for life, the remainder to the right heirs of A. Now there can be no such person as the right heir of A. until his death, for nemo est hæres viventis, and A. may not die until after the determination of the particular estate; therefore, such remainder is contingent. Again, where an estate is limited to two persons during their joint lives, the remainder to the survivor of them in fee, such remainder is contingent because it is uncertain which of them will survive.

Vested remainders, or remainders executed, are those by which the present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in the future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person, after the particular estate is spent. The person entitled to a vested remainder has an immediate fixed right of future enjoyment, that is, an estate in present, though it is only to take effect in possession and pendency of the profits at a future period, and such an estate may be transferred, aliened, and charged, much in the same manner as an estate in possession, as distinguished from one which is vested in interest. The remainder is said to be contingent when it is limited to take effect on an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding particular estate, in which case, as we have shown, such remainder never can take effect. 1 Greenleaf's Cruise on Real Property (2d. Ed.) p. 703 et seq.

In 1 Fearné on Remainders (Ed. of 1845) p. 216, he thus states and illustrates the difference between a vested and a contingent remainder: "It is not the uncertainty of ever taking effect in possession that makes a remainder contingent; for to that, every remainder for life or in tail is and must be liable; but the remainderman may die, or die without issue, before the death of the tenant for life. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a vested remainder from one that is contingent. For instance, if there be a lease for life to A., remainder to B. for life, here the remainder to B. is vested, although it may possibly never take effect in possession, because B. may die before A., yet, from the very instant of its limitation, it is capable of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to fall by the death of A.; it is therefore vested in interest, though perhaps the interest so vested may determine, by B.'s death, before the possession he waits for may become vacant." In commenting upon this passage from Mr. Fearné, this court, in a very able and learned opinion by Chief Justice Shepherd in Starnes v. Hill, 112 N. C. 1, 16 S. E. 1011, 22 L. R. A. 598, thus qualified or explained the language of Mr. Fearné: "In support of the plaintiff's contention, we are referred to the principle laid down by Mr. Fearné (supra, 217) in a passage which has often been quoted in textbooks and judicial opinions, but seldom accompanied with the explanation of the learned author in its immediate connection. Id. 216, 217. The language is as follows: 'The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a vested remainder from one that is contingent.' It is urged that, inasmuch as the death of Madara J. (his wife) is an event which must happen, and as R. O. Patterson is a person in esse, the latter would have the capacity of taking the possession should the preceding estate of the said Madara J. be presently determined by her death, and therefore, under the foregoing rule, his estate would be a vested remainder. The fallacy of the argument may be found in the failure to observe that at common law the particular estate may be determined during the lifetime of its tenant (as by forfeiture or surrender, Fearné, supra, 217; Tiedeman, Real Prop. 401; 4 Kent, Com. 254), in which case it is entirely clear that the remainder to R. O. Patterson would be defeated, because the event upon the happening of which his interest was to vest, to wit, the survival of his wife, would not have transpired during the continuance of the particular estate (Fearné, 217; 2 Minor, Inst. 170, 171), and it is common learning that the contingency must happen during the continuance of the particular estate or eo instanti it determines. 2 Blk. Com. 168."

In the case we are now considering, the plaintiffs seek, by their action, not only to recover damages for the waste alleged to have been committed, but to have the life estate of Mrs. Sarah A. Richardson, the widow of John Richardson, declared to have been forfeited by reason of the waste so committed by her. In other words, we have presented practically and in concrete form the very example which is given by Chief Justice Shepherd in the case to which we have just referred. It is true that there the remainder could not vest in interest, or even in possession, unless R. O. Patterson survived his wife, and this, by its very nature, was a contingent event, but we do not perceive how any reasonable or practical distinction can be made between a case where the survivorship of one party by another is required to vest the remainder in interest and possession, and one where the remainder is limited to take effect, not generally after a life estate, but at the death of another. In this case the court entered a judgment of nonsuit at the close of the evidence and on motion of the defendant, but suppose this ruling had been just the reverse of what it was at the trial, and the court had entered judgment, not only for the damages assessed by the jury, but for a forfeiture of the life estate of the widow. Under the Statute of Gloucester (8 Edw. I), which we have adopted (Revisal 1905, § 858), it would follow that the life estate would have determined before the happening of the event, namely, the death of the widow, upon which the remainder was to vest in the plaintiff. The widow would have lost her life estate as the plaintiff would have recovered the place wasted, by virtue of the statute, but the interest in, and the possession of, the land would have vested in him under the judgment of the court declaring a forfeiture of the life estate, and not by virtue of the terms of the will, as it is evident the testator intended that the plaintiff should have no vested interest in the land until the death of the widow, and that intention of the testator must prevail. We have a case, therefore, where the life estate may be determined or destroyed before the happening of the event upon which the estate is limited to the plaintiff in remainder, and, if we follow the rule as laid down in Starnes v. Hill, we must hold that the remainder to the plaintiff was contingent, and therefore, that he cannot maintain this action.

Where an estate is limited to A. for life with remainder to B. for life, and there is a forfeiture or surrender of the first life estate, it determines, and the estate in remainder becomes immediately vested, as there is nothing in the limitation to prevent its vesting at once. But in our case, if the first life estate is determined by forfeiture, surrender, or otherwise, and the life tenant survives its determination, the remainder cannot take effect, by the express words of the will, until the death of the widow, whereas the imperative rule of the law requires that the remainder must vest—that is, the contingency must happen—during the continuance of the particular estate or eo instanti it determines. The life estate is destroyed by the forfeiture resulting from the waste under the statute, and yet the event upon which the plaintiff is to take his estate in remainder has not happened.

The court below ruled in accordance with the views we have expressed, and, finding no error in the judgment, we must affirm it.

Affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by the Sanford, Chamberlain & Albers Company against L. M. Eubanks. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dillard & Bell, for appellant. Ben Posey, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiffs to set aside a mortgage executed on February 16, 1907, by the defendant L. M. Eubanks to his wife, Fannie D. Eubanks, and to Hattie Swaggerty, his sister-in-law, and J. L. Robinson, to secure the payment of certain debts alleged therein to be due by L. M. Eubanks to the mortgagees. The court submitted issues to the jury, which, with the answers thereto, are as follows:

"(1) Is the defendant L. M. Eubanks indebted to Sanford, Chamberlain & Albers Company? If so, in what sum? Answer: $535.35, with interest from April 1, 1907, and $4.65.

"(2) Is said defendant indebted to Briggs & Cooper Company, Limited? If so, in what sum? Answer: $217.52.

"(3) Was the mortgage of February 17, 1909, from L. M. Eubanks to Fannie D. Eubanks and others executed with intent to hinder, delay, and defeat the creditors of said L. M. Eubanks? Answer: Yes.

"(4) Did the defendant Fannie D. Eubanks know of any fraudulent intent on the part of said L. M. Eubanks at the time of the execution and delivery of said mortgage to her? Answer: No.

"(5) Did the defendant Hattie Swaggerty know of such intent at said time? Answer: No."

The allegation of the plaintiff is that the mortgage was executed to defraud the creditors of the mortgagor. There was no dispute at the trial as to the indebtedness of L. M. Eubanks to the plaintiffs. The mortgagor was largely indebted to his wife for money which she loaned him in the amount of $1,000, and further in the sum of $2,500, for money which he had obtained by mortgage on her separate estate. It was admitted that L. M. Eubanks was insolvent at the time he executed the mortgage. There was some evidence tending to show that the mortgage was made with a fraudulent intent, and the question really involved in the case was whether Fannie D. Eubanks, the wife of the mortgagor, had notice at the time he executed the mortgage to her and the others named therein of such fraudulent intent. She was asked by her counsel the following question:

"Did you, at the time you took this mortgage from your husband, have any intention to defraud any of your husband's other creditors?" The plaintiffs objected to this question. The objection was overruled, and the plaintiffs excepted. The witness answered that she did not intend to defraud any of her husband's creditors. Her own testimony tended to show that the mortgage was taken by her in good faith and without notice of the fraudulent intent of her husband.

The plaintiffs requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "The defendant Fannie D. Eubanks need not have known as a matter of law that the mortgage executed to her was fraudulent, but it was sufficient if she knew of the circumstances which the law says made the deed fraudulent on the part of her husband if it was so, and, if the jury should find that she knew the circumstances and the deed was fraudulent, they should answer the fourth issue 'Yes'; that is, in favor of the plaintiffs." The court declined to give this instruction, and the defendants again excepted. The court charged the jury that if the mortgage was made with a fraudulent intent—that is, with an intent on the part of L. M. Eubanks to hinder, delay, or defeat his creditors, or any of them, in the collection of their claims—and the wife of the mortgagor, Fannie D. Eubanks, knew of this intent, they would answer the fourth issue "Yes," but if the jury found as a fact that she did not know of such intent, if it existed, but merely knew that he was indebted to other persons than those secured by the mortgage, and that his purpose in executing the same was merely to secure the payment of the indebtedness to her, and that was his only purpose when he executed the mortgage, and she did not know that he intended to hinder, delay, or defeat any of his creditors in the collection of their claims against him, they would answer the fourth issue "No." In other words, the court substantially charged the jury that if Fannie D. Eubanks, the wife of the mortgagor, believed the transaction to be an honest one, and did not know that there was any actual intent on the part of her husband to defraud any of his other creditors, as defined by the court, and she acted in good faith in taking the mortgage to secure the indebtedness to her, they would answer the fourth issue, "No." The plaintiffs assigned the following errors:

(1) That the court permitted the defendant Fannie D. Eubanks to testify, over the objection of the plaintiffs, that she had no intention to defraud any of the other creditors of her husband at the time the mortgage was executed to her.

(2) That the court refused to give the instruction as requested by the plaintiffs.

(3) That the court charged the jury that the defendant Fannie D. Eubanks must have had knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the mortgagor, and not merely notice of the fraud.

As to the first assignment of error, we are unable to see why it was not competent and relevant for the witness Fannie D. Eubanks to testify as to what her intention was at the time the mortgage was executed to her. It cannot be denied that the mortgage would be valid in her hands as against the creditors of her husband, even if he had a fraudulent intent, provided she did not have notice of it or did not participate in the fraudulent execution of the mortgage, and, this being one of the questions involved in the case, how can the fact better be proved than by her own testimony as to what her intention was at the time? But the questions involved in the case were whether her husband had the fraudulent intent, and whether she had notice of it. In this aspect of the case, her intention was either irrelevant, and the testimony was therefore harmless, or, if relevant, as tending to show that she did not have any knowledge or notice of her husband's unlawful purpose, it surely would be competent to prove by her what her intention was; for it might be said, if her husband executed the mortgage with a fraudulent intent, and she executed it knowing, or having notice of, such intent, she in a legal sense intended to defraud her husband's other creditors, as she would then be participating in the fraud. If it is competent to inquire whether or not she had a fraudulent intent at the time she executed the mortgage, the fact that she did not have such an intent could be proved by her own testimony, as we held in the case of Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 6 S. E. 672. In that case Chief Justice Smith, speaking for the court, said: "The test of the admissibility of the evidence of motive or intent is the materiality of the motive or intent in giving character to the act, and when they must, as separate elements, coexist to constitute guilt or produce a legal result. When, as distinct facts, each must be alleged and proved, the inference to be deduced may be met and repelled by the direct testimony of the party as to their being entertained by him"—citing State v. King, 86 N. C. 603, and 1 Wharton, Ev. § 482. In that case the question involved was whether or not the mortgage was fraudulent, and the decision seems to be a direct authority for the ruling of the court upon the objection we are now discussing.

As to the second assignment of error, we are of the opinion after a careful perusal of the charge of the court that the instruction was substantially given to the jury. If it was not given, there were no circumstances from which the jury could infer fraud in law. The plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit as to Hattie Swaggerty and J. L. Robinson, the other defendants, and the issue was confined, therefore, to the validity of the mortgage as to Fannie D. Eubanks. The court properly submitted the case to the jury as involving the above questions of fact as to whether the mortgagor had an actual intent to defraud his creditors, and whether his wife had notice or knowledge of such intent. The plaintiff having admitted that the debt secured by the mortgage was justly due to Fannie D. Eubanks by her husband, the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the mortgage was executed with a fraudulent intent on the part of the debtor. Peeler v. Peeler, 109 N. C. 628, 14 S. E. 59; Redmond v. Chandley, 119 N. C. 575, 26 S. E. 255. It is true that, where the husband executes a mortgage to secure an alleged indebtedness to his wife, the law casts suspicion upon the transaction and raises what has been called a presumption of fraud; but, when she has shown that the debt was honestly contracted and was justly due to her at the time the mortgage was executed, it then becomes a question for the jury to determine the intent of the parties, and to find the contract fraudulent or otherwise, as they may find the fact to be upon a consideration of the testimony, the burden being upon the attacking creditor to show the fraudulent intent of the debtor, if the debt which is secured by the mortgage was actually due to his wife. Reiger v. Davis, 67 N. C. 185. If the husband is indebted to his wife and executes the mortgage to secure such indebtedness, and the wife acts in good faith and without knowledge of any fraudulent intent on his part, if he had any, we do not see why the husband may not prefer his wife as one of his creditors, as well as any of his other creditors. The case in this respect seems to have been correctly and fairly tried in accordance with the decisions which we have just cited.

The third objection to the judge's charge is clearly untenable. If the husband had a fraudulent intent, the wife must have knowledge of it to invalidate the deed or mortgage as to her. This is decided in Peeler v. Peeler and the other cases above cited, but the court in its charge to the jury evidently used the word "knowledge" in the sense of "notice."

We have examined the case carefully, and find no error in the rulings of the court.

No error.

WOODBURY v. KING.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 126*)—DEEDS—EXECUTION BY AGENT—SUFFICIENCY.

A deed of land by an attorney in fact of the owner, signed and sealed by the attorney individually, and not by him as attorney in fact, does not bind the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 430-450; Dec. Dig. § 126; * Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 276, 404.]

of title, and thereafter and before the execution of a deed incumbrances are discovered, he cannot be compelled to take the defective title or pay the bonds given for the price of the land, for an agreement to take a clear deed without warranty is not a waiver of the right to demand a clear title, citing Batchelor v. Macon, 67 N. C. 181; Castlebury v. Maynard, 95 N. C. 281, and other cases. In Castlebury v. Maynard, supra, Mr. Justice Ashe, speaking for the court, said: "The contention of the parties presents for our consideration the question whether the plaintiff can make a good title to the land described in the complaint. If he cannot, it would be against equity and good conscience that he should recover the amount of the note in suit, for a purchaser of land is never required to accept a doubtful title. Batchelor v. Macon, 67 N. C. 181; Motts v. Caldwell, 45 N. C. 289." In Timber Co. v. Wilson, 151 N. C. 154, 65 S. E. 934, Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for the court, said: "It is further contended that the defendants cannot make a good title to the timber, independent of the conveyance to the Tilghman Company, and for that reason cannot be made to perform the contract. This might avail the plaintiff if it was resisting the performance on its part, but it cannot avail these defendants, for it is well settled that, though the vendor is unable to convey the title called for by the contract, the purchaser may elect to take what the vendor can give him and hold the vendor answerable in damages as to the rest. Kares v. Covell, 180 Mass. 206 [62 N. E. 244, 91 Am. St. Rep. 271]; Corbett v. Shulte, 119 Mich. 249 [77 N. W. 947]; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. 621." Wilcoxon v. Calloway, 67 N. C. 463; 1 Warvelle on Vendors, 349; Haynes v. White, 55 Cal. 38; McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 455, 31 Pac. 558.

Different principles and different requirements apply where a deed has been made and delivered, and the purchaser then seeks, as a defense to an action brought to recover the purchase money, to set up damages for a partial failure of title. This difference is illustrated by the cases of Etheridge v. Vernoy, 70 N. C. 713; Foy v. Haughton, 85 N. C. 168; Anderson v. Rainey, 100 N. C. 321, 5 S. E. 182; Woodbury v. Evans, 122 N. C. 779, 30 S. E. 2. In Etheridge v. Vernoy, supra, an action brought to recover the balance on a note for the purchase price of land, where the deed had been executed and a note and mortgage given to secure it, this court said: "In contracts for the sale of land, it is the duty of purchasers to guard themselves against defects of title, quantity, incumbrances, and the like. If they fail to do so, it is their own folly, for the law will not afford them a remedy for the consequences of their own negligence. But if representations are made by the bargainor, which may reasonably be relied on by the purchaser, and they constitute a material inducement to the contract, and are false within the knowledge of the party making them, and they cause damage and loss to the party relying on them, and he has acted with ordinary prudence in the matter, he is entitled to relief. Walsh v. Hall, 66 N. C. 233." And this doctrine applies with equal force where the ground of relief, instead of fraudulent representations, is mutual mistake. Wilcoxon v. Calloway, 67 N. C. 463. In that case this court said: "But upon a contract for a hundred acres, even though there is no suggestion that the vendee for any reason, desired exactly that quantity, or that quantity was of any value except as quantity, yet a deficiency of one-third must be held material, and would probably entitle the vendee to rescind the contract if he chose to do so, or, at all events, to an abatement of the price." As to the rule for determining the amount of abatement of the price for the deficiency, the court said: "In this case, however, it does not appear that any part of the land has been improved, or that there is anything to give any one part of it extraordinary value over any other part, and we do not see why it will not be fair and reasonable to estimate the value of the deficiency at the average price per acre." This seems to have been adopted by the jury in fixing the value of the 47 trees cut from the Groves land allowed as an abatement. In view of the authorities above cited and accepting their reasoning as conclusive upon us, we are of the opinion that his honor erred in not permitting the defendant to prove a partial failure of title and the shortage or deficiency in the number of trees conveyed, which would be in reality a failure of title, and in not permitting the jury to determine the abatement of price to the defendant, if his contentions in these particulars shall be accepted by the jury as true.

For these errors, the judgment is reversed and a new trial awarded.

New trial.

SANDERLIN v. LUKEN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 30, 1910.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 31*)—PUBLIC PURPOSE—DRAINAGE DISTRICTS.

Acts 1909, c. 442, authorizing the establishment of a levee or drainage district, is for a public purpose, and not for the mere benefit of private landowners, and so not unconstitutional as authorizing the taking of property for a mere private purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. DRAINS (§ 75*)—IMPROVEMENT—NECESSITY OF A VOTE.

While a drainage district established under Acts 1909, c. 442, is regarded as a public quasi corporation, the making of improvements by it to be paid by assessment is not within Const. art. 7, § 7, providing that no municipal corporation shall contract any debt or levy any tax except for necessary expenses, unless by a vote of the majority of the people therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 61*)—CONFERRING LEGISLATIVE POWERS ON THE JUDICIARY.

Acts 1909, c. 442, in conferring on the clerk of the superior court the power to establish a drainage district, is not invalid as delegating legislative power and duty to the judiciary; such duties and powers being of a judicial nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 103-107; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

4. DRAINS (§ 49*)—LETTING WORK—LOWEST "RESPONSIBLE BIDDER."

Acts 1909, c. 442, requiring the commissioners of a drainage district to let the work of construction to the "lowest responsible bidder," confers a discretion, exercise of which is not to be interfered with unless influenced by fraud as to determining whether a bidder is responsible; such term including ability to respond to the requirements of the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Currituck County; Ward, Judge.

Action by Sanderlin against Luken and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The facts relevant to the controversy, and the questions presented for decision, are very well stated in the brief of counsel for appellant as follows:

"This is a case involving the constitutionality of the act of the General Assembly of North Carolina of 1909 (chapter 442), authorizing the establishment of levee or drainage districts; of the validity of bonds which the commissioners of a drainage district, purporting to have been established under the act, have contracted to issue; and also of the action of the commissioners in letting the contract for the construction of the work to one who was not lowest bidder, in view of the provision of the statute requiring the contract to be let to the 'lowest responsible bidder.' Under the statute a petition for the establishment of a drainage district in Currituck county was presented to the clerk of the superior court, and after proceedings duly taken was declared to be established as the Moyock district No. 1. The plaintiff herein is a citizen, taxpayer, and landowner within the boundaries of the district, and his lands have been assessed, for the costs of the improvements to be made, under the classification of the lands embraced in the district according to the provisions of the statutes. The plaintiff has brought this suit to restrain the commissioners of the drainage district from issuing bonds contracted for to defray the costs and expenses of the proposed improvements. Upon the case being brought to a hearing, it was adjudged by the court below that Acts 1909, c. 442, is valid, and that the proceedings of the commissioners were regular, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction prayed for. An appeal was taken and has been duly perfected.

"The following propositions, involving the constitutionality of the statute and the validity of the bonds, and also the action of the commissioners in letting the contract, are submitted to the court: (1) Conferring upon the clerk of the superior court the power to establish a levee or drainage district is invalid as constituting a delegation of legislative power and duty to the judiciary. (2) The statute shows upon its face that it is for the benefit of private landowners, and not for a public purpose. (3) As a levee or drainage district is a quasi municipal corporation, and the work is not a 'necessary expense' within the meaning of article 7, § 7, of the Constitution of North Carolina, a debt cannot be contracted 'unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein.' (4) The contract should have been let to the lowest bidder in this case, or the work should have been advertised for new bids. The foregoing propositions, so far as they involve the validity of the statute, are pointed to the provisions of the state and the United States Constitutions, declaring that the legislative, executive, and supreme judicial powers of the government ought to be forever separate and distinct from each other; that no person ought to be deprived of his property but by the law of the land or by due process of law; and that no municipal corporation shall contract any debt except for the necessary expenses thereof, unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein."

inary political subdivisions of the state, such as counties, townships, etc., was declared and approved in the case of Smith v. School Trustees, 141 N. C. 143, 53 S. E. 524, and like power to create special assessment districts has been upheld by the court in several well-considered decisions. Asheville v. Trust Co., 143 N. C. 360, 55 S. E. 800; Busbee v. Commissioners of Wake, 93 N. C. 143; Commissioners v. Commissioners, 92 N. C. 180; Shuford v. Commissioners, 86 N. C. 552; Newsom v. Earnheart, 86 N. C. 391; Cain v. Commissioners, 86 N. C. 8. The principle has been frequently extended and applied to the creation of these drainage districts, and while certain statutes may have been declared void, this as a rule was because the rights of persons affected had not been in some way sufficiently safeguarded, and, so far as we have examined, the power of the General Assembly to enact legislation of this character has not been successfully questioned. Adams v. Joyner, 147 N. C. 77, 60 S. E. 725; Porter v. Armstrong, 139 N. C. 179, 51 S. E. 928; Pool v. Trexler, 76 N. C. 297; Norfleet, Adm'r. v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634, 16 Am. Rep. 787; Fallbrook v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369; Wurts et al. v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 5 Sup. Ct. 1086, 29 L. Ed. 229; Land & Stock Co. v. Miller, 170 Mo. 240, 70 S. W. 721, 60 L. R. A. 190, 94 Am. St. Rep. 727; Morrison v. Morey, 146 Mo. 543, 48 S. W. 629; Laguna Drainage Dist. v. Martin Co., 144 Cal. 209, 77 Pac. 933; Cribbs v. Benedict, 64 Ark. 555, 44 S. W. 707; Bryant v. Robbins, 70 Wis. 258, 35 N. W. 545.

Speaking to such legislation, and the reasons upon which it may be made to rest, Rodman, J., delivering the opinion in Norfleet v. Cromwell, supra, said: "The defendant takes higher ground, and contends that the act of 1795 was unconstitutional, because it took his property for a mere private purpose. It is admitted that that cannot be lawfully done, and the only question on this point is as to the character of the purpose; whether it was to the benefit of one, or of a limited number of individuals only, or of such general and public utility, as justifies a state in the exercise of its power of eminent domain. It is well known that in the Atlantic section of this state there are hundreds of thousands of acres of what are called 'swamp lands,' which from the flatness of their surface and the filling up of the natural courses of drainage, if any ever existed, cannot be relieved of the water which ordinarily covers them, and made fit for human habitation and cultivation, except by cutting artificial canals from them into some convenient creek or river, which must necessarily pass through the intervening lands of the riparian proprietors. If these canals can be cut only by permission of the owners of the banks of the necessary outlets, this vast area of fertile land must remain for ages an uncultivated and unpopulated wilderness, and it will be entirely valueless to those who bought it from the state on the faith of its laws. An act which aims to remedy so great an evil, affecting so many persons now living, and so many more in the future, must be deemed one of general and public utility. In an agricultural view it now benefits the whole population of that part of the state in which these swamps are found. The right of the state to condemn lands for drains rests on the same foundation as its right in cases of public roads, mills, railroads, cartways, schoolhouses, forts, lighthouses, etc. In the case of public roads, it has never been doubted, and the weight of authority is decidedly in favor of its existence for the other purposes mentioned. Roads and aqueducts are classed together in the Institutes as servitudes of the same public character. In the swamps which the act in question chiefly affects, the canals are more important than the roads, as they must always precede them. The right to drain through the banks of a natural water course is exactly similar in character to the right to construct dykes or levees to keep their excessive waters from overflowing the adjacent lands, a right which has been recognized in the legislation of all countries from the most ancient times. Witness the dykes which protect the coast of Holland, the fens of Lincolnshire, the lands on the Mississippi, and on the Po. Both purposes are classed together in our act of 1789. The act in question, and others of a like character respecting mills, etc., are of ancient date. They have been incidentally sanctioned by this court in many decisions, and, if their constitutionality has never been directly affirmed, it may be because it was never questioned. These acts are not peculiar to North Carolina. Acts concerning mills, similar to ours, exist in many of the states (Washburn, Easements, 394 [329]), and respecting drainage at least in Massachusetts (Gen. St. c. 148), and New York (2 Rev. St. 548; People v. Nearing, 27 N. Y. 306)."

The legislation in question here comes well within the principle established by these cases. It has evidently been prepared with great care, and seems to present a scheme for the drainage of these lowlands, at once comprehensive, adequate, and efficient, and in which the rights of all persons to be affected have been fully considered and protected.

When these drainage districts are created under statutes like this we are now considering, they are regarded as public quasi corporations, partaking to some extent of the character of a governmental agency, and for general purposes of taxation in the ordinary acceptation of the term they come, as a rule, within the restrictions established by the Constitution upon municipal corporations in reference to the imposition of taxes both as to the amount and method

(Smith v. Trustees, supra); but under our decisions these restrictive provisions as to taxation have been held not to apply to the case of local assessments, where, as in this case, such assessments are made and collected by some recognized method apportioning the burdens according to the benefits received by the property affected. Busbee v. Commissioners, supra; Commissioners v. Commissioners, supra; Shuford v. Commissioners, supra; Newsom v. Earnheart, supra; Cain v. Commissioners, supra.

In Shuford's Case it was held: "(1) A tax levied only upon land under the provisions of the 'stock law' (Acts 1879, c. 135) is not within the constitutional prohibition as to uniformity of taxation, and hence the assent of the qualified voters of the district affected is not necessary; and this, even though the act of the Legislature styles it a 'tax.' (2) It is regarded as a local assessment, and made with reference to special benefits derived from the property assessed, from the expenditure; while taxes are public burdens, imposed as burdens, for the purpose of general revenue."

And in Commissioners v. Commissioners, 92 N. C., supra, Chief Justice Smith, on this subject, quotes with approval from the opinion in Cain v. Commissioners, as follows: "As the greater burden is thus removed from the landowner, he, as such, ought to bear the expense by which this result is brought about. The special interest benefited by the law is charged with the payment of the sum necessary in securing the benefit. This and no more is what the statute proposes to do, and in this respect is obnoxious to no just objection from the taxed land proprietor, as it is free from any constitutional impediments."

The objection urged, therefore, that no vote of the people on the proposition was required or provided for by the statute, must be overruled.

Nor can the further objection be sustained that the act in question improperly undertakes to confer legislative power and duties on the clerk of the court, a judicial officer; for on authority the duties and powers conferred on the clerk by this statute are of a judicial nature. Speaking to this question, in O'Dell v. Boyden, 150 Fed. 731, 80 C. C. A. 397, 10 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas., at page 230, it is said: "The better doctrine, however, seems to be that the duties of the municipal authorities in determining the necessity for sewers (dependent on a like principle), their location, and their general plan, are of a judicial or quasi judicial nature, while the work of construction and maintenance is ministerial." And authoritative decisions fully support the position as stated. Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 6 Sup. Ct. 923, 30 L. Ed. 75; Callen v. City, 43 Kan. 627, 23 Pac. 652, 7 L. R. A. 786; Bellingham Imp. Co. v. City, 20 Wash. 53, 54 Pac. 774; Wahoo v. Dickinson, 23 Neb. 426, 36 N. W. 813. This disposes, we believe,

of the objections urged against the validity of the statute.

It was further contended for plaintiff that, under the provisions of the law, the commissioners had no right to accept and award the contract to a higher bidder, but that "the contract should have been let to the lowest bidder, or the work should have been advertised for new bids"; but the language of the statute is that "they, together with the superintendent of construction, shall convene and let to the lowest responsible bidder," and the decisions are to the effect that when, by the clear import of this or similar language, a discretion is conferred, the action of the authorities will not be interfered with, unless the same was influenced or procured by fraud. People v. Kent, 160 Ill. 655, 43 N. E. 760; Brick & Pav. Co. v. Philadelphia, 164 Pa. 477, 30 Atl. 383; Commonwealth v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 343; Clapton, Adm'r, v. Taylor, 49 Mo. App. 117.

In People v. Kent, it was held: "(1) The word 'responsible,' applied to an undertaking to pay money only, means financial ability; but in the statute for letting contracts for public improvements, which requires a 'responsible bidder,' it has the wider meaning of ability to respond to the requirements of the contract, having full regard to the subject-matter thereof. (2) The requirement of a statute that contracts for a public improvement shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder does not require the letting of a contract to the lowest bidder upon the ascertainment of his financial responsibility only; but the term 'responsible' includes the ability to respond by the discharge of the contractor's obligations in accordance with what may be expected or demanded under the terms of the contract. (3) The courts cannot interfere, in the absence of fraud, with the exercise of the official discretion of a public officer intrusted with the duty of awarding a contract, in determining whether a certain person was the lowest responsible bidder, after investigation of such person's record in doing similar business before."

And in Clapton v. Taylor, supra: "(2) In letting contracts for street improvements, the duty of city authorities is not wholly ministerial, but partakes sufficiently of a judicial character, in the absence of fraud or misconduct, to render their conclusion binding; and the law in regard to the letting of such contracts does not mean absolutely that the contract shall be given to the lowest bidder without regard to fitness, and the city authorities are presumed to have done, and not to have exceeded, their duty."

The case was submitted for our decision near the close of the term, with a request that an early decision be rendered, and we may have written somewhat hurriedly. Our investigations, however, have been very much facilitated by the excellent briefs submitted by counsel for both parties, and we desire to express appreciation of the commendable diligence they have shown in their preparation, and the great aid these briefs have been to the court in reaching a satisfactory conclusion on the questions presented.

For the reasons stated, we are of opinion that the judgment of his honor below must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 385*) — STREETS — CHANGING GRADES — LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES.

A municipal corporation is liable to the owner of property abutting on a street for changing the grade of the street only so far as damages arise from its doing the work negligently.

Where a change of street grade involves an excavation of 12 or 14 feet, leaving abutting property on an embankment of that height, nearly perpendicular, and with a soil that will not stand in any such shape, proper care requires the municipal corporation to provide some kind of proper support therefor.

3. PLEADING (§ 249*) — COMPLAINT—AMENDMENT.

The complaint in an action by the owner of a lot abutting on a street to enjoin excavations for a change of street grade may be amended to seek recovery for negligence in the doing of the work; Revisal 1905, § 469, allowing the joinder of all causes of action arising out of the same transaction or transactions connected with the same subject of action.

4. JUDGMENT (§ 598*) — MERGER AND BAR — PERMANENT INJURIES.

The injury to abutting property from negligence of the municipal corporation in making a change of street grade being of a permanent nature, but one recovery is permissible, measured by the impaired market value of the property arising, and likely to arise, from the negligence.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 394, 395*) — STREETS — CHANGE OF GRADE — DAMAGES — EVIDENCE.

While the general and better rule of damages for injury to abutting property from negligence of a municipal corporation in making a change of street grade is the impaired market value of the property, the cost of a retaining wall is relevant to the inquiry, and under some circumstances may be adopted as determinative, particularly where such cost is reasonable, and operates in restriction of amount of recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 938, 945-948; Dec. Dig. §§ 394, 395.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 474*)—OPINIONS.

Witnesses who have had personal observation of relevant facts and circumstances, and whose opinions are calculated to aid the jury, may give them as to the amount a lot is damaged by negligence in change of the street grade.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2299; Dec. Dig. § 474.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 287*)—REDIRECT EXAMINATION.

Where defendant, in cross-examination of a witness in an action for injury to property by negligence in change of street, brought out the statement that the property had been assessed for taxation at a much lower value than plaintiff claimed, the statement of witness on redirect that the tax assessors were accustomed to assess such property at about one-third its true value was relevant, certainly not ground for reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Caldwell County; Council, Judge.

Civil action by George F. Harper against the Town of Lenoir. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action tried at November term, 1909. There was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff was the owner of a house and lot in the town of Lenoir, abutting on Main street, and also on North Boundary street; that the authorities of the town in charge of the matter, having determined on a change of grade of these streets, proceeded to dig down and lower the Main street, leaving plaintiff's property 12 or 15 feet above the level of the sidewalk, and were about to commence like action on North Boundary street, when plaintiff instituted the present suit. While the record does not make the matter very clear as to what was the original purpose of the action nor what part of the digging took place, or damage was caused before the same was commenced, it seems to have been admitted on the argument that the suit was instituted to restrain the authorities from going on with the work complained of, and that, this having been stopped, no restraining order was issued, and the suit was proceeded with without process of that character, and was tried on an issue as to negligence. It appears to have been further conceded that the change of grade along Main street had been completed before suit commenced, but that some of the consequential damages had occurred from it since action brought, and evidence as to all such damage was admitted over defendant's objection. The original complaint, evidently drawn with a view of using same also as an affidavit on the hearing of an application for a restraining order, contained allegations of carelessness in the work on the part of the defendant, and was filed at the return term in 1908, and answer was then filed by defendant denying all material averments. At the trial term, in November, 1909, plaintiff was allowed, over defendant's objection, to amend his complaint, making a more extended and specific allegation of negligence on part of defendant in doing the work complained of, and amended answer was then filed by defendant. There was evidence on part of plaintiff tending to show injury to the plaintiff's property by reason of alleged negligence causing substantial damage to same, part of this damage occurring before commencement of the suit, and to all evidence tending to show damages subsequently occurring defendant objected and properly filed exceptions.

On issues submitted, the jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Did the defendant have authority under the law to lower the grade of North Main street in the town of Lenoir, and to remove earth therefrom up to the line of the plaintiff's property? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Was the plaintiff's property injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What damage, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $800."

Judgment on verdict for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Geo. W. Wilson, W. C. Newland, and Lawrence Wakefield, for appellant. W. A. Self and Mark Squires, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). On the issue as to defendant's responsibility, the court below, among other things, charged the jury as follows: "Cities and towns have the right to improve streets and pavements for the public good, and, in the exercise of this right, may grade down streets and pavements to a lower or make them of greater elevation than the property of adjacent or abutting property owners, and if in doing such work the town or city exercises (A) care and skill—that is, does the work properly—(B) then if injury results to the adjacent or abutting owners, either by leaving their property below or above the grade so made, the property owners are not entitled to recover damages, even though their property is rendered of less value by reason of the work so done. Nor can property owners recover damages under such conditions because of the ingress or egress to their property being interrupted or hindered, nor can they recover because of the effect of such work upon the appearance of their property." And again: "Every one who owns real estate in a city or town that adjoins a public street or pavement holds it subject to the right of the city or town to grade such street or pavement down or to elevate it when in the exercise of the judgment of the authorities of the city or town it becomes necessary or advisable to do so. And where grading is done under such conditions (C) and is done properly—that is, with care and skill, and with due regard to the rights of the property owners—(D) then the law affords no protection to the property owners on account of injury to their property resulting from being left at a higher or lower level than the street or pavement, or on account of ingress or egress to such property being affected, or for any injury to the appearance of the property." This is a very correct statement of the law as it obtains with us, where streets have been already established, and is in accord with numerous decisions of our court on the subject. Dorsey v. Henderson, 148 N. C. 423, 62 S. E. 547; Jones v. Henderson, 147 N. C. 120, 60 S. E. 894; Wolfe v. Pearson, 114 N. C. 621, 19 S. E. 204; Meares v. Wilmington, 81 N. C. 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412. Under the charge, and applying this principle, the jury have awarded plaintiff damages for the negligent manner in which this work was done by the town authorities, and, unless there is reversible error appearing in the record, the judgment in his favor must be affirmed.

It was objected to the validity of the recovery that the judge on the issue as to negligence imposed upon the defendant the duty of constructing a retaining wall for the protection of plaintiff's property, but, on the facts presented, we do not think the position can be sustained. The defendant certainly is not required to build a retaining wall in every case where an excavation of this character is made, nor is the cost of such a wall usually the correct measure of damages; but where, as in this case, the change of grade involves an excavation 12 or 14 feet, leaving plaintiff's property abutting on an embankment of that height, nearly perpendicular, and with a soil showing a tendency to crumble away, "a rotten, ashy kind of soil that has no body, has a good deal of isinglass and mica in it, not a kind of soil that will stand in any such shape as that," we think the court correctly held that proper care required that some kind of proper support should have been provided; and a failure to provide such support was correctly imputed for negligence on the part of the town. This was substantially held in Meares' Case, supra, and the decision was so interpreted in Jones' Case, supra; both cases certainly giving decided intimation that the failure to build a retaining wall under the conditions indicated was properly held to be actionable negligence.

It was objected, further, on the part of the defendant, that the action having been instituted primarily to obtain an injunction, and before any substantial damages had accrued from the alleged wrong, the court had no power to allow an amendment demanding damages for a negligent breach of duty on the part of defendant; the position being that such an amendment amounted to an entire change in the scope and purpose of the action, and constituted reversible error under the authority of Clendenin v. Turner, 96 N. C. 421, 2 S. E. 51, and that class of cases. As heretofore stated, it does not necessarily appear that it was the sole purpose of the action to obtain an injunction, and the original complaint contains averments which by correct interpretation amount to a charge of negligence, so that the facts here are against the defendant, but, if it were otherwise, the position cannot be sustained. Courts of equity not infrequently award damages when such a demand is incident to some recognized source of equitable relief; and under our system, combining legal and equitable actions in one and the same jurisdiction, and permitting the joinder of "all causes of action arising out of the same transaction or transactions growing out of the same subject of action" (Revisal, § 409), it was not only permissible, but eminently proper, that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend and claim the damages accrued, and which were incident to the principal relief. Beach on Injunctions, § 10; Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, §§ 112-237. Making a short extract from the last citation: "Equity, therefore, assumed a jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining the commission of actual or threatened waste, and having obtained jurisdiction for the purpose of awarding this special relief, which in many instances is not complete, the court will retain the cause and decree full and final damages, and when necessary order the abatement of whatever creates the waste or causes the nuisance."

Again, it was contended that this is an action for withdrawal of lateral support; that this is never considered as an actionable wrong until appreciable damage has actually occurred, and, as there was no evidence tending to show any substantial injury to plaintiff's property prior to the commencement of the suit, the recovery cannot be sustained. There seems to have been no more fruitful source of litigation than actions for wrongful withdrawal of lateral support by excavations on the part of an adjoining property owner, and there are many learned discussions in the reported cases on the subject. Considering these cases, it is undoubtedly established by the weight of authority that in actions of this character a claim for damages does not arise until there has been some appreciable injury to plaintiff's property as by an actual subsidence of the soil, and then only to the extent of the injury suffered. Kansas City R. R. v. Schwake, 70 Kan. 141, 78 Pac. 431, reported in 68 L. R. A. 673; Larson v. Street Ry., 110 Mo. 234, 19 S. W. 416, 16 L. R. A. 330; also reported in 33 Am. St. Rep. 439; Charless v. Rankin, 22 Mo. 566, in 66 Am. Dec. 642, with full and learned notes by the editors of these respective publications. These decisions, however, cannot avail defendant, for the reason that, in the respect suggested, the principle upon which they rest does not apply with us to an action against a municipal corporation for damages caused by changing the grade of a street already established. In such case, as heretofore stated, damages can only be recovered if the work is negligently done and to the extent caused by such negligence. And this, too, is the answer to another and kindred exception noted by defendant to the admission of all testimony as to any damages accruing since action commenced. Recovery, then, being sustainable only for negligence, in this case a pure tort, the damages, as said in Bowen v. King and Harris, 146 N. C. 390, 59 S. E. 1047, "will include all that are directly caused by the wrong and all consequential damages which are the natural and probable effect of such wrong, under the facts as they existed at the time the same is committed, and which could be ascertained with a reasonable degree of certainty"—citing Johnson v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 574, 53 S. E. 362; Sharpe v. Powell, 7 L. R. 1892, p. 253; 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. p. 598; Hale on Damages, 34, 35, et seq.—and, having been caused by a change of grade done as a rule under statutory authority and considered of a permanent nature, under our decisions, there may, and ordinarily must be, but one recovery for the entire wrong. This general principle is well stated by Justice Avery in the case of Ridley v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 998, 24 S. E. 731 (32 L. R. A. 708), as follows: "But even where the injury complained of, either by the servant owner or an adjacent proprietor, is due to the negligent construction of such public works as railways which it is the policy of the law to encourage, if the injury is permanent and affects the value of the estate, a recovery may be had at law of the entire damages in one action"—citing Smith v. Railroad, 23 W. Va. 453; Troy v. Railroad, 3 Post. (N. H.) 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177; Railroad Co. v. Maher, 91 Ill. 312; Bizer v. Railroad, 70 Iowa, 146, 30 N. W. 172; Fowle v. Railroad Co., 112 Mass. 334, 338, 17 Am. Rep. 106; s. c., 107 Mass. 352; Railroad v. Esterle, 13 Bush (Ky.) 667; Railroad v. Combs, 10 Bush (Ky.) 382, 393, 19 Am. Rep. 67; Stodghill v. Railroad Co., 53 Iowa, 341, 5 N. W. 495; Cadle v. Railroad Co., 44 Iowa, 11. And is said by Mr. Elliott in his work on Roads and Streets to obtain very generally in determining the damages recoverable on a change of grade by the authorities. Speaking to this question, the author said: "Sec. 488. All damages are recoverable in one action.—The change of grade is a permanent matter, and all resulting injury must be recovered for in one action, for the property owner cannot maintain successive actions as each fresh annoyance or injury occurs. The reason for this rule is not far to seek. What is done under color of legislative authority, and is of a permanent nature, works an injury as soon as it is done, if not done as the statute requires, and the injury which then accrues is, in legal contemplation, all that can accrue, for the complainant is not confined to a recovery for past or present damages, but may also recover prospective damages resulting from the wrong. It is evident that a different rule would lead to a multiplicity of actions, and produce injustice and confusion. It is in strict harmony with the rule which prevails, and has long prevailed, in cases where property is seized under the right of eminent domain. * * * The presumption of the permanency of the grade once established is the only reasonable and defensible one, and it is therefore just to apply to such cases the rule which governs in cases where the improvement is permanent. It is not reasonable to apply the rule which prevails in cases where a nuisance is created which is capable of abatement or removal and is not a thing of a permanent nature. The general rule is that where the act complained of is of a permanent nature, all the damages must be recovered in one action, and this rule should govern in actions for injuries resulting from a change of grade." Applying the principle the entire damage for plaintiff's injury is recoverable in the present action, and from this it follows that the proper and only feasible rule for admeasuring the damage will be the impaired market value of the property arising, and which is likely to arise, by reason of the negligence established. We were referred to several decisions to the effect that the impairment of market value was not the correct rule, but rather the diminished value of the lot caused by subsidence of soil or other injury which has occurred (Gilmore v. Driscoll, 122 Mass. 190, 23 Am. Rep. 812; McGuire v. Grant, 25 N. J. Law, 356, 67 Am. Dec. 49), but these cases were actions for wrongful withdrawal of lateral support by an adjoining proprietor, which did not necessarily involve the question of negligence, nor permit the award of prospective damages. Even in actions of that character, there are authorities to the effect that the correct rule is the impaired market value of the lot, the estimate to include prospective damages. See note to Kansas City R. R. v. Schwake, supra, in 68 L. R. A. 702, 703. But when, as in this case, the recovery is for negligence arising from an injury permanent in its character and under color of statutory authority, the true rule should undoubtedly be the impaired market value to be determined on consideration of the entire damages arising from the wrong, past, present, and prospective. Taking the charge as a whole, and in connection with the special instructions given at the request of the defendant, this was the principle laid down for the guidance of the jury in the present case, and these exceptions of the defendant are also overruled.

There were several other objections made to rulings of the court on questions of evidence. One of them was pointed to the admission of evidence as to the cost of a retaining wall. Both plaintiff and defendant seem to have offered testimony on that question, and we think the evidence was properly admitted. As we have endeavored to show, the general and better rule for the admeasurement of damages in these cases is the impaired value of claimant's lot by reason of defendant's negligence; but the cost of a retaining wall should, we think, be received as a fact relevant to the inquiry, and under some circumstances might be adopted as determinative, particularly when such cost is reasonable and operates in restriction of the amount recovered. As we have said in Bowen v. King, supra: "A well-recognized restriction applying in case of tort or contract, and as to both elements of damages (direct and consequential), is to the effect that the injured party must do what he can in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence to avoid or lessen the consequences of the wrong, and for any part of a loss incident to such failure no relief can be had." And a proper application of this principle in such cases might require that this cost of retaining wall should be accepted as controlling. See note to 68 L. R. A. 706, citing Kopp v. Railroad, 41 Minn. 310, 43 N. W. 73; Richardson v. Webster City, 111 Iowa, 427, 82 N. W. 920, and other authorities. And the case in our own reports of Meares v. Wilmington, supra, gives clear indication that the costs of such a wall, if reasonable, might under given conditions be accepted and acted on as the correct estimate in determining the damage.

Defendant excepted, further, that several witnesses were allowed to give their opinion as to the amount the lot was damaged. Evidence of this character from witnesses who have had personal observation of relevant facts and conditions, and whose opinion is calculated to aid the jury to a correct conclusion, is coming to be more and more regarded as competent, and its reception has been sanctioned and approved in several recent decisions of the court. Lumber Co. v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 220, 65 S. E. 920; Wilkinson v. Dunbar, 149 N. C. 20, 62 S. E. 748; Davenport v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 287, 62 S. E. 431, 128 Am. St. Rep. 599; Tire Setter Co. v. Whitehurst, 148 N. C. 446, 62 S. E. 523; Taylor v. Security Co., 145 N. C. 385, 59 S. E. 139, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 583.

Again, defendant excepted that a witness for plaintiff, testifying to the value of the lot in question, was allowed to say that the tax assessors were accustomed to assess such property at about one-third of its true value. This as an independent proposition would not be regarded as competent testimony, but, on cross-examination of this same witness, defendant's counsel had brought out the statement that the property in question had been assessed for taxation at a much lower value than plaintiff claimed, and this statement of the witness on redirect examination became in this way, we think, a relevant circumstance; certainly it will not be held for reversible error.

Considering the entire matter, we are of opinion that the cause has been carefully and correctly tried, and that no reversible error appears in the record. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

No error.

RICH v. ASHEVILLE ELECTRIC CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—REVIEW—NONSUIT.

On review of a nonsuit, the evidence must be construed most favorably for plaintiff.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 97*)—STREET CAR EMPLOYEES—INJURY—LIABILITY OF EMPLOYER.

A street car conductor cannot recover for injury caused by falling from the running board of his car, resulting from his right hand slipping from a defective side curtain and striking his left hand by which he was maintaining himself, since the accident was not a natural result of the defect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 163; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§§ 6, 121*)—VIOLATION OF STATUTE.

Violating a statute is negligence, but, to entitle another to recover for an injury on account thereof, he must show that the violation proximately caused the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 8, 227; Dec. Dig. §§ 6, 121.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 94*)—STREET RAILWAYS—NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

That a street railway violated Revisal 1905, §§ 2615e, 3800, requiring vestibule fronts on street cars, does not render it liable for injury to a conductor who fell from the running board of a car through his right hand slipping from a side curtain and striking his left hand with which he maintained himself, since there was no causal connection between the violation and the accident; the purpose of sections 2615e, 3800, being to protect the motorman from unnecessary exposure to the weather.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Action by J. O. Rich against the Asheville Electric Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff sued to recover damages for injuries received by him on Sunday morning, December 3, 1905, between 10 and 11 o'clock a. m., while acting as conductor on one of the defendant's cars in Asheville. The plaintiff testified that he had been, prior to the injury, a conductor for three years; that he asked to be relieved of his regular run that morning, and to fill an extra man's run, which was to take cars empty to Riverside Park—a distance of about three miles—to bring the cadets of Bingham School in to church; that when he reported to the car barn he found "signed up" on the bulletin board two open summer cars for this special run; that the weather was cold, something near freezing, a strong wind blowing from the north, cloudy and "spitting snow"; the thermometer had dropped from 49° Far. at midnight to 33° Far. between 10 and 11 a. m.; that the summer cars are not equipped with a vestibule, but they have a glass front in the rear of the front platform, and in front of the rear platform; that the seats run across the car and at each end there is a roller curtain which can be pulled down or rolled up as the weather conditions require; that these curtains work in grooves cut in posts at the ends of each seat; that fastened on the outside of each post is a substantial stanchion for holding to as one walks or stands on the running board or step, which board or step runs lengthwise the car on either side, and is used by passengers alighting from or getting on the car, and likewise used by the conductor in going from one end of the car to the other, in collecting fares of passengers; that after reporting at the car barn on the morning of December 3d to Mr. White, the man in charge, he observed that the open cars were "signed up" for the run he was to make; that he complained and requested closed cars on account of the weather; that White told him he would see about it; that he, the plaintiff, looked around and saw three closed cars apparently in good order, and went to report to White, but he had gone, and the other car crews had left, so he took out the open car at 10:5 a. m. and proceeded on his run to Riverside Park; that he had no passengers and took on none; that he had his overcoat, but did not put it on, and stood on the rear platform; that his car made the trip to the park in about 20 minutes; the cadets got aboard, pulled down the curtains, certainly on one side of the car, and the plaintiff started his car back to Asheville; that the car had gone about 200 or 300 yards when he started to collect fares; that he had to roll up the curtain, which was done by a pull, when it rolled up by a spring; that the curtain caught and he jerked it with his right hand, his hand slipped off and either struck his left hand with which he was holding to a stanchion, or it being numbed with cold, slipped loose, and he fell from the running board, and received the injuries for which he sues to recover damages. At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor allowed the motion, made under the statute, for judgment as of nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed to this court.

Frank Carter and H. C. Chedester, for appellant. Martin & Wright, for appellee.

MANNING, J. Construing the evidence in the view most favorable for the plaintiff, as we must do under the uniform rulings of this court, where the motion for judgment as of nonsuit is allowed, we are not convinced that his honor committed error in allowing the motion. In speaking of an injury occurring to the plaintiff, in House v. Railroad (at this term) 87 S. E. 961, where the plaintiff, a servant of the defendant, employed to clean its cars and wash its windows, was injured by attempting, with unusual force, to raise a window which had become tight in the sash, when her hand slipped, broke through the glass and was severely cut, Mr. Justice Hoke said: "We have repeatedly decided that an employer of labor is required to provide for his employes a reasonably safe place to work, and to supply them with implements and appliances reasonably safe and suitable for the work in which they were engaged. As stated in Hicks v. Manufacturing Co., 138 N. C. 319-325, 50 S. E. 703, 705, and other cases of like import, the principle more usually obtains in the case of 'machinery more or less complicated, and more especially when driven by mechanical power,' and does not, as a rule, apply to the use of ordinary everyday tools, nor to ordinary everyday conditions, requiring no special care, preparation, or provision, where the defects are readily observable, and where there was no good reason to suppose that the injury complained of would result. The reason for the distinction will ordinarily be found to rest on the fact that the element of proximate cause is lacking—defined in some of the decisions as 'the doing or omitting to do an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee would naturally or probably produce the injury.' Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 137 N. C. 392, 49 S. E. 385. These windows not infrequently become tightened from different causes, and, while it may be a great inconvenience and should perhaps be given more attention than it receives, no one would say that an injury of this character would ordinarily arise or be likely to ensue, and therefore no actionable wrong has been established." This case, we think, is decisive of the point presented in the present case, as to the tightening of the curtain which plaintiff was attempting to roll up. No one would say that the injury which plaintiff received—falling from the running board or step—would ordinarily arise or be likely to ensue from this cause. No reason is given, nor does any appear, why the plaintiff, as he had charge of the car, did not examine these curtains before leaving the barn, if he had apprehended any injury as likely to ensue to him from their becoming tightened in the grooves, as such a condition was readily observable. The liability of the defendant, however, was urged before us chiefly upon the ground that it was operating a car for passengers on its line in violation of sections 2615e, 3800, Revisal, which provides that "all street passenger railway companies shall use vestibule fronts * * * on all passenger cars run by them on their lines during the latter half of the month of November, and during the months of December, January, February and March of each year. * * * Provided, further, such companies may use cars without vestibule fronts in cases of temporary emergency in suitable weather," etc. While the evidence does not disclose any causal connection between the failure to use the vestibule front on the car the plaintiff was using and the injury received by him, or that defendant's failure to provide a vestibule front was an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee would naturally or probably produce the injury complained of, yet it is insisted by the plaintiff that the running of a passenger car without the vestibule front was forbidden by statute, and constituted negligence, for which the defendant is liable to plaintiff. In Henderson v. Traction Co., 132 N. C. 779, 44 S. E. 598, this court said: "After a careful examination of a number of authorities, we are of the opinion that the sound doctrine is that a violation of the public statute or a city ordinance is evidence of negligence, to be submitted to the jury. It is generally held, and this we regard as the true doctrine, that the element of proximate cause must be established, and it will not necessarily be presumed from the fact that a city ordinance or statute has been violated. Negligence, no matter in what it may consist, cannot result in a right of action unless it is the proximate cause of the injury complained of by the plaintiff. Elliott on Railroads, § 711." This case has been approved in Cheek v. Lumber Co., 134 N. C. 225, 46 S. E. 488, 47 S. E. 400.

In Leathers v. Tobacco Co., 144 N. C. 330, 57 S. E. 11, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 349, Mr. Justice Connor, speaking again for this court, reviewed in an elaborate opinion the whole doctrine, and quoted with approval, as expressing the conclusion reached by the best-considered authorities, the following language from Thompson on Neg. vol. 1, § 10: "When the Legislature of a state or the council of a municipal corporation, having in view the promotion of the safety of the public or of individual members of the public, commands or forbids the doing of a particular act, the general conception of the courts, and the only one that is reconcilable with reason, is that a failure to do the act commanded, or doing the act prohibited, is negligence as mere matter of law, otherwise called negligence per se; and this, irrespective of all questions of the exercise of prudence, diligence, care or skill, so that if it is the proximate cause of hurt or damage to another, and if that other is without contributory fault, the case is decided in his favor, and all that remains is to assess his damages." The conclusion of this court is thus stated in that opinion: "Upon careful consideration, we conclude that the law is correctly laid down by Judge Thompson and the other authors quoted, and sustained by the best-considered decided cases. * * * While it is true that if there be any dispute regarding the manner in which the injury was sustained, or if, upon the conceded facts, more than one inference may be fairly drawn, the question should be left to the jury, yet it is equally well settled that when there is no dispute as to the facts, and such facts are not capable of more than one inference, it is the duty of the judge to instruct the jury, as a matter of law, whether the injury was the proximate cause of the negligence of the defendant. Rolin v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 300, 53 S. E. 891, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 835. Again, this court was called upon to consider the question in Starnes v. Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 556, 61 S. E. 525, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602, and, speaking through Mr. Justice Brown, said: "As to the second contention, it is decided squarely against the defendant in the recent case of Leathers v. Tobacco Co., supra, where it is held not only that a cause of action accrues to the child, if injured, but that it is negligence per se, and not merely evidence of negligence, to violate the statute. Revisal 1905, § 3362. * * *

This brings us to consider defendant's third contention, a matter not fully determined in the Leathers Case, and which may be thus stated: That the plaintiff cannot recover, because the employment of him, although willfully and knowingly done in violation of the statute, was not the proximate cause of this injury, inasmuch as he did not receive the injury while in the discharge of the duties to which he was assigned." After reviewing the evidence in that case tending to show that the violation of the statute was the proximate cause of the injury received, the court proceeded: "We do not mean to hold that the employer violating the act would be liable in damages for every fatality that might befall the child while in its factory. For instance, had the plaintiff died of heart disease, or from a stroke of paralysis, or been seriously injured by the willful and malicious act of a workman in knocking him against a machine, or injured from some cause wholly disconnected from the unlawful employment, the defendant could not be held liable in damages simply on account of the employment in violation of the statute. But we do hold that the employment, when willfully and knowingly done, is a violation of the statute, and that every injury that reasonably and naturally results is actionable. In this case, the connection between the employment and the injury is that of cause and effect, and brings the defendant within the operation of the statute." Fowle v. Railroad Co., 147 N. C. 491, 61 S. E. 282. It seems to us that the principle is clearly settled by this court in the cases cited that while the violation of a statute is negligence, yet to entitle the plaintiff seeking to recover damages for an injury sustained, he must show a causal connection between the injury received and the disregard of the statutory prohibition or mandate—that the injury was the proximate cause, and this requirement is fundamental in the law of negligence. In the present case, there is an entire absence of evidence tending to show such causal relation, but on the contrary the plaintiff's evidence negatives it. If we suppose the car equipped with a vestibule front, as required by statute, and the open cars are so equipped in many parts of the country, what causal connection existed between the injury and the negligence, or how could the inference that the failure to have a vestibule front be reasonably inferred as the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury? Besides, the manifest purpose of the statute, considered in the Leathers Case and the Starnes Case, being the statute forbidding the employment of children under 12 years of age in manufacturing establishments (Revisal 1905, § 3362), was not only to protect children of such tender years and immature judgment from injuries likely to ensue from their coming in contact with machinery, but their health from injury by such close confinement, as pointed out in Rolin v. Tobacco Co., supra; while the manifest purpose of the statute in the present case was to protect the motorman (not the conductor) from unnecessary exposure to the weather while performing his duty. It will be observed that the statute does not require any particular kind or make of car to be used, but refers only to its equipment. The same necessity for showing the causal or proximate relation between the injury and the alleged negligence, is recognized as essential in Troxler v. R. R., 122 N. C. 902, 30 S. E. 117, and the numerous cases citing and approving that decision, for as is said in that case: "Where the negligence of the defendant is a continuing negligence (as the failure to furnish safe appliances, in general use, when the use of such appliances would have prevented the possibility of the injury, there can be no contributory negligence which will discharge the master." And the second headnote in Biles v. Railroad, 139 N. C. 528, 52 S. E. 129, thus states the principle: "In an action against the defendant railroad, if the jury should find that the plaintiff, while in the performance of his duty, was injured, as the proximate consequence of a defective engine or defective appliance, then the defense of assumption of risk is not open to the defendant, by reason of the fellow servant act." We have found no case in which the plaintiff was not required to show that his injury was the proximate consequence of the defendant's negligence; even in those cases where the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" applies, this causal or proximate relation is sufficiently shown by the act itself, and is inferred from the act from which the injury results. The evidence of the plaintiff, construed in the view most favorable to him, failing to show this causal or proximate relation between the injury received and the negligence of the defendant, we must hold that the judgment of nonsuit was properly rendered, and it is affirmed. Affirmed.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). Two sections of the Code, 2615 and 3800, forbade the defendant to use the summer car at the time it did—in December—and the latter section made it a misdemeanor. In Leathers v. Tobacco Co., 144 N. C. 330, 57 S. E. 11, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 349, this court expressly repudiated the doctrine that the violation of a statute was merely "evidence of negligence" and held that such conduct was "negligence per se." Connor, J., pages 345-348 of 144 N. C., page 17 of 57 S. E., citing a wealth of authorities to that effect. He thus summed up: "Upon careful consideration, we conclude that the law is correctly laid down by Judge Thompson and the other authors quoted and is sustained by the best-considered cases." That case was well considered and is based upon numerous authorities of great weight. A due consideration for the dignity and consistency of our own decisions requires that we adhere to what was there said, after so great deliberation. Even if an unlawful act is only evidence of negligence, that would entitle the plaintiff to have the injury committed in the perpetration of the unlawful act submitted to the jury. If one is engaged in an unlawful act and unintentionally or accidentally slays another, he is not absolved from responsibility but it is manslaughter. State v. Vines, 93 N. C. 493, 53 Am. Rep. 466; State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1107, 44 S. E. 553. If one while engaged in doing an unlawful act injures another, it is certainly negligence. The defendant was violating the law and in the commission of a misdemeanor in running the car. The injury to the plaintiff could not possibly have occurred if the defendant had not disobeyed the statute. There was no evidence of contributory negligence—though the burden to prove that was upon the defendant—and it was necessarily error to withdraw the case from the jury.

Aside from the statute, it was negligence for the defendant in midwinter, with the temperature down to freezing and a strong wind blowing from the north, cloudy and "spitting snow," to refuse the plaintiff's request for a closed or winter car, of which there were three, at least, idle under the shed ready for use. It was in violation of the ordinary dictates of humanity as well as of the statute to require the plaintiff to take instead an open summer car in such weather on a run of three miles out beyond the city limits and back. The plaintiff, in the regular winter car which could and should have been given him as he requested, would have been protected from the weather in the aisle, while collecting the fares, and could not have slipped and been hurt. As it was, the curtains being left down to protect the passengers, the plaintiff was obliged to dodge along, under one curtain after another, which he had to lift so that he could collect the fares. While doing this he had to walk along the running board, which was slippery, for it was "spitting snow," and his hands being numb with cold, and the strong north wind blowing the curtains, his hands slipped when trying to raise a curtain which was "caught." The plaintiff in consequence fell off the running board and was hurt.

The facts not being denied, and the law fixing the defendant with negligence, the judge might well have held as a matter of law that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Certainly he should not have denied the plaintiff the right to have a jury pass on the question. The exposure by the defendant to such weather, unnecessarily and over his protest, was more than negligence. It was inhumane. The statute made the conduct of the company a misdemeanor, even if no harm had accrued to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff, in my judgment, has a right to have a jury, instead of the judge, to pass upon his issues. Employees are entitled to protection from such heedless disregard of their comfort and safety as was shown on this occasion, and are surely entitled to recover for injuries which a jury shall find was sustained from such cause.

LANCASTER TRUST CO. v. MASON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 155*) — "DIVIDENDS" — DEFINITION OF.

Where the word "dividend" is used without qualification or explanation, it signifies dividends payable in money (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2143, 2147.)

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 560, 572; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 157*) — "STOCK DIVIDENDS"—DEFINITION OF.

A "stock dividend" is not in the ordinary sense a dividend; a "dividend" being a distribution of the profits to stockholders as the income from their investment, while a "stock dividend" is merely an increase in the number of shares, such increase representing the same property that was represented by the smaller number of shares (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6664).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 584; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 157*)—SALE OF STOCK—RIGHT TO DIVIDENDS.

A corporation on December 16th declared a 4 per cent. semiannual dividend and a 6 per cent. extra dividend and a 50 per cent. stock dividend, payable to the stockholders of record on January 2d following. After the dividends were declared, but before they were due, plaintiff, a stockholder, sold four shares to defendant, the parties agreeing that the seller should receive the "January dividend," and the amount of the regular semiannual dividend due in January was added to a sight draft attached to the certificates of stock sent to a bank to be delivered upon payment therefor. Neither party had heard of extra cash dividend nor of stock dividend declared. Held, that the "January dividend" reserved included only the cash dividends, and the buyer was entitled to the increased stock represented by the so-called "stock dividend."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 586; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

On rehearing.

Former judgment (65 S. E. 1015) modified, and judgment of trial court reversed, and new trial granted.

BROWN, J. When we considered this cause at last term, we concluded that under the terms of the contract of sale of the stock in the Durham Cotton Manufacturing Company the reservation of the "January dividend" by plaintiff entitled it not only to the regular 4 per cent. and extra 6 per cent. cash dividend declared and payable then, but also to the value of the so-called "50 per cent. stock dividend" which was declared at same time as the regular and extra cash dividends. Upon a careful review of the correspondence between the parties and a further consideration of the case, we are led to the conclusion that the words "allowing the January dividend to us," used in plaintiff's letter of December 23, 1907, were intended to refer to dividends payable in cash only, and do not embrace the so-called "stock dividend" of 50 per cent.

That was not strictly or in the usual sense of the word a dividend. It was simply an increase in the capital stock by dividing the capital of the corporation into a larger number of shares and allotting them to each stockholder in proportion to the number of shares he owned before the increase. This is not infrequent in these days when "watering stock" is no uncommon occurrence; not that we mean to intimate that such has been the case here. Therefore it has been held that, where the word "dividend" is used without qualification or explanation, it signifies dividends payable in money. 14 Cyc. 554, and cases cited; Black, Law Dict.; 3 Words & Phrases, pp. 2143, 2144; Smith v. Hooper, 95 Md. 16, 51 Atl. 844, 54 Atl. 95. This appears to us to be more consistent with the relationship which exists between the stockholders and the corporation. The distinction between the title of a corporation and the interest of its stockholders in the corporate property is familiar and well settled. Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229; Pullen v. Corp. Com'n (at this term), 68 S. E. 155. The ownership of that property is in the corporation, and not in the holders of shares of stock. The certificates of shares of stock denote the interest of each stockholder, which consists in the right to his proportionate part of the profits when declared as dividends, and to a like proportion upon its dissolution, after its debts are paid. Therefore the value of the shares of stock is dependent upon the value of the property retained by the corporation. A cash dividend depletes the treasury of the corporation and detracts from its assets; but a stock dividend neither takes from nor adds to the corporate wealth. The interest of each stockholder remains the same when he receives his stock dividend as it was before. He is neither richer nor poorer. By it nothing is taken from the property of the corporation and nothing added to the interests of the shareholders. Its property is not diminished, and their interests are not increased.

Upon this principle it is held that "accumulated earnings" (upon which stock dividends are supposed to be based), so long as they are held by the corporation, being a part of the corporate property, the interest therein represented by each share is capital, and not the income of that share, as between tenant for life and the remainderman, legal or equitable, thereof. Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 558, 10 Sup. Ct. 1057, 34 L. Ed. 525. In this case it is said that "ordinarily a dividend declared in stock is to be deemed capital, and a dividend in money is to be deemed income of each share." This view is taken by the Court of Appeals of Virginia: "A stock dividend is merely an increase in the number of shares; the increased number representing the same property that was represented by the smaller number of shares. One who sells stock, reserving the dividend that may be declared by a certain date, cannot claim the stock dividend thus declared, but only the cash dividend." Kaufman v. Charlottesville Woolen Mills, 93 Va. 673, 25 S. E. 1003. It is held by the Illinois court that: "A stock dividend gives the stockholder merely an evidence of the additions made by the corporation to its own capital. It adds nothing to the capital of the corporation nor to the capital of the shareholder." De Koven v. Alsop, 205 Ill. 309, 68 N. E. 930, 63 L. R. A. 587. "A stock dividend is not in the ordinary sense a dividend; the latter being the distribution of profits to stockholders as the income from their investments. A stock dividend is merely an increase in the number of shares; the increased number representing exactly the same property that was represented by the smaller number of shares." 7 Words & Phrases, p. 6864, and cases cited.

As it is admitted the plaintiff did not know of any stock dividend, it is manifest that it intended to sell and transfer to the defendant the entire interest in the corporate property represented by the four shares of stock it held prior to any increase in the capital stock. As the defendant testifies that he had no knowledge of such increase, and as he paid $675 per share for each share of the par value of $500, we think it equally evident that he intended to purchase the entire interest of plaintiff in the corporate property.

Therefore we now think that, upon reason and authority, the proper construction of the contract is that the plaintiff sold its entire interest in the corporate property, retaining whatever cash dividend that should be declared on the fruit of the investment that it was parting with. The so-called "stock dividend" of 50 per cent. represented part of the corporate property sold to defendant in which plaintiff reserved no interest, and is therefore not entitled to the whole or any part of it. The former opinion is modified so as to hold that plaintiff is entitled to recover the extra cash dividend, but not the value of the stock dividend or any part of it.

The judgment of the superior court is reversed, and nonsuit set aside, and a new trial ordered. The costs of the appeal is taxed against the defendant. The costs of this rehearing is taxed against plaintiff.

Petition allowed.

HUNTER v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 320*)—INJURY TO THIRD PERSONS—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

In an action against defendant for the death of plaintiff's wife, alleged to have been caused by negligently conducting blasting operations near plaintiff's house, the fact that the work was done for defendant by an independent contractor did not alone exempt defendant from liability, but it appearing that defendant by its own servants had first attempted to perform the work, and became aware that its performance in the manner attempted would injure the plaintiff, and that defendant afterwards secured the work to be done through an independent contractor, who conducted it in the same negligent manner in which it was conducted by defendant, it was liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1261; Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

2. DEATH (§ 31*)—DAMAGES—HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Plaintiff, as administrator, was entitled to recover damages for the wrongful death of his wife, and was not prevented because as husband he was entitled to her earnings, so that she could accumulate nothing, and was valueless to her estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; M. H. Justice, Judge.

Action by J. W. Hunter, administrator, against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff, as administrator of his wife, brought this action to recover damages for the death of his wife, and alleged that:

"(4) During the spring and summer of 1906 the defendant railroad company did willfully, wantonly, and in a grossly negligent manner, and in utter disregard of the rights of the plaintiff's intestate, carry on and conduct its blasting operations across the French Broad river from where the plaintiff's intestate lived, and did use excessively large charges of explosives, and did wantonly, willfully, negligently, and carelessly fail to take proper precautions to prevent throwing of rocks by the explosions of the blasts around and about the home of the plaintiff's intestate.

"(5) The plaintiff in this case, James W. Hunter, who was at the time of the acts and negligence complained of the husband of the plaintiff's intestate, notified the defendant, its agents and servants, of the dangerous and negligent manner in which they and the defendant were conducting the said blasting operations, and the said defendants, its agents and servants, were requested by the said James W. Hunter to use the proper care in such operations, that his intestate was in a delicate state of health, and that such reckless and dangerous blasting so near her home would probably inflict upon her serious injury, and might cause her death; that the defendant railway company, through its agents and servants, replied to the said James W. Hunter, on being notified, that they, the said agents and servants of the defendant, had been instructed to 'tear hell out of the side of that mountain,' and that they intended to do it, regardless of consequences, and thereafter the said blasting was continued in the same negligent manner as before.

"(6) On account of the negligence of the defendant, its agents and servants, as hereinbefore set forth, the health of the plaintiff's intestate was destroyed, and her nervous system was so shocked and wounded that she became seriously ill therefrom and died, all of which was caused by the acts and negligence of the defendant, its agents and servants, as hereinbefore set forth."

The defendant, after denying the imputed acts of negligence, for a further defense pleaded that this defendant, Southern Railway Company, on the — day of June, 1906, made and entered into a written contract with Timothy Shea to construct a roadbed for extension of certain tracks at Alexander, N. C., and that said contract was in all respects a lawful one, which the parties thereto might lawfully make and perform; that the work of constructing a roadbed of the character and nature the said Timothy Shea was employed by this defendant to make was an independent avocation, calling, or business in which the said Timothy Shea was, and had for many years previously been, engaged, and for the exercise of which he had and owned all of the necessary means and appliances; that this defendant, under said contract, was neither principal nor master, nor did it reserve any general or special control over said Timothy Shea either in respect of the manner of performance of said contract by him or in respect of the agents to be employed by the said Shea in doing said work, nor did this defendant, before the commencement of said contract by the said Shea heretofore mentioned, or at the commencement of the same or at any time during the progress of its performance assume or in any manner attempt to assume control of the said Shea or the said work or any of the workmen engaged upon the said work or in any other respect whatever; that the said Shea was neither the agent nor the servant of this defendant, but was an independent contractor, taking said work as a job and as a whole for a definite, fixed, agreed sum, and this defendant was only interested in the result of the work, and not in any way in the means employed by the said Shea in its performance; that in making said contract with said Shea, by which he agreed and contracted to do the work of constructing a roadbed for the extension of certain tracks at Alexander, N. C., this defendant ascertained that the said Shea was a man of experience in the kind and character of work which by said contract he bound himself to perform, and he was in every way thoroughly competent and skilled, and this defendant knew when it employed the said Shea that he for a long time had been engaged in the performance of such work, and this defendant, before making and signing said contract, made due inquiries as to the capacity and reliability of the said Shea in respect of such work, and ascertained that he was both capable and trustworthy, and this defendant is advised, informed, and believes that the said blasting mentioned in the plaintiff's complaint was the blasting done by the said Shea and his employes and subcontractors while engaged in doing the work set out in the contract made between this defendant and the said Timothy Shea. This defendant never authorized the said Timothy Shea or any one else to resort to blasting in constructing the roadbed for the extension of the tracks at Alexander, or to use powder, dynamite, or any other unlawful agency in the performance of said work.

The following issues were submitted to the jury, who answered them as set out:

"(1) Was the death of plaintiff's intestate caused by the negligence of the defendant Southern Railway Company, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) What damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover of defendant Southern Railway Company? Answer: $2,000."

Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and defendant appealed to this court.

Moore & Rollins, for appellant. Craig, Martin & Thomason, Frank Carter, and H. C. Chedester, for appellee.

MANNING, J. In view of the verdict of the jury rendered under the charge of his honor, the following facts are established by the evidence: That in the month of April or May, 1906, the defendant, desiring to widen its roadbed at or near Alexander, in Buncombe county, and lay additional tracks or straighten its existing tracks, then used and having been used for many years, found it necessary to blast out a perpendicular cliff of rock, about 400 feet long and 42 feet high at its greatest height, situate on its right of way, and began the work of blasting down the cliff by its own employes. This continued two or three weeks. The plaintiff lived across the French Broad river with his wife and two small children, in the corporate limits of Alexander, and a quarter of a mile from the blasting. The result of defendant's operations was to throw rocks of large and small size across the river in plaintiff's yard, on his house and buildings, in his garden and field, and the blasting was of such violence that the window glass in plaintiff's house was shaken out, and his wife much frightened and rendered very nervous. The plaintiff made frequent complaints, but to no avail. The defendant suspended operations by its own employes, and in June, 1906, made a contract with one Timothy Shea to continue the work, and complete it according to certain plans and specifications. He soon thereafter began work, and conducted it in the same manner as the defendant had done, and he and his foreman and other witnesses offered by the defendant testified that the work could be done in no other way. The results, in so far as it affected the plaintiff's wife and his premises, were the same. Rocks were constantly thrown with great force in and around his house. In the latter part of August plaintiff's wife was taken with typhoid fever. The violent blasting continued with its results. The effect upon plaintiff's wife was that she was kept in a highly nervous condition; that her condition was made known to the foreman in charge and the effect of the blasting and falling rock upon her; that the blasting continued up to three or four days before her death. The physician testified that, in his opinion, but for the blasting and the nervous condition and alarm produced by it upon Mrs. Hunter, she would have recovered. After making several efforts to have the blasting stopped, the plaintiff succeeded, with a threat of suit, on Thursday or Friday before his wife's death on the following Monday night, September 11, 1906. This action was begun October 4, 1906. The liability of the defendant was presented to the jury in this language, given substantially in accordance with one of the prayers of the defendant: "The court charges you that the act of blasting, as a means of excavation of a railroad in North Carolina, is not in itself negligence; that it is the recognized method of clearing the way of the railroad track, and the simple fact of the blasting making noise is not negligence, for that is the natural result of blasting. So that this, aside from the fact that rocks were thrown, if you find from the greater weight of the evidence that they were thrown, in the yard of the plaintiff, the court charges you that the noise of the blasting would not be negligence unless you find that after the contractor was notified of the sickness of Mrs. Hunter that he willfully and wantonly and negligently continued the blasting; that the simple act of blasting would not be negligence, and, if the result of it was to produce death even, the simple noise disassociated from the fact that if they had thrown any rocks in the yard, had produced her death, that would not be negligence for which the defendant would be liable, unless, as I say, it was done negligently, willfully, and wantonly, after notice on the part of the contractor." The defendant, however, contended that the vital error committed by his honor was his failure to give the following instruction: "The court charges the jury that under the terms of the contract introduced in evidence between the defendant Southern Railway Company and one Timothy Shea the relation of master and servant did not arise between them, but that the said Timothy Shea, under said contract, was an independent contractor, and anything done by said Timothy Shea under said contract he was responsible for, and not the Southern Railway Company." His honor held, and so charged the jury, that the contract created Timothy Shea an independent contractor, but declined to hold that that fact alone exonerated the defendant from liability to the plaintiff. In Young v. Lumber Co., 147 N. C. 28, 60 S. E. 654, Mr. Justice Connor, speaking for the court, said: "When the contract is for something that may be lawfully done, and it is proper in its terms, and there has been no negligence in selecting a suitable person in respect to it, and no general control is reserved, either in respect to the manner of doing the work or the agents to be employed in doing it, and the person for whom the work is to be done is interested only in the ultimate result of the work and not in the several steps as it progresses, the latter is not liable to third persons for the negligence of the contractor as his master." This is quoted with approval in Gay v. Lumber Co., 148 N. C. 336, 62 S. E. 436, from the opinion of Mr. Justice Walker in Craft v. Lumber Co., 132 N. C. 157, 43 S. E. 597, and expresses with clearness the general doctrine. In both these cases, however, the exceptions are recognized as well settled which impose liability upon the proprietor or owner for the acts of the independent contractor. In Young v. Lumber Co., supra, it is said: "It is conceded that, upon grounds of public policy, certain exceptions are made by the law to the general rule. The one upon which plaintiff relies is well stated by Andrews, C. J., in Engel v. Eureka Club, 187 N. Y. 100, 82 N. E. 1052, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692: "Where the thing contracted to be done is necessarily attended with danger, however skillfully and carefully performed, or is intrinsically dangerous, it is held that the party who lets the contract to do the act cannot thereby escape responsibility from any injury resulting from its execution, although the act to be performed may be lawful. But, if the act to be done may be safely done in the exercise of due care, although, in the absence of such care, injurious consequences to third persons would be likely to result, then the contractor alone is liable, provided it was his duty under the contract to exercise due care." In Davis v. Summerfield, 133 N. C. 325, 45 S. E. 654, 63 L. R. A. 492, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Montgomery, says: "There is yet another class of cases where there is an exception to the exemption, and that is where the thing contracted to be done is necessarily attended with danger, however skillfully and carefully performed, said by Judge Dillon to be 'intrinsically dangerous.' There the employer cannot escape liability for an injury resulting from the doing of the work, although the act performed might be lawful." These rules by which is fixed the liability of the owner or proprietor for the acts of the independent contractor are stated in 2 Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 1060: "(1) If a contractor faithfully performs his contract, and the third person is injured by the contractor in the course of its due performance, or by its result, the employer is liable, for he causes the precise act to be done which occasions the injury; but for the negligence of the contractor not done under the contract, but in violation of it, the employer is, in general, not liable. (2) If I employ a contractor to do a job of work for me which, in the progress of its execution, obviously exposes others to unusual perils, I ought, I think, to be responsible on the same principle as in the last case, for I cause acts to be done which naturally expose others to injury. (3) If I employ as contractor a person incompetent or untrustworthy, I may be liable for injuries done to third persons by his carelessness in the execution of his contract. (4) The employer may be guilty of personal neglect, connecting itself with the negligence of the contractor in such manner as to render both liable." Lawrence v. Shipman, 39 Conn. 586; 1 Thompson on Negligence, §§ 652, 771; Wetherbee v. Partridge, 175 Mass. 185, 55 N. E. 894, 78 Am. St. Rep. 486; Tiffin v. McCormack, 84 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408; Railroad v. Morey, 47 Ohio St. 207, 24 N. E. 269, 7 L. R. A. 701; Hawver v. Whalen, 49 Ohio St. 69, 29 N. E. 1049, 14 L. R. A. 828, and editor's note; Thomas v. Harrington, 72 N. H. 45, 54 Atl. 285, 65 L. R. A. 742, and editor's note; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Tow (Ky.) 63 S. W. 27, 66 L. R. A. 941, and note. In Wetherbee v. Partridge, 175 Mass.

185, 55 N. E. 894, 78 Am. St. Rep. 486, the conclusion of the court is thus stated in the headnote: "At the trial of an action for injuries to the plaintiff's property by the blasting of rocks upon adjoining land of the defendant, what the defense relied on was that the work was done by an independent contractor. The contract contemplated that blasting would be done, and the place where it was done was within three or four feet of the line between the plaintiff's and the defendant's land, and about eight or nine feet from the plaintiff's house. Held, that it is plain that performance of the contract would do the damage complained of unless it was guarded against, and that the defendant was bound to see that due care was used to prevent harm." In the present case, from the evidence of the defendant, it was plain that performance of the contract would injure the plaintiff. The defendant by its own servants had first attempted to perform the work subsequently included in its contract with Shea—the independent contractor—and the injury to plaintiff was made plain. The independent contractor prosecuted the work in the same manner as the defendant had done, and testified it could be done in no other way, and he produced like results to the plaintiff. It therefore in our opinion results from the facts of this case that, whether we follow the New York rule (which this court in Davis v. Summerfield, supra, declined to follow, and the Massachusetts court in Wetherbee v. Partridge, supra, also declined to follow) or accept the doctrine of the cases cited, we must reach the conclusion that the defendant is liable under the evidence in this case.

The sole remaining question to be determined is whether plaintiff, as administrator of his wife, can recover damages for her wrongful death, or is he prevented because, as husband, he is entitled to her earnings, and she can accumulate nothing, and is valueless to her estate. We cannot yield our assent to this argument of the defendant. We are not prepared to so interpret our law that, under Lord Campbell's act, all the wives in the state could meet with a tortious and wrongful death, and yet, because the husbands are entitled to their earnings, the issue of damages must be answered, "Nothing." Nor can the defendant escape liability because the particular form of injury was not foreseen. "While the defendant could not foresee the exact consequence of his act, he ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have known that he was subjecting plaintiff and his family to danger, and to have taken proper precautions to guard against it." Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 55 S. E. 778; Hudson v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 198, 55 S. E. 103; Drum v. Miller, 135 N. C. 208, 47 S. E. 421, 65 L. R. A. 890, 102 Am. St. Rep. 528; Sawyer v. Railroad, 145 N. C. 24, 58 S. E. 598, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 200; Rolin v. To- bacco Co., 141 N. C. 300, 53 S. E. 891, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335. A careful examination of the record and the brief of the learned counsel of the defendant has failed to discover to us any reversible error, and the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

ROBERTS v. PRATT.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 820*)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—ACTION ON—DEFENSES—FRAUD.

In an action on the judgment of a sister state, defendant may plead fraud in the procurement thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1486, 1487; Dec. Dig. § 820.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 820*)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—ACTION ON—DEFENSES.

In an action on a judgment of a sister state, defendant was precluded from pleading fraud in the procurement of the judgment, it appearing that his application to set aside the judgment on that ground had been denied by a court of that state having jurisdiction to entertain the application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 820.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 80*)—PRESUMPTIONS—LAW OF SISTER STATE.

In the absence of evidence as to the law, statutory or otherwise, of a sister state, it will be presumed that the common law obtains.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 80; * Common Law, Cent. Dig. § 14.]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 342*)—SETTING ASIDE.

The rule that courts, governed by the common law, will not as a rule entertain a proceeding to disturb a final judgment after the term in which it was rendered, a bill in equity being generally necessary, does not apply, when on the face of the record, or otherwise, it appears that the judgment was entered contrary to the course and practice of the court, including all cases where errors would be corrected by writs of error coram nobis or vobis.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 668-671; Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 342*)—SETTING ASIDE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Revisal 1905, § 513, permitting the granting of relief from a judgment at any time within one year after notice thereof, is restrictive on the powers inherent in common-law courts of general jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

6. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 13*)—BAR—ANOTHER ACTION PENDING.

The pendency of another action for the same cause in the courts of another state is not a bar to judicial proceedings in this state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, Cent. Dig. §§ 92-98, 100; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

7. JUDGMENT (§ 822*)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—DEFENSES—COUNTERCLAIM.

Since a judgment does not embrace any matters which might have been brought into the litigation, or causes of action which plaintiff might have joined, but which in fact were neither joined nor embraced by the pleadings, in an action on a judgment of another state defendant was entitled to set up as a counterclaim a demand for rents, such demand not having been necessarily disposed of by the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Webb, Judge.

Action by Grace Roberts against William M. Pratt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed. New trial.

The plaintiff instituted suit in said county to recover on a judgment rendered in her favor against defendant in the state circuit court of South Dakota for the sum of $1,646, said court having jurisdiction of the cause and parties at the time the same was rendered. Defendant answered, alleging fraud in procurement of said judgment, in that while said suit was pending in the Dakota court, there being some matters of account and adjustment between plaintiff and defendant, the defendant paid several hundred dollars on the claim, and plaintiff and defendant then and there had a written agreement that no further steps should be taken in said suit without notice first served on defendant or his attorneys; that plaintiff in violation of said agreement had induced the Dakota court to proceed further and render the judgment sued on, without allowing credit for payments made, and without any accounting had, and by serving a pretended notice on an attorney known by plaintiff not to represent defendant at the time, and this with a fraudulent design and purpose, etc. Defendant further answered, and set up a counterclaim alleging, in substance, that plaintiff through her attorney and agent for the purpose, one Edwin Van Cise, had collected from certain real estate belonging to defendant, situate in Deadwood, S. D., rents at the rate of $180 per year for about seven years next before action brought, for which said sum plaintiff was accountable to defendant. Plaintiff replied, and averred that defendant should not be allowed to further plead fraud in the procurement of the South Dakota judgment, for the reason that defendant had appeared in said court, and formally applied by motion to set aside said judgment on the ground of fraud and on the same facts as now contained in the answer, and, on the hearing, the South Dakota court denied the application. Plaintiff replied further that this counterclaim for $1,260, set up by defendant, was involved and embraced in a suit now pending in South Dakota, said court having jurisdiction of the cause and parties, and in which Edwin Van Cise, as trustee, was seeking for a final account and settlement as trustee. The present cause coming on for trial, and the plaintiff having offered in evidence the record of the South Dakota suit showing that plaintiff had regularly obtained the judgment sued on, and that defendant had moved to set aside the judgment for fraud, and the motion had been denied, the court being of opinion that defendant was thereby precluded from further averment of fraud in impeachment of the South Dakota judgment, entered judgment as follows: "This cause coming on for hearing at this time before the undersigned judge and a jury, and a jury having been impaneled, and the pleadings read, and the plaintiff having introduced in evidence the record of the proceedings, certified from the Eighth judicial circuit of the circuit court in and for Lawrence county, South Dakota, including the order to vacate the judgment theretofore rendered in that court, the same being the judgment sued upon in this action, with the affidavit of defendant, and the affidavits thereto attached (copies of the affidavits, etc., filed in the South Dakota court in the application to vacate said judgment), and the court being of the opinion that said order of said South Dakota court refusing to vacate said judgment is a bar to defendant in this action in this court. It is now considered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff have and recover of the defendant judgment for the sum of said judgment, to wit, the sum of $1,666.45, with interest from the date of rendition, or from June 2, 1906, until paid, together with the costs of this action to be taxed by the clerk. [Signed] Jas. L. Webb, Judge Presiding."

Whereupon defendant excepted and appealed.

Pless & Winborne, for appellant. W. T. Morgan, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). Under our system of procedure, it is permissible for a defendant to plead fraud in the procurement of a judgment rendered against him in the courts of a sister state. The question has been so recently and fully discussed in the case of Mottu v. Davis, 151 N. C. 237, 65 S. E. 969, that we do not think further comment is at this time either necessary or desirable.

We agree with his honor below, however, that the defendant is precluded from availing himself of any such plea in the present case by the judgment of the South Dakota court denying his application to set aside the judgment on that ground, a position undoubtedly correct if, on the facts as they now appear, the South Dakota court had jurisdiction to entertain and determine the question of fraud as presented in defendant's application. The proceedings were introduced showing that defendant had personally appeared in the Dakota court, and moved to set aside the judgment for fraud, and on averment of substantially the same facts which he now sets up in his answer by way of defense, and that court had entered judgment denying the motion. No reasons for this denial are set forth in the judgment or elsewhere, and no evidence was introduced as to the law of South Dakota, statutory or otherwise, bearing on the subject. The question presented must, therefore, be decided on the principles of the common law, this being in accordance with the presumption ordinarily obtaining in such cases. Moody v. Johnson, 112 N. C. 798-801, 17 S. E. 578; Brown v. Pratt, 56 N. C. 202. South Dakota having been a part of the Louisiana Purchase, it might be suggested that a different presumption would obtain; but, considering the facts and conditions which prevailed when that state was settled, the principle is established as stated. Thus in Moody v. Johnson, supra, it was said: "In the absence of any judicial knowledge of the statutory law of another state, the courts of this state must act upon the presumption that the common law of England, as modified by statutes passed previous to our separation, and so far as they are consistent with the genius of our republican institutions, prevailed in the original colonial states and all other states formed primarily by emigration from them."

It will be noted that the fact of emigration from a country having its jurisprudence based upon the common law and its doctrines is given weight rather than the territorial placing of the new country—that is, where the movement was principally into an unsettled portion of the new territory, and at a time when the same was without government of civilized community. The distinction being very well stated in the case of Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226, in which, among other things, it was held: "(2) In the absence of proof to the contrary, the common law is presumed to exist in those states of the Union which were originally colonies of England, or were carved out of such colonies. (3) The same presumption prevails as to the existence of the common law in those states which have been established in territory acquired since the Revolution, where such territory was not, at the time of its acquisition, occupied by an organized and civilized community; but where the population, upon the establishment of government, was formed by emigration from the original states." And on this subject, Chief Justice Field, delivering the opinion, said: "A similar presumption must prevail as to the existence of the common law in those states which have been established in territory acquired since the Revolution, where such territory was not at the time of its acquisition occupied by an organized and civilized community; where, in fact, the population of the new state upon the establishment of government was formed by emigration from the original states. As in British colonies, established in uncultivated regions by emigration from the parent country, the subjects are considered as carrying with them the common law, so far as it is applicable to their new situation; so, when American citizens emigrate into territory which is unoccupied by civilized man, and commence the formation of a new government, they are equally considered as carrying with them so much of the same common law, in its modified and improved condition under the influence of modern civilization and republican principles, as is suited to their new condition and wants."

Applying, then, the doctrine as indicated, courts administering justice according to course and practice of the common law would not as a rule entertain a proceeding to disturb a final judgment instituted after the term in which it was rendered; to effect such a purpose a bill in equity was generally required. Phillips v. Negley, 117 U. S. 665, 6 Sup. Ct. 901, 29 L. Ed. 1013; Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 26 L. Ed. 797; Mock v. Coggin, 101 N. C. 366, 7 S. E. 899.

The rule stated, however, does not apply when, on the face of the record, or otherwise, it was made to appear that a judgment had been entered contrary to the course and practice of the court, including, also, all cases where errors would be corrected by writs of error coram nobis or vobis. The scope and purpose of these writs it seems being the same, the former being the proper designation when the proceedings were heard in the Court of King's Bench where the monarch was presumed to be present, and the second when the matter was carried on in courts of lesser dignity, but having full jurisdiction. The power to correct errors by means of these writs was very generally regarded as inherent in common-law courts of general jurisdiction; and, wherever it formerly prevailed, the same results may be obtained in modern practice by means of a motion. In systems like ours, where law and equity are combined, and relief administered in one and the same jurisdiction, the power is universally exercised, and, when not regulated by statute, there is a disposition and tendency to extend its scope and application. Bronson v. Schulten, supra; Oraig v. Wroth, 47 Md. 281; 5 Ency. Pl. & Pr. pp. 27, 28, 30; 7 Ency. U. S. Supreme Court Rep. 592.

In 7 Ency. S. C. R., it is said: "It is believed to be the settled modern practice that in all instances in which irregularities could formerly be corrected upon a writ of error coram vobis or audita querela, the same objects may be effected by motion to the courts as a mode more simple, more expeditious, and less fruitful of difficulty and expense."

In Enc. Pl. & Pr., supra, the author says: "The office of the writ of coram nobis is to bring the attention of the court to, and obtain relief from, errors of fact, such as death of either party pending the suit and before judgment therein; or infancy, where the party was not properly represented by guardian; or coverture, where the common-law disability still exists; or insanity, it seems, at the time of the trial; or a valid defense existing in the facts of the case, but which without negligence on the part of the defendant, was not made, either through duress or fraud or excusable mistake; these facts not appearing on the face of the record, and being such as, if known in season, would have prevented the rendition and entry of the judgment questioned."

And further: "Notwithstanding occasional statements that the writ of coram nobis has 'fallen into desuetude,' and that 'redress obtained through its aid is now sought by motion,' it was a part of the common law received from the mother country, and, when not specially abrogated by statute, still remains a factor in modern practice. Proceedings of like nature, under whatever name, partake of the same underlying principles in practice."

In Oraig v. Wroth, supra, it was held: "That the power to set aside judgments upon motion for fraud, deceit, surprise, or irregularity in obtaining them is a common-law power, incident to courts of record."

And these principles have been upheld and applied in numerous and well-considered decisions: (1) Tucker v. James, 59 Tenn. 333; (2) Crawford v. Williams, 31 Tenn. 341; (3) State v. Calhoun, 50 Kan. 523, 32 Pac. 38, 18 L. R. A. 838, 34 Am. St. Rep. 141; (4) Marble v. Vanhorn, 53 Mo. App. 361. See, also, McIntosh v. Commissioners, 18 Kan. 171; Thompson v. Connell, 31 Or. 231, 48 Pac. 467, 65 Am. St. Rep. 818; Browning v. Roane, 9 Ark. 354, 50 Am. Dec. 218; Binsse v. Barker, 13 N. J. Law, 263, 23 Am. Dec. 720.

Our own statute on the subject (Revisal 1905, § 513), limiting such application to a period of one year from rendition of the judgment is therefore restrictive on the powers inherent in common-law courts of general jurisdiction.

The case of Whitney v. Hazzard, 18 S. D. 490, 101 N. W. 346, while not introduced as evidence of the law of that state, in no wise militates against the position stated. In that case, the allegations in impeachment of the judgment extended both to the judgment itself and the motion to set the same aside, and so is distinguished from the case before us, and this decision in Whitney v. Hazzard gives clear intimation that the court had jurisdiction to dispose of the question presented by motion.

This being the doctrine applicable, on the facts as they now appear, the judgment of the Dakota court, as heretofore stated, denying defendant's application to set aside the original judgment on the ground of fraud, will preclude all further inquiry on that question, and render the latter judgment an estoppel of record as to all matters embraced in the pleadings which may be considered as material to its rendition. Turnage v. Joyner, 145 N. C. 81, 58 S. E. 757; Mfg. Co. v. Moore, 144 N. C. 527, 57 S. E. 213, 10 L. R.

A. (N. S.) 734, 119 Am. St. Rep. 983; Tuttle v. Harrill, 85 N. C. 453.

While we thus uphold his honor's ruling in disallowing further inquiry on this issue of fraud, we think there was error in the judgment rendered, for the reason that the answer contains a demand against plaintiff by reason of rents received from property belonging to defendant, and for which plaintiff is alleged to be personally accountable. True, plaintiff replies that this is a matter now being litigated between these parties in the courts of South Dakota, having jurisdiction both of the cause and parties; but no proof was offered on this issue, and, if there had been, the weight of authority is to the effect that the pendency of another action for the same cause in the courts of another state is not a bar to judicial proceedings here (1 Ency. Pl. & Pr. p. 764), and our own court has so held. Sloan v. McDowell, 75 N. C. 29.

It may be that on fuller investigation and inquiry the receipt of the rents can be shown to have been under such circumstances that they amount to a payment on plaintiff's note, and may be included in the estoppel of record arising from the judgment; but the facts, as they thus far appear, are not such as to justify the court in holding, as a matter of law, that these rents are necessarily disposed of by the judgment. The demand is set up in a counterclaim and may be available as such under the decision of Tyler v. Capeheart, 125 N. C. 64, 34 S. E. 103, in which it was held as follows: "(1) A judgment is decisive of the points raised by the pleadings, or which might be properly predicated upon them; but does not embrace any matters which might have been brought into the litigation, or causes of action which the plaintiff might have joined, but which in fact are neither joined nor embraced by the pleadings. (2) Although the present cause of action might have been set up as a second cause of action in a former suit, but was not, and was not actually litigated, and was not 'such matter as was necessarily implied therein,' the plea of res judicata will not avail."

The cause, therefore, must be remanded for further inquiry on defendant's counterclaim, and to that end the judgment is set aside and a new trial ordered.

New trial.

(153 N. C. 935)

BROOKS MFG. CO. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1910.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—DELAY IN THE TRANSPORTATION OF FREIGHT — PENALTY — STATUTES.

Neither Revisal 1905, § 2632, providing as originally enacted for a penalty for delay in the transportation of freight, nor as amended by Acts 1907, c. 461, so as to require a delivery at destination within a time specified, imposes a penalty for delay in delivery to the consignee after transportation ceases, nor compels a carrier to deliver loaded cars off its own right of way onto the private track of the consignee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 84*)—DELIVERY OF FREIGHT—CONTRACTS.

A carrier cannot be compelled to operate its engine on a private track belonging to a private corporation or individual over which the railroad has no control or supervision; but a delivery of a car load of freight to the consignee on its private track is a matter of agreement between the carrier and the consignee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-298; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 84*)—DELIVERY OF FREIGHT—CONTRACTS.

A carrier hauling its cars onto the private track of the consignee for unloading must place the car in such a position that it may be accessible for unloading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-298; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 140*)—DELIVERY OF FREIGHT—CONTRACTS.

Transportation ceases when the duty of the carrier as a warehouseman commences and as to freight transported in car load lots when the car reaches the destination and is placed for unloading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 609, 609½, 611-616; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 88*)—DELIVERY OF FREIGHT—CONTRACTS.

A carrier leaving a car in its freightyards for unloading must place the car in such a part of its freightyards as to make it reasonably accessible for delivery before transportation ceases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 280-289½, 319-321; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—DELIVERY OF FREIGHT—CONTRACTS—"INTERMEDIATE POINT."

A station at which a car must be taken out of a local train which comes into the station and then placed into another train leaving the station for the point of destination is not an "intermediate point," within Revisal 1905, § 2632, requiring transportation of freight within a reasonable time, and authorizing a delay at an intermediate point.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Long, Judge.

Action by the Brooks Manufacturing Company against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The jury found the following special verdict:

"This was a shipment of a solid car load of lumber from Pittsboro, N. C., to Greensboro, N. C., consigned to the plaintiff. Shipment was over the Seaboard Air Line and the Southern Railway. The Seaboard Air Line delivered this car to the Southern Railway Company at Cary, N. C., December 13, 1906, at 4 p. m. Said car arrived at Greensboro December 16, 1906, and upon its arrival notice was given in writing to the plaintiff by the defendant by mail on December 1, 1906. That said car was placed by the defendant at the siding of the Brooks Manufacturing Company, the plaintiff, on December 18, 1906, at 6 p. m. That the distance from Cary to Greensboro is 73 miles. That a reasonable time for the going of the car from Cary to Greensboro is 1 day of 24 hours. This is not inclusive of any lay-over time that the defendant may be entitled to under the statute at either the initial point, Cary, or any intermediate point, to wit, Durham, if it is an intermediate point. The siding of the plaintiff is within one-quarter mile of the defendant's freightyard at Greensboro, and is connected by means of a switch with defendant's track in its freightyard at Greensboro, and there were physical connections by means of switches between the siding of the plaintiff and the track of the defendant leading from Sanford to Greensboro. The main line from Sanford to Greensboro runs within 30 feet of plaintiff's siding, and the main line is connected by a switch, 175 feet from the usual place of unloading. The shipments of lumber consigned to the plaintiff shipped over defendant's road are usually placed upon this siding; 95 per cent. of the same being so placed for unloading, and the other 5 per cent. being placed at other points in cases where cars have been turned over to other parties by the consignee. The car in question was not placed for unloading elsewhere than on the plaintiff's siding. The main line from Cary to Greensboro connects with the Sanford line by a switch in the Greensboro freightyards of defendant company and about one-quarter of a mile from plaintiff's siding. The schedule of the freight trains from Cary to Greensboro at the time of the shipments referred to was as follows: Train No. 183, through freight, passes Cary at 6:15 p. m.; does not stop; leaves Durham at 8:15 p. m.; arrives at Greensboro at 1:54 p. m. Train No. 163, local freight, leaves Cary at 7:30 p. m.; arrives at Durham at 8:30 a. m. This train does not go farther west than Durham, but returns to Selma from Durham. Train No. 107, local freight, leaves Durham at 10:24 a. m.; and arrives in Greensboro at 5 p. m. Train No. 171, through freight, passes Cary at 10:25 p. m.; but does not stop there; leaves Durham at 11:28 p. m.; and arrives in Greensboro at 2:50 a. m. Train No. 173, through freight, passes Cary at 9:10 a. m.; but does not stop there; leaves Durham at 11:20 a. m.; and arrives in Greensboro at 2:10 p. m. That local freight trains only stopped at Cary. That the local freight ran from Cary to Durham and there that train stopped. This train stopped at Durham and returned to Selma, N. C. The car was left in the yards at Durham until the next freight was made up going to Greensboro, by which train it was brought to Greensboro. There is no question as to the payment of freight by the plaintiff. This car of lumber was not assigned by plaintiff consignee."

The following ruling and judgment was entered thereon in the superior court:

"Upon the foregoing special verdict of the jury, the question of law is left to the court to decide whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The court is of the opinion that the defendant should be allowed two days at the initial point and one day as reasonable time to have transported the goods from Cary to Greensboro, N. C. The court is also of opinion that, in view of what the Supreme Court has said in Hilliard v. Railroad, 51 N. C. 343, and in Alexander v. Railroad, 144 N. C. 95 [56 S. E. 697], and other cases, the duty of the defendant in transporting the car at destination was fulfilled when it brought the car and placed it in a state ready to be delivered to the plaintiff on the siding of the plaintiff in Greensboro, having physical connection with the defendant's tracks.

"It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court, after allowing the defendant two days at the initial point and one day as reasonable for transportation, that the car was detained in its possession for a period of two days before finishing the transportation. It is therefore further considered that the plaintiff recover of the defendant $30 and the cost of this action to be taxed by the clerk."

Wilson & Ferguson, for appellant. Justice & Broadhurst, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The first assignment of error is that his honor erred in holding that the defendant was required not only to transport the car from Cary to Greensboro within the statutory period, but must within that time place the car upon the plaintiff's side track.

1. We do not construe his honor's judgment to hold exactly that, under the authority of the cases of Hilliard v. Railroad, 51 N. C. 343, and Alexander v. Railroad, 144 N. C. 95, 56 S. E. 697, cited in his judgment, it was the duty of the defendant to deliver the loaded car to the plaintiff on its private side track. Neither of those cases sustain that position. On the contrary, the Alexander Case expressly holds that the carrier is not penalized by section 2632, Revision 1905, for delay in delivering the freight to the consignee after transportation ceases, and that such section does not include a failure to deliver, but only a failure to transport; "delivery necessarily requiring the concurrence of the consignee and having a distinctive meaning." Although this statute was amended by chapter 461, Acts 1907, so as to require a delivery at destination within the time specified, we have held that when the goods arrive, and the carrier has notified the consignee that it is ready to deliver, it has discharged its duty. Wall v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 411, 61 S. E. 277. But this statute as amended does not undertake to compel a railway company to deliver loaded cars off its own right of way and tracks onto the private track of an individual or private corporation. Therefore a delivery of the car load of lumber to plaintiff upon its private track, belonging to it and leading to its mill, must of necessity be a matter of agreement between plaintiff and defendant and cannot come within the purview of section 2632. A railroad company cannot be compelled to operate its engines on a private track belonging to a private corporation or individual over which the railroad company has no control or supervision. But whatever reasons the judge gave for his judgment, the facts set out in the special verdict sustain it. It is found as a fact therein that "the car in question was not placed for unloading elsewhere than on the plaintiff's siding." While the defendant was under no legal obligation to haul this car off its own tracks and onto the private tracks of plaintiff, yet it was its duty to place the car in a position for unloading so that it may be accessible for that purpose. Transportation ceases when the duty of the carrier as a warehouseman commences, and in respect to freight transported in car load lots when the car reaches destination and is placed for unloading. Wall v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 408, 61 S. E. 277. What particular parts of the carrier's tracks and freightyards may be used for such purposes must of necessity be left to its discretion; but the car must be reasonably accessible and placed for delivery before transportation is fully ended.

2. The second assignment of error is that his honor did not hold that Durham was an intermediate point and did not allow the defendant any time for necessary delay there. We are unable to find in the special verdict any fact that warrants the contention that Durham is an "intermediate" point between Cary and Greensboro within the meaning of the statute. What constitutes such intermediate point is discussed and decided in Wall v. Railroad, supra; Davis v. Railroad, 145 N. C. 207, 59 S. E. 53.

ARMSTRONG v. A. C. TUXBURY LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. June 1, 1910.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 276*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—UNGUARDED MACHINERY—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a servant against the master for injuries to his arm from catching his clothing in an unguarded cog gear, plaintiff held not entitled to recover under the evidence. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 950-952; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; J. W. De Vore, Judge.

Action by Frank T. Armstrong against the A. C. Tuxbury Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Miller, Whaley & Bissell and Smythe, Lee & Frost, for appellant. Legare, Holman & Baker, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant in allowing the cog gear to remain unguarded, so that plaintiff's coat was caught in the same thereby pulling his arm in the cog gear and so injuring the same as to necessitate amputation. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $7,000. As we are clearly of the opinion that there should be a reversal, we will notice only certain of the exceptions which compel the same.

After the pleadings had been read, plaintiff's counsel stated that he would object to the introduction of any testimony in support of the defense of contributory negligence upon the ground that such defense was not sufficiently set forth in the answer. After argument, the presiding judge announced that in his opinion contributory negligence was not sufficiently pleaded, and that he would exclude all testimony in support thereof. While there is now no specific exception to this ruling, the question is fairly presented in the ninth and eleventh exceptions, which are as follows:

"(9) The presiding judge erred in refusing to charge the fifth instruction submitted by the defendant: 'If the employer is negligent in not providing a safe place in which his employé is to work, and the employé meets with an injury thereby, yet, if a proximate cause of the injury to the employé is the employé's own negligence, concurring and combining with that of the employer, and thus contributing to bring about the injury, he cannot hold the employer responsible'—because, it is submitted, the answer of the defendant had sufficiently pleaded contributory negligence, and no demurrer to the answer or motion to make more definite and certain having been made, the defendant was entitled to have the issue submitted to the jury."

"(11) The presiding judge erred in charging the jury as follows: 'The defense of contributory negligence is not to be considered by you. I charge you that you must conclude from this evidence, or, rather, if you do conclude from this evidence that the plaintiff was injured and damaged, if you conclude that he was injured and damaged on account of his own negligence, then, under the pleadings in this case, the defendant would not be liable; but if, although the plaintiff was guilty of negligence and the defendant was guilty of negligence, yet if you believe that the defendant's negligence was the direct and proximate cause of the injury, the plaintiff could still recover'—thus again withholding from the jury the issue of contributory negligence."

Under the ruling of the court, the defendant was denied opportunity to offer evidence as to contributory negligence, and under the charge the jury were not allowed to consider the matter of contributory negligence arising under the testimony of the plaintiff. No testimony was offered in the case except that given by plaintiff himself. It seems manifest that this is reversible error, if the defendant interposed the plea of contributory negligence.

The answer, besides a general denial, was as follows:

"(3) Further answering, this defendant alleges that the plaintiff was the engineer of the defendant, in charge of the machinery by which he was injured, and it was his duty to make safe the place at or near the machinery where employes worked, and, if the place at which he was injured was not sufficiently guarded against danger, such condition was due to the plaintiff's negligence in failing to perform his duty.

"(4) And, further answering, this defendant alleges that the plaintiff was fully aware of the character and condition of the machinery and cogs at which he was injured, and of whatever dangers attended upon oiling the box, and that plaintiff voluntarily assumed the risk attendant upon such oiling of the box, and his injury was due to the risk he thus assumed.

"(5) And, further answering, this defendant alleges that even if it were negligent—which it denies—still the accident to the plaintiff was due proximately to his own negligence, in that he conducted himself in a careless manner, and failed to observe caution in keeping his body from coming in contact with said cogs, which he could have done if he had used due care."

Paragraph 5 clearly states, in effect, that, if defendant was negligent, plaintiff's own negligence proximately caused his injury, and the facts are stated from which plaintiff's contributory negligence is sought to be inferred. The insertion of the words "which it denies" ought not to be given any greater force than is involved in the previous general denial of negligence. The omission of the words "contributory negligence" or "negligence of plaintiff concurring and combining with the defendant's negligence" was not such a fatal defect as to authorize the court at that stage of the case to ignore the attempted plea of contributory negligence, especially when the facts are stated which it is claimed show contributory negligence. This was not such an entire failure to state the defense as to warrant the court in excluding evidence of contributory negligence, but, at most, it was a defective plea which should have been corrected on motion to make more definite and certain by amendment, in harmony with the rule stated. Pom. Code Rem. 548, and in Wingo v. Inman Mills, 76 S. C. 563, 57 S. E. 525.

Contributory negligence is entirely distinct from assumption of risk, although in certain phases they approximate each other. The fact that there is a dim twilight marking the close of day and the beginning of night does not destroy the distinction between day and night. Our cases clearly recognize and enforce the distinction. Bodie v. Railway, 61 S. C. 468, 39 S. E. 715; James v. Manufacturing Co., 80 S. C. 237, 238, 61 S. E. 391. In Naramore v. Cleveland, etc., R. R. Co., 96 Fed. 298, 37 C. C. A. 490, 48 L. R. A. 68, Circuit Judge Taft, delivering the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, said: "Assumption of risk and contributory negligence approximate where the danger is so obvious and imminent that no ordinarily prudent man would assume the risk of injury therefrom. But where the danger, though present and appreciated, is one which many men are in the habit of assuming, and which prudent men who must earn a living are willing to assume for extra compensation, one who assumes the risk cannot be said to be guilty of contributory negligence, if, having in view the risk of danger assumed, he uses care reasonably commensurate with the risk to avoid injurious consequences. One who does not use such care, and who, by reason thereof, suffers injury, is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover because he and not the master causes the injury or because they jointly cause it." In the case of Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. R. Co., 205 U. S. 12, 27 Sup. Ct. 409, 51 L. Ed. 681, after calling attention to the broad sense in which "assumption of risk" was used in the statute under consideration, viz., as covering "dangerous conditions, as of machinery, premises and the like, which the injured party understood and appreciated when he submitted his person to them," the Supreme Court of the United States said: "Assumption of risk in this broad sense obviously shades into negligence as commonly understood. Negligence consists in conduct which common experience or the special knowledge of the actor shows to be so likely to produce the result complained of under the circumstances known to the actor that he is held answerable for that result, although it was not certain, intended, or foreseen. He is held to assume the risk upon the same ground. Choctaw, etc., v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64-68 [24 Sup. Ct. 24, 48 L.

Ed. 96]. Apart from the notion of contract, rather shadowy as applied to this broad form of the latter conception, the practical difference of the two ideas is in the degree of their proximity to the particular harm. The preliminary conduct of getting into the dangerous employment or relation is said to be accompanied by assumption of risk. The act more immediately leading to a specific accident is called negligent. But the difference between the two is one of degree rather than of kind." In a dissenting opinion, in which Justices Brewer, Peckham, McKenna, and Day concurred, it is stated: "That there is a vital difference between assumption of risk and contributory negligence is clear. As said by this court in Choctaw, etc., v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 68 [24 Sup. Ct. 24, 25, 48 L. Ed. 96], 'the question of assumption of risk is quite apart from that of contributory negligence.' See, also, Union, etc., v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451 [18 Sup. Ct. 618, 40 L. Ed. 766]. This proposition, however, is so familiar and elementary that citation of authorities is superfluous." We do not think the case of Schlemmer v. Railway, supra, justifies a conclusion that the difference between the defenses of assumption of risk and contributory negligence is so shadowy that one denied the right to show contributory negligence has no right to complain if he is permitted to show assumption of risk. If, indeed, these defenses are practically the same, then it would follow that defendant, having admittedly pleaded assumption of risk, should not have been deprived of the right to have the jury consider the facts with reference to contributory negligence.

The plaintiff alone testified, and, giving his testimony the most favorable construction, defendant was entitled to a nonsuit. Plaintiff was head engineer of the defendant company, 28 years old, and had been engineer for defendant for about a year before the accident. As engineer he had charge of the machinery with which he came in contact when injured, and, when it was out of order, it was his duty to repair it or see that it was done. On December 2, 1907, the superintendent was near and heard the creaking of the machinery, and directed plaintiff to fix it at once. This was merely telling plaintiff to perform a neglected ordinary duty. The machinery was creaking for want of oil, which the plaintiff and his assistant had failed to apply. This machinery consisted of a small engine on the floor attached by belt to pulley on shaft about eight feet above, near the end of which shaft was a small cogwheel meshing with a much larger cogwheel on another shaft on which was the pulley driving the conveyor chain which carried fuel to the furnace. The machinery had no other connection with the main plant, and could be stopped almost instantly without stopping the operation of the mill. It was the usual duty of the assistant under plaintiff to oil this machinery, but plaintiff had never seen the assistant attempt to do so with his coat on. The fireman, being otherwise engaged at the moment plaintiff climbed up to where the cogwheels were, ascertained that the boxes holding the shaft were dry, and, in attempting to oil them, his coat sleeve was caught in the meshes of the cogwheels, and his right arm dragged in and crushed. The cogwheels worked inward on the upper side, and it was said that, if the cogwheels had worked outward, the injury would not have happened. The complaint did not allege negligence of defendant in this regard, but it cannot escape attention that, if the cogwheels worked inward above, they necessarily worked outward below, or vice versa, so that a mere change in the revolution of the wheels would merely have changed the point of danger from above to below to a person carelessly working about the cogwheels with coat on. The danger arising from contact with moving cogwheels was manifestly one which any person of ordinary prudence, much more an experienced engineer in charge, should have known called for care. Nevertheless plaintiff failed to stop the gear, which he might have done in a moment and oiled with perfect safety. Choosing to risk the motion of the machinery, he might have removed his coat as his assistant always did, so as not to run the risk of having it drawn into the cogwheels. Concluding to take these hazards, easily avoidable, he worked over the moving cogwheels with his coat on without paying any attention whatever to the danger of having his coat caught in the meshes.

Such is the testimony on cross-examination: "Q. Did you know, if two cogwheels were revolving that way, if any one got in them, he would be dragged in? A. I never gave it any thought. Q. You don't know that? A. I know it now. Q. You don't know it now? A. Of course, I know if you got in there. Q. I ask you if you don't know, if you got in two cogwheels revolving together, it would crush the thing that got in it? A. I know it now. Q. Did you know it before? A. No, sir. Q. You mean to tell me that you are an engineer, head engineer of the Tuxbury Lumber Company, and you don't know that if a piece of cloth or anything else got in two cogwheels revolving in the same direction that it would be dragged between them? A. I know that. Q. Had you not always known that? A. If I had given it a thought and looked at it, I would have known it, but I never paid any attention." On redirect examination: "Q. Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Miller tried to make it appear that you practically did not know that if two gears were working in opposite directions, as a matter of course, you know that a man would get hurt that way? A. Yes, sir." If, therefore, it be concluded that the cogwheels could have been so guarded as to prevent an employé from coming in contact therewith, and that defendant was negligent in not so guarding them, it is clear that plaintiff knew, or should have known, that they were unguarded, and that he must be held to have assumed the risk of oiling the machinery with a coat on while in motion. There is no element of inexperience or emergency to take the case out of the ordinary rule. The risk assumed was after full knowledge of the conditions, and was one incidental to performance of his work and arising during its progress. Martin v. Royster Guano Co., 72 S. C. 242, 51 S. E. 690; Wofford v. Cotton Mills, 72 S. C. 348, 51 S. E. 918; James v. Fountain Inn Mfg. Co., 80 S. C. 232, 61 S. E. 391.

The judgment of the circuit court should be reversed.

HYDRICK, J. I base my concurrence in the result on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of defendant. The only allegation of negligence is that the cogs which injured plaintiff were not covered. According to the testimony, they were elevated on a frame eight to ten feet above the floor of the engine room, so that there was no danger of any one coming in contact with them, unless he got up on this frame. It appeared that it was not necessary for any one to get up there, except for the purpose of oiling the boxes which held the shafting, or perhaps to adjust or repair the cogs themselves. They could have been instantly stopped by turning a valve at the base of the frame. Under these circumstances, I do not think that ordinary prudence would have suggested to any one that they should be covered. It may be that, if they had been covered, the accident would not have happened, though that is by no means certain. But it is generally easy enough, after an accident has happened, to suggest some means whereby it might have been prevented. It does not follow, however, that we must therefore conclude that ordinary prudence would have suggested the adoption of such means in the first instance. In this view of the case, I deem it unnecessary to consider the defenses set up and attempted to be set up in the answer, for the defenses may properly be considered only after a prima facie case has been made out against the defendant.

This court has stated in several recent decisions how the defense of contributory negligence should be pleaded. While no set form of words is necessary, the facts must be alleged from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that the injury was caused by the joint and concurrent negligence of both parties as proximate causes thereof. No such allegation was made, and therefore the plea was objectionable, but the objection should have been taken by demurrer for insufficiency of the facts alleged to constitute the defense.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). This is an action for damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant.

The allegations of the complaint material to the questions presented by the exceptions are as follows: "That heretofore, on the 2d day of December, A. D. 1907, the plaintiff above named was in the employment of the defendant as an engineer. That while the plaintiff was so employed by the defendant, and while in the discharge of his duties as such engineer, it became necessary to oil a part of the machinery known as the boxes, which held the shaft for the conveyor chain. That, while the plaintiff was so engaged in oiling said machinery, his coat became entangled and was caught in the cog gear, which drives the conveyor chain, and pulls the fuel to the furnace. That the plaintiff was caused to be injured, in the manner and by the means aforesaid, by and through the negligence of the defendant, in providing a dangerous place for the plaintiff to work, and in providing unsecure and unsafe machinery for the plaintiff, in the course of his employment, in that the defendant allowed the cog gear to remain exposed and uncovered, so that the plaintiff's coat was caught in the same, thereby pulling his arm in the cog gear, and inflicting such injuries upon the plaintiff as necessitated the amputation of his right arm." The defendant denied the allegations of negligence, and set up the defense of assumption of risk. It also interposed what it contends was a defense of contributory negligence. Upon the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, which was refused. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $7,000, whereupon the defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was also refused, and it appealed upon exceptions, which will be set out in the report of the case.

The first question that will be considered is whether there was any testimony tending to prove the allegations of negligence on the part of the defendant. The testimony of the plaintiff tended to show that he was the engineer, and that there was also an oiler; that his principal duty as engineer was to look after the boilers, pumps, and engines; that a colored fireman always oiled the machinery; that he had never oiled it before; that he had nothing to do with the cog gear, and had not previously been upon that part of the platform, where it was situated; that the cogs worked inward, instead of outward; that the cog gear was exposed; that he was ordered to go, in a hurry, by the superintendent, who had the right to direct his services; that, although there was danger, he was not aware of it; that the place could have been made safe by covering the cog gear; that there was no other way for him to approach the machinery—thus showing that the exception raising this question cannot be sustained.

The next question that will be considered is whether the testimony showed that the injury to the plaintiff was due to a risk of which he was fully aware, and which he voluntarily assumed. There was testimony to the effect that there was no duty resting upon the plaintiff to oil the machinery or to perform any act with reference to the cog gear; that there was an emergency; that he went to the place of danger, under the orders of the superintendent, who was present, and who had the right to direct his services; that he was not aware of the danger. In the case of Wilson v. Railway, 73 S. C. 481, 53 S. E. 968, error was assigned in charging these two requests of the plaintiff: (1) "That a servant obeying the instructions of the representatives of the master on the spot is not guilty of contributory negligence, in so obeying said master." (2) "That the fact that the servant's work is done in the presence and under the immediate direction of the master's foreman or conductor in this case is equivalent to the assurance by the master that the servant may safely proceed to the work required of him." The assignments of error were overruled under the authority of Carson v. Railway, 68 S. C. 55, 46 S. E. 525. "If there is ground for reasonable difference of opinion as to the danger, the servant is not bound to set up his judgment against that of his superior, whose orders he is required to obey, but he may rely upon the judgment of such superior." Stephens v. Railway, 82 S. C. 542, 64 S. E. 601. It was for the jury to say whether the conditions amounted to such an emergency as would justify or excuse a man of ordinary prudence and judgment in undertaking to carry out the orders of the superintendent. Hall v. Railway, 81 S. C. 522, 62 S. E. 848; Brown v. Railway, 82 S. C. 528, 64 S. E. 522. The exception raising this question is overruled.

The next question that will be considered is whether there was error in refusing the motion for nonsuit, on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The defense which the defendant interposed is as follows: "And, further answering, this defendant alleges that, even if it were negligent, which it denies, still the accident to the plaintiff was due proximately to his own negligence, in that he conducted himself in a careless manner, and failed to observe caution in keeping his body from coming in contact with said cogs, which he could have done if he had used due care." The following statement appears in the record: "After the pleadings had been read, plaintiff's counsel stated that he would object to the introduction of any testimony, in support of the defense of contributory negligence, upon the ground that such defense was not sufficiently set forth in the answer. After argument the presiding judge announced that in his opinion contributory negligence was not sufficiently pleaded, and that he would exclude all testimony in support thereof. Defendant's counsel duly excepted to his honor's ruling." There was no appeal from this ruling, and the question whether there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is not properly before the court for consideration. But, waiving such objection, the exception cannot be sustained.

The following definition of contributory negligence has been approved by this court in numerous cases: "Contributory negligence is the want of ordinary care upon the part of a person injured by the actionable negligence of another combining and concurring with that negligence, and contributing to the injury as a proximate cause thereof, without which the injury would not have occurred." In Pom. Code Rem. § 548, it is said: "The Codes clearly intend to draw a broad line of distinction between an entire failure to state any cause of action or defense on the one side, which is to be taken advantage of, either by the general demurrer, for want of sufficient facts, or by the exclusion of all evidence at the trial, and the statement of a cause of action or a defense, in an insufficient, imperfect, incomplete, or informal manner, which is to be corrected by a motion to render the pleading more definite and certain by amendment." In Charging v. Toxaway Mills, 70 S. C. 470, 50 S. E. 186, the court, after quoting the foregoing definition of contributory negligence, uses this language: "This definition imports that there must be negligence of the defendant operating with that of the plaintiff to produce the injury, and that if the plaintiff is entirely at fault, one of the elements of the definition, the negligence of the defendant, is wanting." The defense alleges, in express terms, that the defendant was not negligent, and, in effect, merely alleges that the plaintiff was entirely at fault. Furthermore, the ruling was not prejudicial to the rights of the defendant, as the facts related to the matter of assumption of risk, as well as contributory negligence, and the defendant received the full benefit thereof under the full and clear instructions as to assumption of risk, the difference between these two defenses being only shadowy. Schlemmer v. Railway, 205 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 51 L. Ed. 681. The ruling of his honor the presiding judge was free from error.

Fifth exception. This exception cannot be sustained, for the reason that the presiding judge ruled out all the testimony, except the bare fact that the plaintiff went to see Mr. Frost, which certainly was not prejudicial error.

Sixth exception. The charge set out in this exception is not susceptible of the inference mentioned therein, especially when considered in connection with the entire charge.

Seventh exception. What was said in considering the sixth exception disposes of this question.

Eighth exception. This exception is overruled for the reason that, even if the proposition was erroneous, there were no facts to which it was applicable, and therefore it was not prejudicial.

Ninth, tenth, and eleventh exceptions. The only error assigned by these exceptions is that the presiding judge withheld from the jury the consideration of the question of contributory negligence. They are therefore disposed of by what has already been said.

Twelfth exception. We fail to see how the jury could have been misled, unless they simply ignored the plain language of the charge.

Thirteenth exception. What has already been said disposes of subdivisions 1, 2, 4, and 5.

The statement of the circuit judge in settling the case shows that subdivision 3 cannot be sustained.

For these reasons I dissent.

(111 Va. 179)

SPILLING v. HUTCHESON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 9, 1910.)

1. COVENANTS (§ 103*) — CONSTRUCTION — BUILDING LINE.

A covenant that the building line of a square shall be not less than 25 feet from the true street line, it being understood that the front wall of the building shall be set back at least 25 feet from the street line, is breached by the erection of a bow window projecting over the line, the foundation of which, in common with the remaining outside walls, rises from the ground, and which extends up two stories.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 169; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

2. COVENANTS (§ 106*) — CONSTRUCTION — BUILDING LINE.

A front porch, consisting of an open frame structure resting on brick piers, is not a breach of the building line covenant, under the rule that the language of a deed is to be construed liberally in favor of the grantee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 169; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 62*)—MANDATORY INJUNCTION—GROUNDS—REMEDY AT LAW.

A mandatory injunction, prohibiting an encroachment and ordering an abatement of a structure which constitutes a violation of a building line covenant, will not be denied on the ground that it inflicts hardship on the defendant, and that the plaintiff should be left to the remedy at law for damages for breach of the covenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-129; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

Appeal from Chancery Court of Richmond. Suit by Lelia G. Hutcheson against William H. Spilling. From the decree, both parties appeal. Affirmed.

Page & Leary, for appellant. A. W. Patterson, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. The appellee, Lelia G. Hutcheson, sold and conveyed to the appellant, William H. Spilling, a vacant lot in the city of Richmond, fronting 30 feet on Grove avenue and extending back between parallel lines 179 feet. The deed of conveyance contains the following covenant: "The parties hereto also, in consideration of the premises, further covenant and agree with each other, for themselves, their heirs and assigns, that the building line of the square shall be not less than twenty-five feet from the true street line, it being understood by them that the front wall of the building shall be set back at least twenty-five feet from the street line, and this covenant is to run with the land."

Shortly after the sale the purchaser erected a three-story brick residence upon the lot with a frontage of 26 feet 2 inches; 12 feet of this space being occupied by a bow front or window, the foundation of which in common with the remaining outside walls, rises from the ground. That part of the structure is two stories high, and is not separated from the space it incloses by an inner wall, and it projects over the building line 4 feet 2 inches. In addition to the bow window, a front porch, extending the entire width of the building, projects 10 feet over the line.

When advised of these encroachments, Mrs. Hutcheson, who claims ownership of the rest of the square, which she has dedicated to residential purposes, filed her bill against Spilling, charging a breach of the covenant in the particulars indicated, and prayed for a mandatory injunction compelling the defendant to conform his building to the established line by removing the bow window and porch.

The defendant denies the alleged breach of covenant, and insists that the term "front wall," as employed in the deed in question, means the front of the main wall, and does not include the appurtenances, the window and the porch. He moreover insists that, even though the covenant were breached, as charged, the plaintiff would have a full, adequate, and complete remedy by action at law for damages, and therefore is not entitled to invoke the extraordinary remedy by mandatory injunction.

The chancery court sustained the building restriction, and found that the defendant had violated his covenant in projecting the bow window beyond the building line; but with respect to the porch it was held that there had been no violation of the restrictive covenant. The court accordingly pronounced the decree under review, disposing of the case in both aspects.

The first contention of the appellant is controlled by the opinion of this court in the recent case of Eubank v. City of Richmond, 67 S. E. 376. In that case the court sustained the validity of a city ordinance which declared that no person coming within its terms should erect a building nearer to the street line than the building line established by its authority. The court there held that it was a violation of the ordinance to project a bow window, such as we are now considering, beyond the building line.

That ordinance having thus been declared reasonable and lawful, the learned chancellor did not err in holding the building restriction in this case valid and enforceable so far as the bow window was concerned.

We shall next consider the question raised by the appellee upon cross-appeal, namely, that the trial court erred in holding that the porch, though extending beyond the building line, did not constitute a breach of the covenant.

The front porch is an open frame structure, resting upon brick piers. Applying, as we must do, the familiar principle that the language of the deed is to be construed liberally in favor of the grantee, we think that the porch does not form part of the "front wall of the building."

Lastly, it is insisted that, even though the court should regard the projection of the bow window beyond the building line a violation of the restriction, still the chancery court erred in awarding a mandatory injunction prohibiting the encroachment and ordering an abatement of the structure. It is said that this ruling inflicts unnecessary hardship upon the defendant, and that the plaintiff should be left to her remedy at law to recover damages for the breach of the covenant.

We do not concur in this contention. The parties have seen proper to embody in their deed a reasonable and usual covenant to establish a building line, beyond which the grantee is forbidden to extend the front wall of his dwelling, and he cannot disregard such covenant (which constitutes part of the consideration for the deed), and in answer to the demand of the plaintiff for a mandatory injunction to abate the obstruction insist, on the theory of hardship (a hardship of his own creation), that the plaintiff be left to her action at law for damages. The correct rule in such case is clearly stated by Lord Cairns in Doherty v. Allman, 3 H. L. App. Cas. 720, as follows: "If parties, for valuable consideration, with their eyes open, contract that a particular thing shall not be done, all that a court of equity has to do is to say by way of injunction that which the parties have already said by way of covenant—that the thing shall not be done; and in such case the injunction does nothing more than give the sanction of the process of the court to that which already is the contract between the parties. It is not, then, a question of convenience or inconvenience, or of the amount of damage or injury. It is the specific performance, by the court, of that negative bargain which the parties have made, with their eyes open, between themselves."

In 4 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 1342, the author, in discussing the subject of "Restrictive Covenants Creating Equitable Easements," observes: "It has been shown that restrictive covenants in deeds * * * limiting the use of land in a specified manner, or prescribing a peculiar use, which create equitable servitudes on the land, will be specifically enforced in equity by means of an injunction, not only between the immediate parties, but also against subsequent purchasers with notice, even when the covenants are not of the kind which technically run with the land. The injunction in this case is granted almost as a matter of course upon a breach of the covenant. The amount of damages, and even the fact that the plaintiff has sustained any pecuniary damages, are wholly immaterial. In the words of one of the ablest modern equity judges (Sir George Jessel, M. R., in note to Leech v. Schweder, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 465): 'It is clearly established by authority that there is sufficient to justify the court in interfering, if there has been a breach of the covenant. It is not for the court, but the plaintiffs, to estimate the amount of damages that arises from the injury inflicted upon them. The moment that the court finds that there has been a breach of the covenant, that is an injury; and the court has no right to measure it, and no right to refuse to the plaintiff the specific performance of his contract, although his remedy is that which I have described, namely, an injunction.'

The recent case of Batchelor v. Hinkle, 132 App. Div. 620, 117 N. Y. Supp. 542, affords an apt illustration of the application of the remedy by mandatory injunction to restrain the continuance of building encroachments in violation of restrictive covenants. The reports abound with similar decisions, but those to which we have called attention sufficiently exemplify the principle involved.

The foregoing views necessarily lead to an affirmance of the decree.

IMPERIAL CO. v. TROTMAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 9, 1910.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—SAFE PLACE.

It is the duty of a master to exercise ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place in which its servants are to work; the extent of such care depending on the circumstances of the particular case.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 278*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—ANTICIPATION OF INJURY.

In an action for injuries to an employé in a fertilizer factory, evidence held to show that such injury was not reasonably to have been anticipated, and that the facts were insufficient to show that defendant was negligent in failing to provide a safe place in which to work.

Error to Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Action by Lazarus Trotman against the Imperial Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Hughes & Little and P. H. C. Cabell, for plaintiff in error. W. D. Stoakley and Loyd W. W. Brockenbrough, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. The plaintiff in error, the Imperial Company, operated a fertilizer plant near the city of Norfolk, and Lazarus Trotman, the defendant in error, was, at the time he received the injury which occasioned this action, and had been for eight years or more, a laborer in its employment. The building in which the work of the company was conducted was constructed with a second story partly floored over, on which were a number of tracks over which trucks ran for moving materials of various kinds. On the day of the accident bales of bags were being moved from trucks on one of these tracks. These bales were made up on the ground floor, and raised to the second floor on a hoist. At the point of delivery on the second floor they were loaded on the trucks and wheeled to that part of the floor where they were being piled. Beneath this portion of the second floor, where the bales of bags were being piled, the plaintiff and other laborers were engaged in patching and mending loose bags, while they were being handled by the laborers before being baled. Whenever a defective bag was discovered by one of the laborers, it was tossed into a pile of bags to be mended. At a point alongside the track on the second story was an opening, 22 inches wide by 5 feet long, running alongside the track. This opening was intended to be used for dumping tankage and other fertilizer material through from the trucks on the second floor to the floor below. The bales of bags which the laborers were handling on the second story measured about 3 feet by 2, and weighed 300 pounds each.

At the time of the injury Trotman was sitting immediately beneath this hole, either on a pile of tankage or a pile of bags. While the truck was being unloaded on the floor above, it tipped up at one end and down at the other, and one of the bales of bags rolled off and was precipitated directly through the hole, falling upon Trotman, and inflicting the injury for which suit was brought. This hole in the floor was sawed there by Wilson, the first witness for the plaintiff, and the plaintiff himself, some seven or eight years previous to the accident. During this time Trotman had been laboring at the plant, performing at one time or another all the various duties performed by laborers, which sometimes took him upon the ground floor and sometimes upon the floor above. He was one of the old men in the employ of the company, and thoroughly familiar with the work of the plant and with the premises throughout. During the entire previous history of the plant no such accident as this had ever occurred, and it had been supposed that one of the bales of bags could not be gotten through the hole on account of the standard size of the bales; the smallest dimension being 24 inches, while the hole measured in width exactly 22 inches. The witnesses say that a truck load of the tankage, for the dumping of which this hole was cut and used, might fall upon a man without doing him serious injury.

It is certainly true that the hole could have been covered up, or otherwise guarded and protected, so as to render impossible such an accident as that which occurred.

After the evidence was introduced tending to prove the facts we have stated, the Imperial Company demurred to the evidence, the jury found a verdict upon which the court entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the case is before us upon a writ of error.

As was said by Judge Buchanan in Persinger v. Alleghany Ore Co., 102 Va. 350, 48 S. E. 325, the rule is well settled that it is the duty of the master to exercise ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place in which its servants are to work; and, continuing, he says that "ordinary care depends upon the circumstances of the particular case, and is such care as persons of ordinary prudence would under the circumstances have exercised. * * * If the accident which occurred was one at all likely to happen, if it was a probable consequence that an employé working in the bed would be injured or killed by having his clothing caught upon the little 'jagger' on the end of the revolving shaft, as was the plaintiff's intestate, the trial court erred in sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the evidence. But can the accident be said to be one which ordinarily prudent men would have been likely to anticipate?"

Applying the language of that case to the facts in this, can it be said that it was at all likely that a bale of bags 24 inches in diameter would fall through a hole 22 inches in diameter and injure an employé? Can it be said that an ordinarily prudent man would have been likely to anticipate such an accident? The standard size of the bale was 24 inches. The actual width of the hole was 22 inches. For eight years the structural condition of the building and the methods of operation used at the time of the accident had continued unchanged and without injury to any one, when by a fortuitous combination of circumstances the truck tilts up, and a bale of bags somewhat smaller than the usual and standard size falls through the hole, just at the moment when an employé is sitting directly beneath it, and he receives the injury.

We think that the facts disclose an accident which could not have been reasonably anticipated by a prudent man, and which does not constitute an actionable wrong; and for these reasons we are of opinion that the judgment of the court of law and chancery should be reversed, and this court will enter such judgment as that court ought to have rendered.

WILLIAMS v. GREEN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 9, 1910.)

1. EASEMENTS (§ 5*)—PRIVATE RIGHT OF WAY—PRESCRIPTION.

To establish a private right of way over the lands of another by prescription, it must appear that the use and enjoyment thereof was adverse, under a claim of right, exclusive, continuous, uninterrupted, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land over which it passes, and that such use has continued for a period of at least 20 years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 18, 21, 23; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—PRIVATE RIGHT OF WAY—CONTINUOUS USE—PRESUMPTION OF GRANT.

Where an alleged private right of way has been used openly, uninterruptedly, continuously, and exclusively for more than 20 years, there is a prima facie rebuttable presumption, in the absence of proof of the origin of the way, that it arose out of a right or grant of the party on whose land it exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 88-93; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

3. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—PRIVATE RIGHT OF WAY—PRESCRIPTION.

Where there has been uninterrupted, continuous, and exclusive use of a right of way over another's land for more than 20 years, the bona fides of the claim of right is established, and the owner of the land must rebut the presumption of grant by showing permission or license from him, or those under whom he claims, or denials or objections to such use, made under circumstances that will rebut the presumption.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Appomattox County.

Suit by Henrietta E. Williams against Mary Lizzie Green. Decree for defendant, and complainant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

F. C. Moon and S. L. Ferguson, for appellant. A. H. Clements, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. The question involved in this case is whether the appellant is entitled to a private right of way over the lands of the appellee.

It appears that the way claimed by the appellant has been used for more than 40 years by her and her predecessors in title without objection, until about August, 1908, when the appellee built a wire fence across the way, which obstructed its use by the appellant. The long and uninterrupted use of the way by the appellant and those under whom she claims is not denied by the appellee, but her contention is that the said use was a mere license, revocable at pleasure.

In order to establish a private right of way over the lands of another by prescription, it must appear that the use and enjoyment thereof by the claimant was adverse, under a claim of right, exclusive, continuous, uninterrupted, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land over which it passes, and that such use has continued for a period of at least 20 years. Gaines v. Merryman, 95 Va. 680, 29 S. E. 738; Reid v. Garnett, 101 Va. 47, 43 S. E. 182, and authorities cited.

While the appellee claims that the appellant's use of the way was permissive, or by license merely, there is no evidence of that fact; nor is there any evidence as to the manner in which the use originated. The appellant's witnesses (the appellee introduced none) all testify to the uninterrupted use of the way by the appellant and her predecessors in title for more than 40 years, and that the appellant and her family have uninterruptedly and continuously (that is, whenever they desired to use it, as they had no other practicable way to a public road) used the way for more than 20 years.

It is also insisted by the appellee that the use of the way was not exclusive. It does not appear that any person other than the owners of the land now owned by the appellant, and perhaps her tenants, used the way prior to the purchase of the land by the appellant. Since its acquisition by her there is no evidence that it was used by persons other than herself and family and their visitors.

Where a way has been thus used openly, uninterruptedly, continuously, and exclusively for a period of more than 20 years, the origin of the way not being shown, there is a presumption of a right or grant from the long acquiescence of the party upon whose land the way is. This presumption of a grant or adverse right is with us prima facie merely and may be rebutted. Nichols v. Aylor, 7 Leigh, 546; Field v. Brown, 24 Grat. 74; Reid v. Garnett, 101 Va. 47, 43 S. E. 182.

"In the absence of evidence," as was said by the Supreme Court of the state of Pennsylvania in Worrall v. Rhoads, 2 Whart. 427, 30 Am. Dec. 274, "tending to show that such long-continued use of the way may be referred to a license, or special indulgence, that is either revocable or terminable, the conclusion is that it has grown out of a grant by the owner of the land and has been exercised under a title thus derived. The law favors this conclusion, because it will not presume any man's act illegal. It is reasonable to suppose that the owner of the land would not have acquiesced in such enjoyment for a long period, when it was to his interest to have interrupted it, unless he felt confident that the party enjoying it had a right and title to it that could not be defeated. And, besides, seeing that it can work no prejudice to any one excepting to him who has been guilty of great negligence, to say the least of it, public policy and convenience require that this presumption should be made, in order to promote the public peace and quiet men in their possession."

When there has been such a use for more than 20 years, the bona fides of the claim of right is established, and the owner of the land over which the way passes must rebut the presumption by showing permission or license from him or those under whom he claims, or denials or objections to such use made under circumstances that will rebut the presumption. See Nichols v. Aylor, supra; Field v. Brown, supra; Reid v. Garnett, supra; Walton v. Knight, 62 W. Va. 223, 58 S. E. 1025.

The continuous, uninterrupted, and exclusive use of the private way by the appellant over the lands of the appellee having existed for a period of more than 20 years, there is a prima facie presumption of a grant, and that such use was under a claim of right and adverse; and, there being no evidence to rebut that presumption, the appellant's right to the private way was established, and the trial court erred in not so holding.

The decree appealed from must be reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded to the circuit court, with directions to grant the injunction prayed for in the bill of appellant, and, if insisted upon, to ascertain the damages, if any, done the appellant by the obstruction of the private way.

Error to Circuit Court, Mecklenburg County.

Action by J. W. Edmonson and another, receivers of the Bank of Mecklenburg, against E. H. Potts' administrator. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed and rendered.

W. E. Homes, Abner C. Goode, C. T. Baskerville, Chas. J. Faulkner, Jr., and E. P. Buford, for plaintiffs in error. Wood Bouldin, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. The material question involved in this case, and the only one that it is necessary to decide, in the view we take of the case, is whether or not the notice to sue, relied on by the defendant as barring the plaintiffs' right of recovery, was sufficient under the provisions of section 2890 of the Code of 1904.

That section, so far as relevant to this case, is as follows: "The surety or guarantor or indorser (or his committee or personal representative) of any person bound by any contract may, if a right of action has accrued thereon, require the creditor, or his committee or personal representative, by notice in writing, forthwith to institute suit thereon. * * *"

The contract sued on in this case is a negotiable note, made by the Mecklenburg Live Stock Company, for $2,000, payable to and indorsed by E. H. Potts, the defendant's intestate, and C. W. Harris and B. E. Cogbill, and is owned by the Bank of Mecklenburg, of which the plaintiffs are the receivers.

The notice to sue relied on by the defendant was not a formal notice to the bank, but was contained in letters written by the defendant, as the administrator of E. H. Potts, deceased, to the cashier and president of the Bank of Mecklenburg. Neither the letters nor copies thereof, were introduced in evidence, but the writer of the letters and the officers to whom they were written respectively testified to their contents.

The defendant stated that some time after his decedent's death he was informed of the existence of the note sued on, and that it was held by the Bank of Mecklenburg. He about the same time learned that his decedent had made a settlement with Mr. Cogbill, one of the indorsers on the note, through his attorney, Mr. Faulkner, who was also president of the bank, in which his decedent had paid Mr. Cogbill his share of the note. The defendant thereupon wrote "the cashier of the bank at Boydton, and explained the nature of the settlement and asked that such steps be at once taken by the bank as would release Mr. Potts' name on the note as surety. Subsequently I wrote to Mr. Faulkner as president of the bank and urged that he take such action as would release Mr. Potts' name. I frequently talked with Mr. Faulkner with regard to his bringing suit against Mr. Cogbill in order that the matter might be closed, as I as administrator desired to close the administration of the Potts estate. The notices were in writing to Mr. Faulkner as president of the bank to bring suit or take such action against Cogbill so as to liberate Mr. Potts' name as surety." He further testified that he could not recall "the language of the different notices, but they all urged the bank to take such action as was necessary to get Mr. Potts' name off the note."

Mr. Overby, the cashier of the bank, in testifying to the contents of the letter to him, said that he could not state when he "received notice to bring suit, though it was some time after the maturity of the note. My recollection of the contents of notes [notice], which was in writing, was to the effect that Mr. Gregory, as administrator, wished the bank to take such steps as would relieve Mr. Potts' estate of any responsibility as indorser on note."

The testimony of the president of the bank, Mr. Faulkner, as to the contents of the letters written to him, is as follows: "I remember on one occasion his [the defendant] writing to me in connection with some other matter that he wanted Mr. Potts' name gotten off the paper, and again last fall he not only spoke to me in person about it, but he wrote me a letter especially on the point, in which he stated that he wanted us to bring suit against Cogbill on the note. About the time I received this last letter, Mr. Cogbill had already gotten into his troubles, and I saw Mr. Gregory and asked him if he thought best to bring suit. He replied that he did not think that it was any use in bringing it now; that I had waited until too late." He further stated, in reference to the conversations with the defendant and the contents of the letters received by him, that in every instance they were to the effect that the defendant "wished the bank to get Mr. Potts' name off the paper."

Giving the defendant the benefit of the most favorable construction (as he is entitled to, since the case is heard here as on a demurrer to the evidence) which can be placed upon his letters to the officers of the bank, as their contents are disclosed by the record, did they, or either of them, contain a clear and explicit requirement for the bank "forthwith to institute suit" on the note?

Unless the letters relied on as giving notice contained such a requirement to sue, the provisions of section 2980 of the Code were not complied with. That section is very stringent in its terms. The effect of failure to 'institute suit against every party to such contract who resides in this state and is not insolvent, after notice, is an absolute forfeiture of all claims against every surety upon the contract. To the surety giving the notice it is an absolute extinguishment of the debt. Code, § 2891; Davis' Adm'r v. Snead, 33 Gratt. 705, 708, 709. Before the creditor should be held to have forfeited all his rights under the contract against all the sureties for a failure to forthwith institute suit upon the contract, it ought clearly to appear that the notice relied on to have that effect required suit forthwith to be instituted on the note.

Notice "to take such action as was necessary to get Mr. Potts' name off the note" was not a clear and explicit requirement to sue upon the note, as the surety might be relieved from liability on the note in various other ways. Neither was the direction or request in the letter to bring suit against Cogbill, one of the parties to the note, a clear and explicit requirement to sue upon the note. The cases are numerous which hold that notice to discharge a surety must comply substantially with the statute, and must show a clear, unequivocal, and distinct demand upon or command to the creditor to institute suit upon the contract. See Savage's Adm'r v. Carleton, 33 Ala. 443; Kaufman v. Wilson, 29 Ind. 504; Bates v. State Bank, 7 Ark. 394, 46 Am. Dec. 293; Parriah v. Gray, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 88; Shimer v. Jones, 47 Pa. 268; Warner v. Beardsley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 194; Moore v. Peterson, 64 Iowa, 425, 20 N. W. 744.

It follows, from what has been said, that we are of opinion that the notice relied on to bar the plaintiffs' right against the defendant was not sufficient, and that the trial court erred in not so holding. Its judgment must, therefore, be reversed, and, as all matters of law and fact were submitted to the trial court for its decision, this court will enter such judgment in favor of the plaintiffs as the trial court ought to have entered.

Error to Circuit Court, Norfolk County.

Action by Mary E. Hayslett against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Jeffries, Wolcott, Wolcott & Lankford, for plaintiff in error. R. Randolph Hicks, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company on the 26th of February, 1907, received from Joseph Hayslett a written application for insurance, dated on the 20th of that month, and issued its policy to him on the 9th day of the ensuing March for the sum of $500. On the 27th of February, 1908, Hayslett died, and a suit was brought upon the policy, a verdict rendered, and a judgment recovered which is before us upon a writ of error.

The policy contained the following provisions: "It is further declared and agreed that the foregoing statements and answers, and also the statements and answers on the next page hereof, in answer to the medical examiner, are correct and wholly true, that they shall form the basis of the contract of insurance, if one be issued, and that if they are not thus correct and wholly true, the policy shall be null and void."

"It is further agreed that the company shall incur no liability under this application until it has been received, approved and the policy issued and delivered and the premium has actually been paid to and accepted by the company during the lifetime of the life proposed and while he is in good health.

"To induce the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to issue policy, and as consideration therefor, I agree on behalf of myself and of any other person who shall have, or claim interest in any policy issued under this application, as follows:

"Wherever nothing is written in the following paragraphs, it is agreed that the declaration is true without exception.

"I have never had any of the following complaints or diseases: * * * Disease of the kidneys.

"I am now in sound health. I am not blind, deaf, or dumb, nor have I any physical or mental defect or infirmity of any kind." Then follows "the name of the physician who last attended me, the date of the attendance, and the name of the complaint for which he attended me: Doctor Wilson, September, malaria."

"I have not been under the care of any physician within two years other than as stated in previous paragraph, except [no exceptions].

"I have never met with any serious personal injury, not ever been seriously ill, except as stated herein, and for the complaints named, and no other, when I was attended by the following named physicians and no other: [No exceptions and no physician's name.]"

To the declaration filed upon this policy the defendant pleaded nonassumpsit and two special pleas, in the first of which the defendant says, leaving out the formal parts, that the applicant did fraudulently and knowingly make a false statement in his application, in this, to wit, that he never had any disease of the kidneys, which statement was false, in that the applicant prior thereto had been and was at that time afflicted with a disease of the kidneys and had been treated therefor; that the statement was material and caused the company to issue the policy sued upon, and but for said answer the policy would not have been issued; and that the defendant had no knowledge of the falsity of said statement. The substance of the second plea is that the applicant fraudulently and knowingly made a false statement in his application by stating that he was then (at the time of signing the application) in sound health, and that he had no physical or mental defect or infirmity of any kind.

The plaintiff having moved that the defendant be required to file its grounds of defense, the defendant stated that they were embraced in the two pleas above given.

During the progress of the trial, the defendant sought to rely upon a third ground of defense based upon the express agreement in the application for the policy that "the company shall incur no liability under this application until it has been received, approved, and the policy issued and delivered, and the premium has been actually paid to and accepted by the company during the lifetime of the life proposed and while he is in good health." The contention of the defendant upon this point is that the policy was without its knowledge or authority delivered to and accepted by the deceased while he was ill and just rallying from a desperate attack which occurred about the 8th of March, 1907. This fact, it is claimed, was first disclosed by the defendant in error (plaintiff in the court below) in her testimony which was admitted and received without objection, and upon it the plaintiff in error claims that it had a right to rely under the general issue. On the other hand, it is contended by the defendant in error that the insurance company having been called upon for its grounds of defense, and having stated that the two special pleas were relied upon as containing its grounds of defense, none other could be considered by the jury.

Section 3249 of the Code of 1904 provides that: "In an action or motion, the court may order a statement to be filed of the particulars of the claim or of the ground of defence; and, if a party fail to comply with such order, may, when the case is tried or heard, exclude evidence of any matter not described in the notice, declaration or other pleading of such party, so plainly as to give the adverse party notice of its character."

As was said by this court in Columbia Accident Ass'n v. Rockey, 93 Va. 679, 25 S. E. 1009, the statement does not constitute the issue to be tried, and need not be as formal and precise as a declaration or plea. If it is not sufficient, the court should require a sufficient statement, and, if it is not furnished, exclude evidence of any matter not described in the notice, declaration, or other pleading so plainly as to give the adverse parties notice of its character. The object of the section is to give the opposing parties more definite information of the character of such claim or defense than is generally disclosed by the declaration, notice, or plea, and to prevent surprise. City of Richmond v. Lenker, 99 Va. 6, 37 S. E. 348.

Its whole object and effect is to limit the scope and operation of the general issue, and to confine the introduction of evidence to the particular defense which the defendant has disclosed. Oeters v. Knights of Honor, 98 Va. 201, 35 S. E. 356.

If this evidence had been offered by the insurance company, and objection had been made, the court properly would have excluded it; but the case before us is quite otherwise. The plaintiff in the court below introduced the evidence, and it went before the jury without objection. It plainly does not come within the mischief intended to be remedied by section 3249, as the plaintiff could not be surprised by evidence which she herself introduced, and, as it bore directly upon the issue of nonassumpsit, it should have been considered by the jury.

The second bill of exceptions is, we think, without merit, and as it presents no question of interest, we shall not discuss it.

The third bill of exceptions is as follows: Plaintiff in error asked a physician who was testifying the following question: "Is a man in good health who has chronic Bright's disease of the kidneys and exhibiting symptoms such as I have indicated in the hypothetical question?" The hypothetical question had been asked and answered, but counsel for defendant in error objected to the question just stated and the objection was sustained, upon just what ground is not apparent.

It is true that it does not require an expert to prove that a man who is afflicted with chronic Bright's disease of the kidneys is not in good health; and yet it would seem that the party interested in establishing the fact of ill health should have been allowed to a reasonable extent at least to accumulate proof upon that point, which was a very material one. As the case will go back for a new trial, if the same question is asked under similar conditions, we are disposed to think it should be answered.

The fourth bill of exceptions grows out of the court having told the jury in its instructions that the fact that the insured suffered from kidney disease did not bar him from recovering, unless the jury believed from the evidence that the insured willfully and fraudulently represented that he was not suffering from such disease, or unless such representations were material.

Whether a representation is made and the terms in which it is made are questions of fact for the jury; but, when proved, we are of opinion that its materiality is a question for the court.

The fifth bill of exceptions consists in the instruction given to the jury on motion of the plaintiff that the burden of proving that the insured had a chronic disease of the kidneys is upon the defendant. It is insisted by the plaintiff in error that the pleadings do not assert that the insured had a chronic disease of the kidneys, that it was stipulated in the application that he had not had a disease of the kidneys, and the burden of proof was upon the insurance company to show that he had such a disease, but whether or not it was chronic the plaintiff in error insists was entirely immaterial, and to require such proof was highly prejudicial to it.

Throughout the case the witnesses speak indifferently of "disease of the kidneys" and "chronic disease of the kidneys." The line is not sharply drawn between the acute and chronic forms of the disease, and this confusion or disregard of the distinction appears in the instructions asked for by the defendant as well as the plaintiff. Upon another trial, the plaintiff in error may, if it see fit, by appropriate objection present this point more clearly for decision.

The sixth and seventh bills of exceptions are based upon the refusal of the court to permit the jury to consider evidence of delivery of the policy while the accused was ill, and has already been sufficiently considered in this opinion.

For the reasons given, the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial not inconsistent with the views expressed in this opinion.

Appeal from Circuit Court of City of Norfolk.

Suit by D. P. Blount against C. W. Tebault and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Harry Nixdorf appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. Hubbard and D. Tucker Brooke, for appellant. R. Randolph Hicks, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. The question presented upon this appeal is whether the lien of a judgment against an alienor binds improvements made on the land by an alienee with constructive and actual notice of the judgment, and a lis pendens to enforce it, against his grantor at the date of purchase.

From a decree of the circuit court of the city of Norfolk, holding both the lot and improvements liable, this appeal was granted.

In Fulkerson v. Taylor, 100 Va. 428, 437, 41 S. E. 863, 867, it is said: "Whether or not a judgment lien binds improvements in the hands of an alienee is a question of much interest and importance, one which has not been directly passed upon by this court, and which we feel should not be decided, except after full argument and careful consideration."

According to the experience of the writer on circuit, it was the established and unchallenged practice in such case to subject both land and improvements to the lien of the judgment.

The appellant stands on the letter of the statute (Va. Code, 1904, § 3567) that "every judgment for money rendered in this State heretofore or hereafter against any person shall be a lien on all the real estate of or to which such person is or becomes possessed or entitled at or after the date of such judgment," and the line of decisions which hold that the lien attaches to such interest only as the debtor actually has in the property at or after the date of the judgment.

But, as we shall see presently, property affected by the lien cannot be made to serve as a nucleus for the creation and building up of alleged after-acquired equities in behalf of subsequent purchasers with notice of the judgment. Such purchasers hold the property in subordination to the right of the creditor to subject it to his judgment in the condition in which he finds it at the time of such enforcement, without diminution or allowance for betterments placed upon it subsequent to the recovery and docketing of the judgment.

The right to allowance for improvements, under the Virginia statute, which is an innovation on the common law is confined to cases in which the improvement was made under a title believed to be good, and that is not predicable of a purchaser with notice of the incumbrance. Such purchaser has no higher right to protection with respect to money invested in improvements than to the original purchase price paid for the land. Indeed, in its last analysis, the entire contention of the appellant rests upon the fallacious proposition that an equity may be created after, which had no existence before, the rendition of the judgment—a doctrine which would introduce a mischievous change in the law, and that, too, in behalf of a class who voluntarily elect to expend their money in the purchase and improvement of property known to be incumbered.

It is a principle of real estate law that permanent improvements placed upon land become a part of the realty, and the owner must take notice that all liens which rest upon the fee will necessarily attach to such permanent structures as he may choose to erect. 1 Min. Real Prop. §§ 17, 23.

When the case of Fulkerson v. Taylor was before this court the second time (102 Va. 314, 46 S. E. 309), we held that "a purchaser cannot claim that he put improvements upon land in good faith, believing that he had good title, when the records disclose a defective title."

In that case, it is true, the purchaser claimed title under an unrecorded deed; but the principle is the same, and the court subjected both land and improvements to the satisfaction of the judgment.

So, also, in Flanary v. Kane, 102 Va. 547, 46 S. E. 312, it was said: "The provisions of chapters 124 and 125 of the Code * * * on the subject of improvements have no application to a judgment creditor seeking to enforce his lien upon the land upon which the improvements have been made."

It must also be observed that in this instance the appellant was a pendente lite purchaser, with actual and constructive notice of the lis pendens. Consequently, upon well-settled principles, he took the property subject to any decree that might be rendered against his vendor in that suit touching the subject-matter thereof. Hurn v. Keller, 79 Va. 415; Sharitz v. Moyers, 99 Va. 519, 39 S. E. 166; Va. Iron Coal & Coke Co. v. Roberts, 103 Va. 661, 49 S. E. 984.

In every aspect of the case, the decree complained of is plainly right, and must be affirmed.

Error to Law and Equity Court of City of Richmond.

Action by C. H. Green against H. T. Wickham and William Northrop, as receivers of the Virginia Passenger & Power Company, the Richmond Passenger & Power Company, and the Richmond Traction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

H. Taylor, Jr., for plaintiffs in error. O'Flaherty & Fulton and Edgar B. English, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This is a personal injury action, in which there was a verdict and judgment for the defendant in error, who was plaintiff in the trial court.

We are met at the threshold of the case with a question of statutory construction of more than ordinary interest. The summons was issued May 1, 1908 (only 17 days before the right of action would have been barred by the statute of limitations), and was returnable to second May rules, at which rules the process was returned executed, and the case was continued at that and the succeeding June rules for declaration. When more than one month had elapsed after process returned executed without the declaration having been filed, the clerk called attention of counsel for the plaintiff to that fact and notified them that he would be compelled to dismiss the suit. Thereupon counsel requested that the order of dismissal be not entered, as they wished to obtain consent of opposing counsel to file the declaration. Having failed to get such consent, the court at the next term, on motion of the plaintiff, granted leave to file the declaration. The defendants, at a later day of the term, submitted a motion to set aside the former order, and that the clerk be directed to enter the suit dismissed, on the ground that by allowing the declaration to be filed then and refusing to dismiss the suit the defendants would be denied the right to plead the statute of limitations. But the court adhered to its former ruling, and the defendants excepted.

It was the duty of the clerk, by mandatory requirement of section 3241 of the Code, to have entered the suit dismissed. The rights of the defendants, however, were not materially affected by his failure to discharge that function, since such omission was a misprision over which the court is given control at the succeeding term by section 3293. So that at last the question to be determined is whether or not the court could, at the next term, under section 3293, relieve the plaintiff from the consequences of his neglect, without excuse, to file his declaration within the time prescribed by section 3241, by granting leave to file the declaration at that term, when the effect of such ruling is to deprive the defendants of an accrued right to plead the statute of limitations.

It is true that the reinstatement of a case at the following term, which has been dismissed at rules for want of declaration, may be regarded as a matter of course, provided the effect of such reinstatement is to place the case in the position it would have occupied but for the irregularity of the clerk's conduct, or for good cause shown where there has been no misprision by the clerk. This we think is the rule fairly deducible from the cases of Southall v. Exchange Bank, 12 Grat. 315, Wall v. Atwell, 21 Grat. 401, Alvis v. Johnson, 1 Va. Dec. 381, and Southern Exp. Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Va. 27, 63 S. E. 17.

Thus, in Southall v. Exchange Bank, Judge Lee said: "There can be no doubt, then, that the court might properly, as it did, set aside all the proceedings at rules after the cause had been remanded at the previous term, and permit the plaintiff to do then, in court, what he would and should have done at rules—file his declaration and take judgment for the part not answered by the plea. No injustice could be done by this to the defendant, as it only placed the cause exactly where it would have been but for the irregularities which had occurred at the rules."

In Wall v. Atwell, supra, the court held that the proceedings in the clerk's office had been so irregular that the cause was not properly on the office judgment docket, and should be remanded to rules for proper proceedings.

In Alvis v. Johnson, supra, the plaintiff was in no default. The clerk kept no rule book, and took no rules. At page 383 of 1 Va. Dec., Judge Anderson says: "If it [the amended declaration] was not then filed, it was no fault of the plaintiff."

In Southern Express Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Va. 27, 63 S. E. 17, this court said, in reference to section 3293: "This statute was ample authority for the court's action in overruling the motion to remand, and directing the clerk to make the proper entries in the rule book."

* * * It is not pretended that the defendant was misled by any misprision of the clerk, nor is it suggested that any opportunity to file pleas or make any defense was lost by reason of any action on the part of the clerk. It was the duty of the clerk to enter the rules properly as required by the statute. His failure to do so, however, could not, in this case, be prejudicial to the plaintiff, who had done all that was required to entitle him to his office judgment."

So, in Buchanan v. King, 22 Grat. 414, it was held that, where the defendant appears and files his answer or plea, or consents to a decree, he will be taken to have waived the dismissal of the cause, and will not be allowed to insist on it.

The pretension of the defendant in error leads to this: That if in the present case the clerk had complied with the statute and entered the suit dismissed, still the court could have set aside the act of the clerk, though done in strict compliance with the mandate of the statute, without cause, merely to relieve the plaintiff from the consequences of his own default. We have seen no case that sustains the contention, and such a construction of section 3293 would be out of harmony with the whole course of administration of justice under our system of jurisprudence, and would defeat the purpose of the revisors in incorporating section 6, c. 171 (the corresponding section to section 3241 of the Code of 1904) in the Code of 1849. See Report of Revisors, p. 844.

The case of Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Winston's Adm'r, 1 Hen. & M. 453, is cited for the proposition that a cause dismissed at rules for want of a declaration may be reinstated at the next court as a matter of course; but the grounds for the reinstatement in that case do not appear.

These dismissals by the clerk partake of the nature of nonsuits, and the prevailing rule is that motions to set aside a nonsuit, or to reinstate a suit after dismissal, are addressed to the judicial discretion of the court. The suit is dismissed under section 3241, because of apparent neglect of duty upon the part of the plaintiff, and it should be reinstated only upon explanation, showing that the neglect of duty was only apparent, or, if really existing, that there was excuse or extenuation for it. It is not to be reinstated merely upon showing that the plaintiff would suffer inconvenience or loss by reason of its dismissal, as that would as effectually repeal the statute as though its enforcement were left entirely to the arbitrary discretion of the court. In brief, the plaintiff, on moving to reinstate his suit, should be required to show good cause for his motion. Many of the causes which would justify a court in setting aside a nonsuit or in reinstating a dismissed cause are mentioned in 14 Cyc. 423.

The following cases further illustrate the general principle that courts will not relieve against mere neglect of parties in such case: Clark v. Stevens, 55 Iowa, 361, 7 N. W. 591; English v. Wilkins, 163 Ill. 542, 45 N. E. 287; People v. Justices, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 478; Morrow v. Malone, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 642.

It is always to be regretted when a case has to be disposed of on other grounds than those that go to the very right and merits of the cause. Courts cannot, however, permit considerations of hardship in particular cases to cause them to disregard and set at naught the plain provisions of a positive statute. To do so would be to usurp legislative functions, and would operate a judicial repeal of the statute.

The view that we have taken of the question raised by the first assignment renders the consideration of the remaining assignments of error unnecessary.

The judgment must be reversed, and this court will make such order as the trial court ought to have made, dismissing the case, with costs.

Reversed.

VIRGINIA BAKING CO. v. SOUTHERN BISCUIT WORKS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1910. Rehearing Denied, June 9, 1910.)

1. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES (§ 18*)—NAMES SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION.

The words "Crown" and "Jamestown," as applied to products of a baking company, are mere fanciful words, and, standing alone, do not indicate origin and manufacture; but in association with other words they have that effect, and entitle the user to claim a trade-mark for the combination.

2. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES (§ 61*)—INFRINGEMENT—EXTENT OF RIGHT.

The trade-marks "Crown," used in connection with soda crackers, and "Jamestown," with a kind of cake known as "drops," is not infringed by the use of "Crown" in connection with gingerbreads and of "Jamestown" in connection with "jumbles"; a kind of cake four or five times as large, and having a hole in the center as large as a "drop." The right to claim a trade-mark is coextensive only with the use made thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trade-Marks and Trade-Names, Cent. Dig. § 76; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

Appeal from Chancery Court of Richmond.

Suit by the Southern Biscuit Works against the Virginia Baking Company. From a decree in favor of complainant, defendant appeals. Reversed, injunction dissolved, and bill dismissed.

Meredith & Cocke, for appellant. A. W. Patterson, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. This suit in equity was brought by the appellee, the Southern Biscuit Works, to enjoin the appellant, the Virginia Baking Company, from the alleged infringement of certain trade-marks, the property of the plaintiff, and also to compel an accounting by the defendant for profits and damages charged to have accrued from such infringement.

The litigants are rival corporations located in the city of Richmond and engaged in the manufacture of biscuit products, such as cakes, crackers, snaps, jumbles and like goods. The gravamen of the bill is that the defendant has been guilty, not of unfair business competition, but that it has infringed upon the rights of the plaintiff in and to the use of two words, namely, "Crown" and "Jamestown." These words, it is claimed, had been adopted and appropriated by the plaintiff as common-law trade-marks and continuously applied "to distinguish and identify its biscuits in certain styles and varieties," and that it has the exclusive right to use them "for the purpose of distinguishing and identifying its said biscuit products." The bill admits that the plaintiff has hitherto only used its "Crown" trade-mark in connection with soda crackers, and the "Jamestown" brand with small cakes, known as "drops"; but the insistence is that the plaintiff's right to the employment of these words is exclusive, and that the defendant may not lawfully use either of them on any kind of cracker or cake whatsoever.

The answer controverts the proposition that the words "Crown" and "Jamestown" were adopted for the purpose of indicating "origin, manufacture, or ownership" of the goods to which they were applied, or for general use, but insists that they were placed upon certain specific articles to denote "class, grade, style, or quality," and, therefore, could not be upheld as technically trade-marks. It concedes the use by it of the word "Crown" in connection with cakes known as "gingersnaps" and "Jamestown" with cakes called "jumbles," but denies that the trade has been deceived, or that any purchaser, either wholesale or retail, could have been misled by such use of these words.

Confining our consideration to the precise issue presented by the pleadings, we are of opinion that the fair result of the evidence shows that the respective businesses of these litigants are conducted under distinct and wholly dissimilar corporate names and general trade-marks, the plaintiff doing business as the Southern Biscuit Works, under a trade-mark consisting of a sheaf of wheat printed on a label in red, white, black, and light blue; that in addition to this, as subsidiary word symbols, the plaintiff has acquired the exclusive right to use the word "Crown" in connection with its soda cracker style of goods, and "Jamestown" with a certain kind of cake known as "drops"; that the defendant is operating under the corporate name of the Virginia Baking Company, and using a trade-mark consisting of the obverse of the great seal of the commonwealth of Virginia on a red, white, and blue label. It likewise employs the word "Crown" as a grade symbol in connection with a small variety of cakes known as "gingersnaps," and the word "Jamestown" with cakes called "jumbles." A "jumble" is four or five times as large, and is essentially a different cake from a "drop," having a hole in the center as large as the "drop" itself. These several kinds of cakes are recognized in the trade as distinctive classes of goods. The words "Crown" and "Jamestown" are mere fanciful words, and, standing alone, do not indicate "origin and manufacture"; nevertheless, in association with other words, they have that effect, and entitle the plaintiff to claim a trade-mark for the combination. Manufacturing Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 51, 25 L. Ed. 993; Corbin v. Gould, 133 U. S. 308, 10 Sup. Ct. 312, 33 L. Ed. 611.

Conceding, then, the right of the plaintiff to the exclusive use of these words in the connection in which they occur and to the extent to which they have been appropriated and applied, as against the defendant, the right is coextensive only with such use. If there be any foundation for the claim that it was the intention of the plaintiff to apply these trade-marks to other products, it was an undisclosed purpose resting exclusively in the mind of the plaintiff, and could not affect the rights of the defendant, who cannot be expected to anticipate that the plaintiff might in the future conclude to manufacture and place on the market a "Crown" gingersnap, or a "Jamestown" jumble. The record affords no proof of misrepresentation or unfair dealing on the part of the defendant, and the direct testimony adduced to show that the public has been misled by the alleged infringement of the plaintiff's trade-marks in the particulars complained of is extremely meager and inconclusive. Indeed, we think it is apparent that none save the careless and inattentive could reasonably have been misled by the acts complained of.

The doctrine in controversies of this sort is stated in International Trust Company v. International Loan & Trust Company, 153 Mass. 271, 278, 26 N. E. 693, 695 (10 L. R. A. 758), as follows: "It is not sufficient that some person might possibly be misled; but the similarity must be such that 'any person, with such reasonable care and observation as the public generally are capable of using and may be expected to exercise, would mistake one for the other.'"

In White v. Trowbridge, 216 Pa. 11, 64 Atl. 862, the court held: "The defendant will not be enjoined from using certain trade-marks or labels, when they are not so similar to the ones used by the plaintiff, in appearance or in connection of the words, as to deceive a person of ordinary intelligence, using ordinary care."

In Wrisley v. Iowa Soap Co., 122 Fed. 796, 59 C. O. A. 54, the court said: "But he is not required to so distinguish his articles that careless and indifferent buyers will know by whom they are made or sold. His competitor has no better right to the monopoly of the trade of the negligent and indifferent than he has."

The rule is stated with equal emphasis by the Supreme Court of the United States in Coats v. Merrick Thread Co., 149 U. S. 562, 572, 573, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 970, 37 L. Ed. 847, Mr. Justice Brown, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court in that case, observes: "There is no doubt a general resemblance between the heads of all spools containing a black and gold label, which might induce a careless purchaser to accept one for the other. Defendants, however, were not bound to any such degree of care as would prevent this. * * * In short, they could do little more than place their own name conspicuously upon the label, to rearrange the number by placing it in the border instead of the center of the label, and to omit loops of the plaintiffs' periphery and substitute their own star between the numerals. Having done this, we think they are relieved from further responsibility."

These decisions sufficiently illustrate the controlling principle in the present case, and, as applied to the evidence, are conclusive against the pretensions of the appellee.

The decree of the chancery court must therefore be reversed, the injunction dissolved, and the bill dismissed.

Error to Circuit Court of City of Norfolk.

Action of debt on an injunction bond by C. T. Whitehead against the Cape Henry Syndicate and others. A verdict having been rendered for plaintiff for $1,100 subject to a demurrer to the evidence, the demurrer was subsequently heard by another judge and sustained, from which relator brings error. Reversed and rendered.

Burroughs & Bro., for plaintiff in error.
Wm. W. Old & Son and J. Edward Cole, for defendants in error.

BUCHANAN, J. This is an action of debt on an injunction bond in which there have been three trials. The verdicts on the first and second trials were in favor of the plaintiff, who is the plaintiff in error, but were set aside upon the motion of the defendants. Upon the third trial there was a demurrer to the evidence, which was sustained, and judgment rendered for the defendants. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

Errors are assigned to the action of the court upon each of the trials, but, in the view we take of the case, it is only necessary to consider its rulings on the last trial. The evidence on all material points was substantially the same on each trial, and if the demurrer to the evidence was properly sustained, in whole or in part, upon the last trial, the verdicts upon the first and second trials were properly set aside.

In the year 1904 the plaintiff obtained from the proper authorities a license to fish with a pound net in the waters of the commonwealth about a mile and a quarter east of Lynnhaven river. After the necessary preparations, he commenced fishing in April of that year, and continued his operations until the 26th of May following, about one month, when, upon a bill filed by the defendant, the Cape Henry Syndicate, he was enjoined from carrying on his business until the further order of the court, on the ground that he was trespassing upon the rights of that syndicate. The injunction was subsequently perpetuated by the Circuit Court, but upon an appeal to this court was dissolved. In the meantime, however, the fishing season for which the plaintiff had obtained his license had expired.

In the bill of particulars filed with the declaration four items of damage are claimed:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes † Rehearing denied September 15, 1910.

(1) Costs of the suit in which the injunction was granted; (2) cost of poles for pound net; (3) cost of erecting the poles, pumping and setting; and (4) loss of sales of fish from May 23, 1904, to the 31st of January, 1905, by reason of the injunction.

The right of the plaintiff to recover damages for the fourth item, viz., loss of sales of fish whilst the injunction was in force, is the material question upon the merits involved in the case.

To sustain his right to recover that item of damages, the plaintiff was permitted, over the objections of the defendant, to introduce evidence of the net profits made by him in the month preceding the granting of the injunction. The plaintiff also introduced evidence tending to prove that the business of pound fishing was an established business; that he was fully equipped for taking and marketing fish; that the point where his business was located was a good place for taking fish; that there was a market for fish that year; that they sold for fair prices; and that the month of May is generally the most indifferent month during the season for fishing.

A plaintiff is entitled to recover all such damages as are the natural and proximate result of the wrongful act of which he complains. This rule is well settled; but the difficulty is in applying it to a particular case. Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 416, 26 S. E. 876, and authorities cited. "A plaintiff will not ordinarily," as was said in the case cited, "be allowed to give evidence of or to recover profits or expected gains, for it is generally conjectural whether there will be any profits or gains." Profits are not excluded from recovery because they are profits, but, when excluded, it is because there are no criteria by which their amount can be ascertained with reasonable certainty or definiteness. When prospective profits or gains can be so proved, and their loss is the natural and proximate result of the wrongful act complained of, they may be recovered. Same case; Brigham v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 243, 56 Am. Rep. 28; Wilson v. Wernwag, 217 Pa. 82, 66 Atl. 242, 10 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 649.

In Alleghany Iron Co. v. Teaford, 96 Va. 372, 31 S. E. 525, profits that the plaintiff would have realized had he been permitted to perform his contract were recovered. But the profits in that case could be ascertained with reasonable certainty. They were the difference between the cost of the ore to the plaintiff at the stipulated price of delivery and the price the defendant had agreed to pay for it.

In Consumers' Ice Co. v. Jennings, 100 Va. 720, 42 S. E. 879, it was held in an action to recover damages for breach of a contract to deliver chattels that profits which the purchaser would have made on subcontracts actually made by him were sufficiently certain to be recovered.

In A. & D. Ry. Co. v. Delaware Construc- tion Co., 98 Va. 503, 37 S. E. 13, it was held, in an action to recover damages for failure to complete a pier in a given time, that the estimated gains or profits which the plaintiff might have made on the handling of freight that it was compelled to decline in consequence of the noncompletion of the pier were too remote and conjectural to be recovered.

In Grubb v. Burford, 98 Va. 553, 37 S. E. 4, it was said that, while gains prevented by withholding or interfering with property or by breach of contract might be recovered if proved, yet, as a general rule, profits dependent upon future bargains or states of the markets are not subjects of recovery.

It is insisted by the plaintiff, however, that, even if the gains or profits sought to be recovered do depend upon future bargains and states of the market, they can be recovered if the business interfered with or destroyed is an established one.

Even if this were so (as to which we express no opinion), it would not aid the plaintiff, since his business was not an established one. The doctrine in those jurisdictions in which the rule invoked prevails is thus stated in 13 Cyc. 59: "Where an established business is wrongfully injured, destroyed, or interrupted, the owner of such business can recover damages sustained, but in all cases it must be made to appear that the business that is claimed to have been interrupted was an established one, that it had been successfully conducted for such a length of time and had such a trade established that the profits thereof are reasonably ascertainable;" but, "where a new business or enterprise is floated and damages by way of profit are claimed for its interruption or prevention, they will be denied, for the reason that such business is an adventure as distinguished from an established business, and its profits are remote and speculative, existing only in anticipation."

It is clear that the plaintiff's business, under this statement of the rule invoked, was a new and not an established business. He had only been conducting it for about one month. It had not been conducted long enough and had no such trade established as would show with reasonable certainty what its profits, if any, would be. It was a new business, whose profits depended not only upon future bargains and states of the market, but upon other contingencies, such as the run of the fish that season, and the kind and quantity caught. The profits sought to be recovered by the plaintiff seem to us, under the rule invoked as well as under the principle established by our own decisions, to depend upon too many contingencies, and are altogether too uncertain to furnish a safe guide in fixing the measure of the plaintiff's damages.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the evidence, so far as the profits claimed entered into the damages found by the jury.

While there was no separate finding by the jury as to each item of damages claimed by the plaintiff, their verdict for $1,100 was necessarily made up of the second, third, and fourth items claimed in the bill of particulars, for it was admitted that the damages in the first item had been paid before this action was brought. The second and third items were clearly proved; indeed, their amount was not controverted, and aggregated $94.25. To that extent we are of opinion that the demurrer to the evidence should have been overruled.

In the case of O. A. & M. R. Co. v. Miles, 78 Va. 773, the jury in their verdict found separately as to each item of damages claimed. The trial court overruled the demurrer to the evidence, and rendered judgment for their aggregate amount. But upon a writ of error this court, being of opinion that the demurrer to all the items of damage except one should have been sustained, reversed the judgment, and entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of that item.

Though there was no separate finding in this case as to the several items of damages, it is clear, we think, that the second and third items, aggregating $94.25, and whose amount was not controverted and was clearly proved, made a part of the sum found by the jury, and to that extent judgment should have been rendered for the plaintiff by the trial court.

The judgment complained of will, therefore, be reversed, and this court will enter such judgment on the demurrer to the evidence as the trial court ought to have entered.

JONES v. TOWN OF MARTINSVILLE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 3, 1910.)

NEW TRIAL (§ 55*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURORS—WAIVER.

A party who learns of the misconduct of a juror before the jury has retired must call the attention of the court thereto at the time, and where he remains silent until a verdict has been read the misconduct is waived, and it does not justify a setting aside of the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 106-111; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Henry County.

Action by one Jones against the Town of Martinsville. Judgment for defendant was rendered after the setting aside of a verdict for plaintiff, and plaintiff brings error. Verdict reinstated, and judgment rendered thereon.

HARRISON, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff in error to recover of the town of Martinsville damages for its alleged wrongful act in cutting down a street in front of the plaintiff's premises. There were two trials of the case. On the first there was a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $781.79, which, upon motion of the defendant, was rejected by the court, and a new trial granted. At the second trial there was a verdict and judgment in favor of the defendant.

In pursuance of the statute (Code 1904, § 3484) we are asked to set aside and annul all proceedings subsequent to the first verdict, to reverse the action of the circuit court in rejecting that verdict, and to give judgment thereon in favor of the plaintiff.

The record shows that after the first verdict had been brought into court and had been read by the clerk, but before the same had been formally recorded, the defendant, by counsel, stated that since the adjournment the day before counsel had been informed that one or more members of the jury had been guilty of misconduct that ought to vitiate their verdict, and thereupon moved the court to discharge the jury without receiving and recording such verdict. Upon hearing the evidence offered in support of this motion, the court rejected the verdict and discharged the jury. To this ruling a bill of exceptions was duly taken. The next day the plaintiff moved the court to set aside its order of the day before, rejecting the first verdict; the ground of this motion being that the counsel for the defendant were informed of the alleged misconduct of the jury during the progress of the trial, and before the jury had retired to consider of their verdict, and it being insisted that such information should have been brought to the attention of the court before the jury retired. The court refused to hear the evidence offered in support of this motion, and declined to set aside the judgment complained of. The evidence adduced in support of the alleged misconduct of the jury consisted of a casual conversation had by one of the jury with a third person, who was in no way connected with the case, in which the juror indicated that the merits of the case were with the plaintiff, and that a verdict would be found in her favor. There was not a word said by this third person showing any purpose on his part to influence the juror, or having the slightest tendency to prejudice the defendant's case.

In the view, however, that we take of this case, it is unnecessary to consider whether or not the evidence in support of the alleged improper conduct of the juror was sufficient to justify the court in rejecting the first verdict; for it sufficiently appears from the record that the evidence on that subject was known to the counsel for the defendant before the jury had retired to consult of their verdict. This being so, it was too late, after verdict, to make the objection.

v. Peake, 97 Va. 180, 12 S. E. 848, after holding that the objection in such a case comes too late after verdict, Judge Lewis says: "The defendant, if dissatisfied with the remarks of the juror, should have objected, and called the attention of the court to the matter at the time, and not have contented himself with taking the chances of a favorable verdict, and afterwards raising the objection when the decision had been rendered against him. Parties ought not to be allowed to experiment with judicial proceedings in that way. By their silence, under such circumstances, they ought to be and are considered as having waived the objection."

In the case of Dower v. Church, 21 W. Va. 23, Judge Green says "that mere casual conversations with a third person about the case by a juror, without the knowledge or connivance of a party to the case, will not per se be sufficient to induce the court to award a new trial; and that, to justify the court in so doing in such a case, there must be a manifest tendency in what has been said to influence the juror to the prejudice of the party who seeks to set aside the verdict. * * * But even when the conduct of a juror is such that the court would set aside the verdict, if this is known to the party or his counsel, who seek to set aside the verdict, before the jury retired to consider of their verdict, and he fails to disclose it to the court till after the verdict is rendered, he thereby waives all objection on this account to the verdict which may be rendered. And this court will not disturb the verdict for this reason on his motion"—citing a number of authorities.

In the case of Flesher v. Hale, 22 W. Va. 44, Judge Snyder says: "The rule proceeds upon the ground that a party ought not to be permitted, after discovering an act of misconduct which would entitle him to claim a new trial, to remain silent and take his chances of a favorable verdict, and afterwards, if the verdict is against him, bring it forward as a ground for a new trial. A party cannot be permitted to lie by, after having knowledge of a defect of this character, and speculate upon the result, and complain only when the verdict becomes unsatisfactory to him. Selleck v. Sugar H. T. Co., 13 Conn. 453; Orrok v. Com. Ins. Co., 21 Pick. [Mass.] 456 [32 Am. Dec. 271]; Rex v. Sutton, 8 Barn. & Cres. 417. It follows, therefore, that when a party moves for a new trial on the ground of misconduct on the part of the jury, which took place during the trial, he must aver in his motion and show affirmatively that both he and his counsel were ignorant, until after the jury had retired, of the fact of such misconduct"—citing Thomp. & Mer. on Juries, §§ 428, 456.

In the light of these authorities, we are of opinion that the circuit court erred in setting aside or rejecting the first verdict and granting a new trial. Its judgment must therefore be reversed, and this court, in accordance with the terms of the statute, will enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $781.79, the amount of the first verdict, with interest from its date (October 9, 1908) till paid, and costs, both in the circuit court and in the prosecution here of this writ of error.

Error to Circuit Court of City of Richmond.

Action by Pollard & Haw against the American Stone Company. From the judgment, plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Haw & Haw and Hill Carter, for plaintiffs in error. O'Flaherty & Fulton, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. The plaintiffs in error brought assumpsit against the defendant in error to recover $1,207.75, to January rules, 1909, and caused a copy of the account to be served with the summons. There was no appearance at rules on behalf of the defendant, though counsel addressed a letter to the clerk requesting that they be marked as such. It is the rule of the court, on the first day of each term, to sound the docket, and all cases in which requests are made are set for trial on specified days. Accordingly, on the first day of the February term, when this case was reached (counsel on both sides being present), the plaintiffs, by their attorney, requested a day, and the court, with the consent of the attorney for the defendant, set the case for trial on the 12th of March. That date, it will be observed, was subsequent to the fifteenth judicial day of the term, on which day the office judgment entered at rules would ordinarily have become final.

After the fifteenth day of the term counsel furnished a list of witnesses to the clerk to be summoned for the defendant, but were informed by that officer that, the office judgment having become final, he was without authority to summon witnesses in the case. Thereupon the defendant moved the court to set aside the office judgment and permit them to plead to issue. The court in the first instance overruled the motion, but subsequently set aside the office judgment and allowed the plea of nonassumpsit to be filed. The case was ultimately tried at the same term, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiffs for $519.30. The plaintiffs moved to set aside the verdict, because the court was without jurisdiction to try the case after the office judgment had become final; but the motion was overruled, and judgment entered upon the verdict.

Affidavits were filed in the case by counsel on both sides. On behalf of the defendant it was alleged that on the motion of counsel for the plaintiffs, and by consent of affiant, the case was set for trial on the 12th of March; no question being raised that the issue had not been made up. By counter affidavit, counsel for the plaintiffs, without denying the main facts, asseverated that it was not his intention to waive any right which his clients might have had by reason of the failure of defendant to plead within the required time.

From the foregoing summary of material facts, it is not possible to escape the conclusion that it was understood and agreed, both by the court and counsel, that the case was to be tried, on the merits, and not to go off on office judgment. If counsel for the plaintiffs entertained any other view or purpose, it was undisclosed, and contrary to his conduct and agreement. The bare suggestion that fixing the case for trial on a future day of the term, beyond the time at which the office judgment would regularly have become final, was not intended to carry the case over in the condition in which it stood when the compact was entered into, would necessarily have put counsel on guard, and the pleadings would have been made up at once.

The case must not be confounded with a proceeding under Code Va. 1904, § 3293, where the supervisory power of the court is invoked to correct misprisions of the clerk during the preceding vacation. It stands upon a wholly different footing, and involves an entirely different principle. Here the court, in the interest of the due administration of justice, is asked, during the same term, to enforce the agreement of counsel, made by its approval, with respect to a pending case, the only possible effect of which agreement was to prevent the office judgment from becoming final, and to secure a trial on the merits.

That the defendants had a substantial defense to the action is apparent from the result of the trial. In that connection, also, it appears that the plaintiffs did not except to the verdict of the jury on the ground that it was contrary to the law and the evidence, nor did they have the evidence certified, but rested their motion for a new trial solely upon the allegation that the court had no power to try the case, as it had already gone to office judgment.

In a recent case, quite similar to this, James' Sons & Co. v. Gott & Ball, 55 W. Va. 223, 47 S. E. 649, the court held: "At the term at which an office judgment would become final by operation of the statute, if the plaintiff agrees with the defendant to continue the case until the next term, and such agreement and continuance is entered of record, they will prevent the office judgment becoming final by operation of the statute, and it cannot thereafter become final until it is entered up as the judgment of the court."

That case is entitled to special consideration, because it construes a statute similar to our own, and the reasoning of the court is strikingly applicable to the facts of this case. There the case was by agreement continued for trial to the first day of the next term, while this case was by agreement postponed for trial to a future day of the same term.

The court says: "The object of these provisions of the statute is to allow the plaintiff to have a judgment without unreasonable delay. The plaintiff may waive the benefit thereof, and agree that the judgment shall not become final, in accordance with the statute. Its agreement to a continuance is, in effect, such agreement; for the case is carried over to the next term in the same condition that it was in when the agreement became part of the record by consent of the parties. 9 Cyc. 150. The court could not have, on its own motion, entered a continuance to have such effect; nor could the defendants have had a continuance, without filing their affidavit and pleading to issue. But the plaintiff had the right to grant to the defendants time until the next term to file their affidavit and plead to issue, and thereby the operation of the law is interrupted, and the finality of the office judgment prevented, and such judgment cannot afterwards become final until it is entered as the judgment of the court. King v. Hicks, 32 Md. 480."

In the present case, as the agreement was to be carried into effect during the term, a contemporaneous order with respect to it was not necessary. The record was in fieri, and the order could be entered at any time before final adjournment.

Without prolonging this discussion, we are of opinion that the judgment of the circuit court is eminently just and plainly right, and ought to be affirmed.

STATE v. COLLINS. (Misdemeanor No. 3.)
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*) — ILLEGAL SALE—EVIDENCE—"RAKE-OFF."

Upon an indictment against C. for unlawfully selling spirituous liquor, wine, porter, ale, beer, etc., without a state license, the following facts were proven, viz.: C. kept a room in which he conducted a game with cards, called "stud poker"; chips, valued at 5 cents, 10 cents, and 25 cents each, were used to represent money; at the beginning of each game a player would purchase a number of these chips from C. and pay the money for them; during the progress of the game C. would supply the players with beer, and would take a portion of the chips, which was called a "rake-off"; at the end of the game the remaining chips in the hands of the winner were "cashed in," or redeemed by C.

Held, the jury could infer that the "rake-off" was in consideration of the beer furnished to the players, and that it constituted a sale of the beer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 313, 314; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Error from Circuit Court, Pocahontas County.

W. T. Collins was convicted of an illegal sale of liquor, and brings error. Affirmed.

Cunningham & Stallings and D. E. Cuppett, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., for the State.

WILLIAMS, J. Defendant was tried and convicted in the circuit court of Pocahontas county on the 25th of January, 1908, for unlawfully selling spirituous liquors without a state license, and was fined $100 and sentenced to imprisonment for 30 days in the county jail. Conviction was had upon the testimony of Stanley Conover. Defendant offered no testimony, and relies upon the insufficiency of the state's evidence to prove his guilt.

The facts upon which the jury found a verdict are as follows, viz.: Collins occupied a room in the basement of a building at Dunlevie, in Pocahontas county, in which he conducted a game, called by the witness "stud poker." Persons would go into this room, sometimes as many as six or eight in number, and would buy from Collins poker chips, which were used in the game to represent money. The gambling would continue sometimes from two to four hours during the evening, or night. Beer was furnished to those engaged in the play, without any additional cost to the players, except the price which they paid for the poker chips at the beginning of a game. The poker chips were valued at 5 cents, 10 cents and 25 cents each. At the end of each game Collins would take a portion of the chips as a "rake-off." The chips remaining in the hands of the winners at the end of a game would be "cashed in," or redeemed.

Counsel for Collins contends that the "rake-off" was not for the price of the beer furnished, but was intended as compensation to Collins for maintaining the place of amusement. Conover says that those who were engaged in the game got beer when they called for it; that he did not know for what purpose the "rake-off" was taken; that when the game was finished, if a player had any chips, they were "cashed in"; that sometimes, in one night, they would play as many as 80 or 100 "pots," with probably seven persons engaged in the games, and that Collins would take a "rake-off" at the end of every "pot," or game. He further says that he knew he could get beer by going into this place, but that he did not pay for it, unless it was paid for by means of the "rake-off"; that he does not know why the "rake-off" was taken, but that every one in the game got beer who called for it; and that nothing was paid for the privilege of playing in the room, unless it was paid for by means of the "rake-off."

The jury had the right to infer, from these facts, that the gambling device was a mere trick, or subterfuge, adopted by Collins for the purpose of selling beer in violation of law. They might well have concluded that the "rake-off," taken out of the chips previously purchased by the players, represented the price paid for the beer, because the chips thus taken were not redeemed by Collins. All others were redeemed, or, as witness puts it, were "cashed in." If the "rake-off" was, in fact, taken in consideration of the beer furnished to the players by Collins, it constituted a sale of the beer to them by him, and was paid for in advance, by the purchase of the chips at the beginning of the game.

"In any case where a sale, or gift, of liquors would be contrary to law, the courts will refuse to countenance any trick, artifice, or subterfuge intended to evade the law. However the parties may disguise or conceal the transaction, whatever verbal or circumstantial device they may employ to cloak the real purpose, it is enough to sustain a conviction if liquor was actually sold or given in violation of law, or evasion of its terms." Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 406. The text is supported by the following decisions: State v. Cutting, 3 Or. 260; Looney v. State, 43 Ark. 389; Archer v. State, 45 Md. 34. See, also, our own case of State v. Doyle, 64 W. Va. 366, 62 S. E. 453.

The positive statement of the witness that he did not pay for any beer is not sufficient to overcome the presumption, arising from the undisputed facts, that a sale was made by some indirect method. The witness' statement that he did not buy the beer, viewed in the light of the facts proven, should be taken as simply an expression of his opinion of what constituted a sale, and not as the statement of a fact.

The facts established, and not denied, tend strongly to prove that the poker game was a mere device, or subterfuge, to conceal defendant's real business, which was selling spirituous liquors, etc., unlawfully, and without a state license therefor. In such cases as this the jury are almost always the sole judges of the weight of the evidence, and of the importance of every reasonable inference to be deduced from the facts proven. State v. Bowyer, 43 W. Va. 180, 27 S. E. 301. The verdict is not without strong circumstantial evidence to support it, and we would not be justified in setting it aside.

The state's instruction, complained of, is based upon the theory that the jury had a right to infer, from the facts proven that the poker game was a mere subterfuge, or device, for the purpose of evading the law, and that they could find the defendant guilty, if they believed the beer was paid for by means of the "take-off." This instruction states the law correctly, and it was not error to give it.

The defendant's instruction is based upon the theory that the jury could not infer, from the facts proven, that an unlawful sale of beer had been made. This is not the law, and it was not error to refuse this instruction.

Collins was at the same term of the circuit court of Pocahontas county convicted of a second offense for unlawful selling, denominated "Misdemeanor No. 5." This case is also here for review. The evidence is similar, and the instructions and the judgment of the court are the same in both cases. The same errors are assigned in each, and the foregoing opinion and syllabus applies to both.

We find no error in the record of either case, and the judgments in both will be affirmed.

STATE v. ARBRUZINO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 1058, 1065*)—WRIT OF ERROR—NECESSITY OF EXCEPTION.

If the error complained of be that the final judgment is in excess of the verdict, it is matter of record and may be reviewed on writ of error, without any formal exception being taken to the action of the trial court. In such case it is not necessary that a motion to set aside the verdict should have been overruled, and an exception taken, in order to entitle the party complaining to a writ of error.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 881*)—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY.

The verdict of a jury in a criminal case should be read in connection with the indictment, and, if the meaning of the verdict is thus made certain, it is sufficiently definite.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2069; Dec. Dig. § 881.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 815*)—"ASSAULT" WITH INTENT TO KILL—VERDICT.

Upon an indictment for feloniously, maliciously, and unlawfully beating and wounding, with a dangerous weapon, called a club, with intent to maim, disfigure, disable, and kill, the jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Tonio Arbruzino, not guilty of the felonious and malicious assault charged in the within indictment with the intent therein charged, but we do find him guilty of the unlawful assault therein charged with the intent therein also charged."

Held, that the word "assault" in the verdict refers to the beating and wounding charged in the indictment, and does not mean the technical and common-law offense of assault.

Error from Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Tonio Arbruzino was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and brings error. Affirmed.

Sperry & Sperry, for plaintiff in error.
Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., for the State.

WILLIAMS, J. Defendant was indicted and tried in the circuit court of Harrison county for "feloniously, maliciously, and unlawfully" beating and wounding one Frank Oliverio with a deadly weapon, called a club, with intent to maim, disfigure, disable, and kill him. The jury returned the following verdict, viz.: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Tonio Arbruzino, not guilty of the felonious and malicious assault charged in the within indictment with the intent therein charged, but we do find him guilty of the unlawful assault therein charged with the intent therein also charged." A motion to set aside the verdict was overruled, but no exception taken, and the court sentenced Arbruzino to confinement in the penitentiary for a term of five years. To this judgment defendant obtained a writ of error.

Two questions are presented: (1) Whether or not the writ should have been awarded, there being no exception taken to the action of the court in overruling the motion to set aside the verdict; and (2) whether the sentence is in excess of the penalty imposed by law for the offense of which defendant was convicted.

In reference to the first point, it is only necessary to say that the rule of practice requiring bills of exceptions to be taken to the action of the court, upon motions made in the progress of the trial, and saving such exceptions by bills of exception to be made a part of the record by the court's order, is for the purpose of putting into the record, for the purpose of review by the appellate court, such matters as would not otherwise appear in the record. This rule does not apply to a case where the error complained of can be ascertained from the record. In the present case the error, if any, can be seen by a comparison of the final judgment of the court with the verdict. These are always matters of record, and when the judgment is the only thing complained of no motion need be made to set it aside, and no bill of exception is necessary.

The second point depends upon a construction of the verdict. Counsel for plaintiff in error insists that the verdict finds the prisoner guilty of nothing more than a technical, common-law "assault." We do not think so. The word "assault," as used in the verdict, should not be restricted to its technical meaning. What the jury meant by it is to be ascertained by reference to the indictment, because the verdict refers to the "unlawful assault therein [in the indictment] charged with the intent therein also charged." The word "assault," used in this connection, means the particular "beating," etc., charged in the indictment, which the jury found to have been done with the intent as charged, unlawfully, but not maliciously. The jury evidently intended the word "assault" to comprehend the words "hit, beat, and wound," used in the indictment. The verdict should be read in the light of the indictment, especially when the verdict expressly refers to the indictment.

"The verdict of a jury is to be favorably construed," etc. Lewis v. Childers, 13 W. Va. 1.

"A verdict of a jury, in a criminal case, must always be read in connection with the indictment; and if it be certain, upon reading them together, what is the meaning of the verdict, it is sufficient." Henderson v. Commonwealth, 98 Va. 794, 34 S. E. 881; Hoback v. Commonwealth, 28 Grat. (Va.) 922; State v. Staley, 45 W. Va. 792, 32 S. E. 198. The defendant was indicted for the higher offense, described in section 9, c. 144, Code 1906, felonious and malicious beating and wounding, with a dangerous weapon, with intent to maim, etc., and the jury found him guilty of a lesser degree of the offense, which was simply unlawfully, but not maliciously, doing the act.

The penalty for unlawfully, but not maliciously, doing the act is confinement in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than five years, or confinement in jail not exceeding twelve months and a fine not exceeding $500. The trial court has seen fit to impose the maximum penalty. This was in its discretion, and even if it be conceded, which we do not say is so, that we have the right to review the action of the trial court in exercising a discretion given to it in the fixing of penalties within prescribed limits, when it might be made to appear that such discretion has been abused, still we could not do so in the present case, because the evidence on which the conviction was had is no part of the record. Circumstances may have appeared in the trial which may have justified the court in giving the prisoner the maximum sentence. It does not appear that the court abused its discretion, or that the sentence does not conform to the verdict.

The judgment will be affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1023*)—WRIT OF ERROR—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

A writ of error does not lie from this court to the judgment or order of the circuit court in a criminal case setting aside the verdict of the jury and awarding a new trial. Reaffirming State v. Bluefield Drug Co., 41 W. Va. 638, 24 S. E. 649.

Error from Circuit Court, Braxton County.

James A. Martin was found not guilty of an illegal sale of liquors. From a judgment awarding a new trial, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Haymond & Fox and Hall Bros., for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., for the State.

MILLER, J. The defendant was indicted in the circuit court of Braxton county, at the November term, 1907, thereof, for selling spirituous liquors without a state license therefor. On February 25, 1908, he was tried before a jury and found not guilty as charged in the indictment. On motion of the state, at a subsequent day of the same term, the court set aside the verdict and awarded the state a new trial. To this judgment defendant obtained a writ of error from this court.

The Attorney General has moved a dismissal of the writ of error as improvidently awarded. The ground of the motion is that no writ of error lies from this court to the judgment of the circuit court setting aside a verdict and awarding a new trial, except in civil cases. We think this motion should prevail. It was decided in State v. Bluefield Drug Co., 41 W. Va. 638, 24 S. E. 649, that a writ of error does not lie to this court from an order of the circuit court reversing the judgment of an inferior court in a criminal case, and remanding the same for further proceedings. If this be the law the same rule would apply to a judgment of a circuit court, as in this case, setting aside a verdict in a criminal case, upon a trial originally had in that court. We think that State v. Bluefield Drug Co., is a proper interpretation of our statutes, and that we have no jurisdiction to consider the case upon the merits on the present writ of error.

The judgment of the circuit court is therefore affirmed.

WEAPONS (§ 17*)—DISCHARGING ON HIGHWAY.

No error of law appears, and the evidence supports the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weapons, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Error from City Court of Hartwell; W. L. Hodges, Judge.

Albert Chapman was convicted of discharging a gun on a highway, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. S. Skelton, for plaintiff in error. J. Rod Skelton, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Chapman, driving on a public highway at night, collided with a wagon driven by a man. The night was so dark that neither could distinguish the other, nor the character of the vehicle driven by the other. Chapman immediately fired his pistol in the direction of the object against which he had collided; the ball hitting a stove in the wagon driven by the other man. He was indicted for a violation of section 508 of the Penal Code of 1895, which provides that "if any person shall between dark and daylight willfully and wantonly fire off or discharge any loaded gun or pistol on the public highway and within 50 yards of the public highway, except in defense of person or property, or on his own premises, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." He contends that his conviction was illegal for three reasons:

First, he contends that, if he was guilty of anything, he was guilty of shooting at another; and this being a felony, the city court had no jurisdiction. Under his own statement, we do not think his offense was that of shooting at another. He says: "Before I was aware of it, without notice, something struck my buggy with tremendous force. Not knowing what it was, or what it meant, I fired at something that seemed to be pulling my wheel off the axle. The wheel crushed down, and I went headlong to the ground. As I was falling, I fired again. I heard no voice, and did not know what had struck me." From this statement it seems that he did not shoot at any "person," but shot at the "something" that collided with him. While he must have thought that human agency had some connection with this "something," and his shooting was reckless and without regard to consequences, yet, under his own statement, we do not think he shot at another person.

He says, in the next place, that there was no legal evidence that the highway on which the shooting occurred was a public highway. On this subject the testimony is undisputed that "it was a public road, used by the public." This would be sufficient to show prima facie that it was a public road or highway. Cleveland v. State, 4 Ga. App. 62, 60 S. E. 801.

In the third place, he insists that his act of shooting was done in defense of his person or property, and that it was in no sense willful or wanton. The evidence affirmatively shows that it was not done in defense of his person or property. Even admitting that the wagon driven by the other man collided with his buggy, it cannot be said that this was such an attack as would justify him in shooting in defense of his person or his property. According to his statement he was driving very rapidly, and according to the evidence of the man who was driving the wagon he was not driving fast, but drove slowly; so, if the blame was to be attached to any one for the collision, it would seem that the defendant was more culpable than the driver of the wagon. We think the jury was justified in finding that the act of shooting was not in defense of person or property, but was willful or wanton, and that the conviction was proper.

Judgment affirmed.

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§§ 65, 176*)—SALE—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

The sale of land involved in the present case was by the tract, and not by the acre. Under the peculiar facts of the case and the stipulations of the parties, the judge should not have held as a matter of law that the abatement of the purchase price should be calculated by mere comparison of the number of acres described in the bond for title with the admitted deficiency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 98-99, 333-340; Dec. Dig. §§ 65, 176.*]

Error from City Court of Covington; A. S. Thurman, Judge.

Action between Hugh White and E. H. Adams and others. From the judgment, White brings error. Reversed.

Middlebrook, Rogers & Knox, for plaintiff in error. F. C. Foster, for defendants in error.

POWELL, J. 1. The plaintiff sued on certain promissory notes given for the purchase price of land, for which he had executed to the defendants a bond for title in which the land was described in the following language: "All that tract or parcel of land situate, lying, and being in the county of Newton, said state, and containing 42 acres, more or less, bounded as follows: Northeast by William Lazenby; west by Robert Jackson; south by the Carmel Land & Improvement Company and H. H. Armstrong's estate; east by J. H. Roquemore, Jr." This was plainly a sale of land by the tract, and not by the acre. Kendall v. Wells, 126 Ga. 343, 55 S. E. 41.

2. If the case were not extraordinary, in that the plaintiff's counsel state in their briefs and argument that they conceded at the trial, and now concede, that the plaintiff is willing to allow a fair abatement of the purchase price, it would be easy to control the case by saying that, where the sale of land is by the tract, no apportionment of the purchase price can be had on account of a deficiency, unless both fraud and deficiency are shown. Finney v. Morris, 116 Ga. 758, 42 S. E. 1020. It appears that the defendants had not only equal means with the plaintiff of knowing the contents of the tract, but that they actually had superior opportunities to know. But the plaintiff stands willing to make a fair abatement, though the law allows none. The question is: What is fair in such a case? In ordinary cases it would be fair to deduct from the purchase price a sum derived by multiplying the number of acres in the deficiency by the average price per acre. But there are exceptional and extraordinary cases in which this rule does not apply. Compare the concluding statement at the end of the paragraph at the bottom of page 352 in the case of Kendall v. Wells, 126 Ga. 343 et seq., 55 S. E. 41, 45.

The present case is extraordinary and exceptional. It is an action at law. Law says there shall be no abatement. The plaintiff says: "I will do more than the law requires. I will concede a fair abatement." It seems fair to determine the matter on equitable principles. The parties supposed that the tract contained 42 acres; in fact it contained only 28.28 acres, creating a deficiency of 13.74 acres. The price paid for the land was $4,200, an average of $100 per acre. The land was very irregular in shape. It lay in the town of Mansfield. Four acres of it fronted on Poplar street, and was, on account of its availability for building purposes, worth more than $200 per acre. The remainder, for the greater part, lay in field and woods to the rear of these front lots, and to the rear of other building lots which had previously been cut off. Now one can readily see that if a person should own a tract which he represented to contain five acres, on which was situated a country residence worth $9,000, and should sell the tract, including the house, $10,000 and it turned out that there were only four acres, it would not ordinarily be fair and equitable to abate the price $2,000.

As the judge directed a verdict allowing a deduction of $1,874, thereby holding, as a matter of law, that the abatement on account of the deficiency should be based on the calculation of multiplying the number of acres in the deficiency by the average price per acre, we must decide the case on the theory of the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff. The jury might have found that the defendants got exactly what they expected to get, so far as the four acres fronting on Poplar street are concerned, and that the deficiency lay entirely in the field and woodland, which was the less valuable portion of the tract. If so, the jury should have been allowed to make the abatement of the purchase price on this basis: Assume $4,200 as representing what the tract would have been worth if it had contained 42 acres in all—if there had been 4 acres of frontage and 38 acres of the remainder—and say how much less valuable proportionately the tract would have been worth as a tract if, instead of 42 acres in all, there were only 28.28 acres, but without any deficiency in the frontage. On the other hand, the jury might have found that the knowledge of the defendants was as imperfect as to one portion of the tract as it was concerning the remainder. If so, they should find in accordance with the rule adopted by the trial judge. As Chief Justice Bleckley said in Estes v. Odom, 91 Ga. 600, 609, 18 S. E. 355, 357: "Knowledge of boundaries need not involve knowledge of acreage or superficial area."

We may take occasion to say, before concluding this opinion, that the defendants claim that the sale was by the acre, and not by the tract; that the description in the bond for title was placed therein by mutual mistake. If so, it should be reformed, and we suggest that, if this view of the transaction is to be insisted on, a court of equity, and not a court of law, is the proper forum. It is not yet too late to file a bill in equity. Judgment reversed.

WHITE v. BONNEY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1910. Rehearing Denied June 15, 1910.)

TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 16*)—CONVERSION OF CHECK—WHO MAY SUE.

Trover for the wrongful conversion of a check must be brought in the name of the real owner, and not necessarily in the name of the payee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Error to Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Action by F. E. White against H. G. Bonney. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

J. Edward Cole, for plaintiff in error. R. W. Tomlin and J. G. Tilton, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This was an action of trover, brought by the plaintiff in error, F. E. White, against the defendant in error, H. G. Bonney, to recover damages for the alleged wrongful conversion of two checks. One of these checks was drawn by Huff, Andrews & Thomas Company upon the Flat Top National Bank of Bluefield, W. Va., for $150. The other was the check of the Flat Top Grocery Company on the same bank for $175, and both were payable to the order of the plaintiff, White. These checks were indorsed by W. F. Richardson as follows: "F. E. White, by F. E. Richardson, for the White Horse Medicine Company"—and were delivered by Richardson to Bonney, with the request that he would collect them through one of the Norfolk city banks and pay over the proceeds to him, which arrangement was carried out by Bonney without compensation or profit.

The evidence was to the last degree conflicting, but regarding the case, as we must regard it, as upon a demurrer to the evidence by the plaintiff, it appears that the money represented by the two checks was not due to White, but belonged to the White Horse Medicine Company, being the purchase price of goods sold by Richardson, its vice president and general manager. The theory of the plaintiff—which he sought to maintain by objection to the introduction of evidence tending to show ownership of the money represented by the checks in the White Horse Medicine Company, by instructions, and by motion for judgment non obstante veredicto—proceeds upon the assumption that the checks, having been certified by the Flat Top National Bank, constituted a legal assignment to him of the funds upon which they were drawn, by virtue of the negotiable instruments law (Va. Code 1904, § 2841a, subsecs. 187, 189).

The defendant concedes that an action on the checks would have to be brought in the name of the payee, but insists that an action of trover for their wrongful conversion should be brought in the name of the real owner of the instruments. Such was the opinion of the learned judge of the court of law and chancery of the city of Norfolk, and the case was tried upon that theory.

In 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. 656, the general principle is stated as follows: "The owner of evidences of indebtedness, such as bills, notes, bonds, etc., may maintain trover in his own name for their conversion, though he could not have maintained in his name an action on the instrument itself. Thus the owner of a note may maintain trover therefor, though there has been no indorsement of the note to him."

This general statement of the rule is well sustained by authority.

In Donnell v. Thompson, 13 Ala. 440, the court said: "It is contended that, as it does not appear that the note was indorsed to the plaintiff, he cannot maintain this action. A question very similar to this arose in the case of Clowes v. Howley, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 484. The plaintiff in that case brought trover for the conversion of a bond conditioned to make titles to land. The bond had been assigned to him, but it was admitted that he could not sue the obligor of the bond in his own name, and if the suit was on the bond itself it must have been brought in the name of the obligee. Yet the plaintiff was permitted in this form of action to recover the value of the bond, which was estimated by the value of the land. This authority shows that the owner of a note or bond may bring trover for its conversion, although, if suit had been brought on the instrument itself, it must have been brought in the name of the payee or obligee. Nor do we see any reason why the owner of a bond, or note may not maintain trover for its conversion upon his possession, although the instrument be not payable to him. It is a mere chattel, and all that is necessary to maintain trover is property in the plaintiff and the right to possession."

So, in Tilden v. Brown, 14 Vt. 164, 167, the court says: "It is not the person who last had manual custody of the paper, or he to whom the check or note is made payable, who is to maintain an action for its conversion, but he who was the legal owner or beneficially interested in the check or the money secured by it."

It follows, therefore, from these authorities, that in trover for the conversion of these checks the right of action is in the real beneficial owner, the White Horse Medicine Company, and not in the plaintiff in error, White.

For these reasons, we think the judgment of the lower court is right, and should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF RICHMOND v. GENTRY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 9, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 821*)—OBSTRUCTION OF SIDEWALK—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where, in an action for injuries to a pedestrian from stumbling against a stone step in front of a side entrance to a store, evidence tended to prove that it was not against the building, but was 10 inches therefrom, in a position where it was an obstruction and a menace as to those using the street, the court properly refused a peremptory instruction for defendant city, based on the assumption that the step was not such an obstruction as to render it liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1745-1750; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 821*)—OBSTRUCTION ON SIDEWALK—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—ACTION THEREFOR—PEREMPTORY INSTRUCTIONS—PRIMARY LIABILITY.

The Richmond city charter (Act Feb. 3, 1900; Acts 1899-1900, c. 264) provides that, in any action against the city for damages for negligence in the construction and maintenance of its streets, etc., every person liable with the city for such negligence shall also be joined as defendant, and where there is a judgment or verdict against the city, as well as the other defendant, it shall be ascertained by either the court or jury which is primarily liable. Held, in an action for injury sustained by falling against a stone step on a sidewalk, that it was for the jury, under the court's proper direction, to ascertain whether the city or its codefendant was primarily liable, as between themselves, in the event of verdict against both, and the court properly refused peremptory instructions in favor of the city as to its primary liability, where there was no evidence that its codefendant placed the step where it was an obstruction, and the evidence did not prove it had occupied that position long enough to justify the jury in imputing to the city knowledge as to its position, though there was evidence that the city did not place the step, or cause it to be placed, in the position where it was.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1747; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 253*)—OBSTRUCTION ON SIDEWALK—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injury to a pedestrian, who fell against a stone step on the sidewalk, the court refused to instruct that reasonable care is defined as a relative duty, to be determined according to the circumstances of each case, and that a pedestrian passing along or using that portion of the sidewalk immediately adjacent to the property line, where obstructions are likely to be found, must exercise greater care than one passing along the center of the sidewalk, where there is less probability of obstructions. Held that, assuming it was proper as an abstract proposition of law, it was properly refused, because it disregarded evidence of the actual position of the step away from the building and in the midst of the sidewalk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 243*)—CONTRADICTORY INSTRUCTIONS.

Two instructions are not contradictory, where both correctly state the law, and its application to the particular case depends on the view the jury may take of the proof.

Error to Circuit Court of City of Richmond.

Action by Alice Gentry against the City of Richmond and another. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant city brings error. Affirmed.

H. R. Pollard and Geo. Wayne Anderson, for plaintiff in error. F. T. Sutton, Jr., E. M. Roscher and P. A. L. Smith, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. This was an action by the defendant in error, Alice Gentry, against the city of Richmond, to recover damages for an injury sustained by a fall caused by the unsafe condition of the sidewalk in said city.

By an act approved February 3, 1900 (Acts 1899-1900, p. 288), it is provided that "in any action against the city to recover damages against it, for any negligence in the construction and maintenance of its streets, alleys or parks, where any person is liable with the city for such negligence, every such person shall be joined as defendant with the city in any action brought to recover damages for such negligence, and where there is a judgment or verdict against the city, as well as the other defendant, it shall be ascertained by either the court or the jury which of the defendants is primarily liable for the damages assessed."

Under this statute one Henry Holzgreffe was joined with the city as defendant. There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. During the trial several bills of exception were taken, and the case is before us upon a writ of error.

At an early period in the trial it appeared that one Mollen was a tenant in actual possession of the premises, which belonged to the defendant Henry Holzgreffe, and the city of Richmond moved the court to dismiss the suit as to it, because the tenant had not been made a party defendant, which the court refused to do, and its refusal constitutes the first assignment of error. This assignment was withdrawn when the case was argued before us, and need not be further considered.

The evidence tends to prove that Mrs. Gentry, a widow, 58 years of age, had lived for many years in the city of Richmond in the immediate vicinity of the scene of the accident, and at the time of its occurrence was a nurse in the family of William Myer. Between 6 and 7 o'clock on the evening of the 28th of April, 1908, while passing along the west side of Munford street, north of Leigh street, going in a northerly direction towards Brook avenue, in company with two little girls, the children of her employer, the youngest of whom was five years old and the other a few years older, she came in contact with a stone located on the sidewalk, used as a step, in front of a side entrance to a store known as "No. 700 West Leigh street," that being the corner building at the northwest corner of Leigh and Munford streets, which house was owned by Henry Holzgreffe, and occupied by M. Mollen as a store and dwelling. The stone rested upon the surface of the paved sidewalk, and by actual measurement was shown to be 3 feet 6 inches long and 1 foot in width, and on its southern end, against which the plaintiff claimed to have stumbled, was six-tenths of a foot in thickness. The evidence further tended to show that there was located a gas lamp at the southwest corner of Leigh and Munford streets, distant 73 feet from the northern end of said stone, and on the same side of the street, in a northerly direction from the northern end of the stone, there was also located another gas lamp distant about 76 feet, and that there were no intervening objects which could obstruct the light thrown upon the stone from the two lamps mentioned above. It further appears that the lamps had been lighted.

It appears that the plaintiff stumbled over the stone, fell, and seriously hurt her arm; that her eyesight was not good, and for that reason, at the suggestion of the older of the two girls, she was placed on the inside, instead of next to the street line. It seems that she had often passed the point, and knew of the stone on the sidewalk. The older of the two girls also testified that she knew of the stone, and that she herself had used it in going in and out of the house, and that it was generally used for that purpose. There was also evidence tending to show that the stone was 10 inches out from the house, so that the children were accustomed to walk and play between the stone and the house. We do not deem it necessary to refer to the evidence as to the character and extent of the plaintiff's injury, as there can be no question that the evidence upon that point is quite sufficient to sustain the verdict.

The second assignment of error is to the refusal of the court to give the following instruction asked for by the city:

"The court instructs the jury that though they believe from the evidence that the step in the declaration mentioned was an encroachment upon the street, and that the plaintiff received injury by coming in contact therewith as in the declaration alleged, and that the same was the proximate cause of the accident, yet, inasmuch as the evidence in the case as to the nature, size, character, and use of the step is clear, and is without conflict, the court instructs the jury that as a question of law the said step was not such an obstruction in the street as to render the city of Richmond liable for the injury resulting therefrom, and they should find a verdict for the defendant the city of Richmond."

The doctrine relied upon by the city is that whether one has been guilty of negligence or not is a mixed question of law and fact, to be determined by the court where the facts are undisputed or conclusively proved, but where the facts are disputed or the evidence conflicting to be submitted to the jury, citing a number of authorities from this and other courts.

We need not in this case trouble ourselves with a discussion of the authorities or a determination of the question presented, for the facts take this case entirely out of their influence. If this stone had rested against the side of the house, then the evidence as to its nature, size, character, use, and position, being without conflict, it may be conceded, would have presented a question of law for the court. But the position of the stone is of first importance, and the evidence strongly tends to prove that it was not against the house, but was 10 inches out from the house—in a position where it was an obstruction and a menace to those using the street. We think the court was right in refusing the instruction asked for.

Bill of exceptions No. 3 is to the refusal of the court to give instructions B, C, and E as asked for by the city.

Instruction B is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that inasmuch as there is no evidence in this case to show that the city of Richmond placed the step on the sidewalk, as in the first count of the declaration alleged, they, the jury, should they find on the evidence, under the instructions of the court, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover against the city of Richmond, cannot properly find that the city of Richmond is primarily liable for any damages assessed in favor of the plaintiff."

Instruction C: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence, under the instructions of the court, that the city of Richmond, as well as the other defendant, was guilty of the negligence in the declaration charged against them, and that the plaintiff, without fault on her part, was damaged as in the declaration alleged, then, in assessing the damages against the defendants, they should find, and so state in their verdict, that the defendant other than the city of Richmond is primarily liable for the damages so assessed."

Holzgreffe, the owner of the property, was made a defendant with the city by virtue of the provisions of its charter. It was for the jury, under proper directions from the court, to ascertain whether he or the city was primarily liable as between themselves for the injury to the plaintiff, in the event the jury should find a verdict against both of them. We think the court properly refused instructions B and C; for, while there was evidence that the city of Richmond did not place the step or cause it to be placed against the house, there was no evidence that the other defendant placed it or caused it to be placed at a point in the street 10 inches distant from the house, and the evidence does tend to prove that it had occupied that position for a period sufficient to justify the jury in imputing to the city knowledge as to its position, or a neglect of duty in not being informed as to it.

Instruction E is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that reasonable care is defined in the instructions of the court as a relative duty to be determined according to the facts and circumstances of each case, and in this case the court says to the jury that a pedestrian passing along or using that portion of the sidewalk immediately adjacent to the property line, where obstructions are more likely to be found, must exercise greater care than one passing along the center of the sidewalk, where there is less probability of obstructions."

Assuming that it properly states an abstract proposition of law, it was properly refused, because it leaves out of view the evidence as to the actual position of the step away from the house and in the midst of the sidewalk.

Instruction No. 2, asked for by the defendant in error and given by the court, is a correct statement of the general rule upon the subject, while instruction L, asked for by the city and given by the court, is a correct statement of the exception to the rule. It is true that there is evidence tending to show that the defendant in error knew of the existence and position of this obstruction; but it is shown in evidence that her eyesight was bad, and that circumstance doubtless had weight with the jury in determining whether or not they would apply the rule or the exception. It is not a case of contradictory instructions. Both of them correctly state the law, and its application to the particular case depended upon the view the jury might take of the proof.

The remaining objections to instructions are as to the order of liability of the two defendants, and we think that question was fairly submitted to the jury, and upon the whole case that the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

CITY OF RICHMOND v. LAMBERT.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 9, 1910.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 777*)—OBSTRUCTION IN STREET—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—LIABILITY THEREFOR.

A step $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches high and $10\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide, close up to a building in front of which it is placed, and used as a means of access to it from the street, does not constitute an unlawful obstruction, and does not interfere to an appreciable or unreasonable extent with the use of the sidewalk, so as to sustain an action by a pedestrian injured by stumbling over it.

Error to Circuit Court of City of Richmond.

Action by one Lambert against the City of Richmond and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant city brings error. Reversed.

H. R. Pollard and G. W. Anderson, for plaintiff in error. John A. Lamb and S. A. Anderson, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. This is an action brought by Lambert against the city of Richmond to recover damages for an injury which was received by him from a fall, due as he contends to the negligence of the city of Richmond in failing to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition. The particular ground of complaint stated in the declaration is that there was a step on Williamsburg avenue, one of the streets of the city, between Louisiana and Graham streets, in front of the building known as "No. 3822," over which the plaintiff stumbled and fell, and received the injury of which he complains. In obedience to a provision of the charter of the city of Richmond, Segar Waters, Orella Waters, and A. Anderson, who were the "owners, users, or lessees of the property" in front of which the step was situated, were made parties defendant, and such proceedings were had as resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for $2,000, and the case is before us upon a writ of error.

During the progress of the trial there were many exceptions taken to the rulings of the court; but in the view which we take of the case we deem it unnecessary to consider but one of them, a decision of which will be conclusive of the controversy.

The court was asked to instruct the jury as follows: "The court instructs the jury that though they believe from the evidence that the step in the declaration mentioned was an encroachment upon the street, and that the plaintiff received injury by coming in contact therewith as in the declaration alleged, and that the same was the proximate cause of the accident, yet, inasmuch as the evidence in the case as to the nature, size, character, and use of the said step is clear, and is without conflict, the court instructs the jury that as a question of law the said step was not such an obstruction in the street as to render the city of Richmond liable for the injury resulting therefrom, and they should find a verdict for the defendant the city of Richmond."

The step in question was $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches high

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes and 10½ inches wide, was close up to the building in front of which it was placed, and was used as a means of access to it. We are of opinion that such a step, in such a place, did not constitute an unlawful obstruction in the street, and did not interfere to an appreciable or unreasonable extent with the use of the sidewalk.

In Parrish v. City of Huntington, 57 W. Va. 286, 50 S. E. 416, it is said:

"A municipal corporation is not an insurer against accidents upon streets or sidewalks. Nor is every defect therein, though it may cause the injury sued for, actionable. It is sufficient if the street is in a reasonably safe condition for travel in the ordinary modes, with ordinary care, by day or night; and whether so or not is a practical question, to be determined in each case by its particular circumstances.

"Where the evidence is without conflict, and it is clear and conclusive therefrom that a particular obstruction existed upon the sidewalk of the street of a municipal corporation, it is a question of law as to whether or not the obstruction was such as to render the sidewalk not in a reasonably safe condition, and thereby make the corporation liable in damages to a person injured by reason thereof."

In Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 411, 61 N. E. 699, 55 L. R. A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, it was held that a stepping-stone to facilitate access to carriages, placed near the edge of the sidewalk, which does not interfere in the least with the use of the roadway, or to an appreciable extent with the use of the sidewalk, is not a nuisance, so as to give a foot passenger, injured by stumbling over it in attempting to cross the street at a time when it is plainly visible, a right of action against the owner. In the course of the opinion the court said: "The stepping-stone in this case, located upon the sidewalk in front of a private house, was a reasonable and necessary use of the street, not only for the convenience of the owner of the house, but for other persons who desired to visit or enter the house for business or other lawful purpose. It did not interfere in the least with the use of the roadway or bed of the street, nor did it interfere to any appreciable or unreasonable extent with the use of the sidewalk. There was 8 feet of a clear open space upon the sidewalk for the use of travelers; and the fact that the plaintiff, while hurrying in the nighttime to take a cab, stumbled over the stone, when the place was well lighted and the object plainly visible, does not prove, or tend to prove, that the defendant was guilty of any wrong or breach of duty in maintaining the stepping-stone in front of her house.

It is true that the plaintiff was injured; but that was the result of an accident, due possibly to his own fault, but at all events not to any fault on the part of the defendant, or to any unlawful obstruction by the defendant of the street."

In Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 6 N. E. 273, 55 Am. Rep. 804, a stepping-stone 3 feet 4 inches in length and 20 inches wide was placed on the edge of the sidewalk. The court observed that the stone was not of unusual size, or located in an improper place, and that it would be extending the liability of cities too far to hold them liable for permitting stepping-stones on the edge of sidewalks.

In Wolff v. District of Columbia, 196 U. S. 152, 25 Sup. Ct. 198, 49 L. Ed. 426, the court said: "There are objects which subserve the use of streets, and cannot be considered obstructions to them, although some portion of their space may be occupied."

"It would be adding to the corporate liability beyond reasonable limits," said Mr. Justice Miller in Dubois v. Kingston, supra, "to hold that stepping-stones, which are almost a necessity in providing for the interest, comfort, and convenience of the public in the maintenance of walks, avenues, and streets, constitute a nuisance or obstruction, and that corporations are liable for damages by reason of accidents caused thereby."

The cases we have cited have dealt specifically with objects such as hydrants, hitching posts, telegraph poles, awning posts, and stepping-stones in the sidewalk next to the street or curb, and they have been held not to constitute a nuisance, but to be a reasonable and necessary use of the street. In the case before us the stepping-stone was equally useful and equally necessary to the enjoyment of the premises in front of which it was placed; indeed, it subserved the convenience of a greater number of persons than a horse-block would have done. The number of such steps in this city is very great. To compel their removal would be a great hardship, and we think it may safely be left to the city to determine when their removal should be required.

This case is to be differentiated from that of City of Richmond v. Gentry, 68 S. E. 274, by the fact that the stone in that case was 10 inches from the building in front of which it was placed, and, therefore, in the midst of the sidewalk.

We are of opinion that the court erred in refusing to grant instruction G, and that for this error its judgment must be reversed.

Reversed.

Error to Circuit Court, Southampton County.

Action by James A. Hamlin, administrator of Willie Hargrave, deceased, against the Shaw Land & Timber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. N. Sebrell, Jr., and N. T. Green, for plaintiff in error. D. Lawrence Groner, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. The plaintiff's intestate was run over and killed by a locomotive of the defendant company which was operating a narrow-gauge logging rail, or tram road. This action was brought to recover damages therefor.

The only ground of alleged negligence which the proof tends to sustain is that the defendant company, on the night of the accident, was operating its locomotive without a headlight.

It appears from the record, considered as on a demurrer to the evidence, that the defendant company operated a sawmill plant in Southampton county, where it owned certain timber which it was converting into lumber. Its mill was located on its own property a few hundred yards from Ivor depot, a station on the Norfolk & Western Railway. From the depot to the sawmill and from the sawmill down into the woods, the defendant owned and operated a narrow-gauge rail, or tram road, which was five or six miles in length. The road was used by the defendant company to bring logs and timber from the woods to the mill, to haul lumber to Ivor depot, and to bring supplies from the depot to the mill and to the logging camp in the woods near the mill. About 12 feet from the defendant's railway track it had built four or five "shacks" or "shanties," which some of its 125 employes working at the sawmill used as dwellings. Of those so using them was the plaintiff's intestate. The usual and customary, if not the only direct and practicable, route from these shanties to Ivor depot, where stores were located at which the defendant's employes purchased supplies, was along and on the railway, and this fact was well known to the defendant company. While it had no schedule for operating its locomotive and cars, the train generally ran between the hours of 7 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m.

On the day of the accident the decedent, after working hours, went from the mill to Ivor station, purchased some supplies, and while on his return trip, between 8 and 9 o'clock at night, was struck by the locomotive of the defendant, which inflicted injuries causing his death. When so struck, the locomotive was being operated without a headlight, but its front end, on account of some defect, was red hot. The plaintiff's intestate and the locomotive were approaching each other. The railway was straight and the red hot front of the locomotive could be seen a mile from the shanties, a few feet from where the accident occurred. The whistle of the locomotive was blown four different times within that mile—for the station about a mile away, then for the crossing $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile off, again when at a distance of 200 yards from the shanties, and again when they were only 50 yards distant. The engineer, who was at his post of duty looking ahead and could see 30 or 40 feet in front of the locomotive by the light of its red hot end, did not see the plaintiff's intestate. One of the men running on the train occupied the seat of the fireman (who was firing at the time), looking ahead, saw the locomotive strike something which at first he thought was an old pair of pants lying on the railway. "The engine struck," he testified, "what I took to be an old pair of pants, and it commenced to roll, and it seemed I discerned the limbs of something, and I turned to the fireman and said, 'I believe you struck a man'; and he said, 'Get down and look'; and, when I got where I supposed was the rags, I saw a man lying in the form I thought was the rags." The engine was running at that time about four miles an hour, and could have been stopped in 30 feet.

If there had been a headlight, it would have lighted up the track 30 or 40 yards in front of the engine.

The plaintiff's counsel insists that, under the facts disclosed by the record, the plaintiff's intestate was not a mere licensee but an invitee. Conceding, without deciding, that this is true, what degree of care did the defendant company owe to the plaintiff's intestate?

In the recent case of Clark v. Fehlhaber, 106 Va. 803, 56 S. E. 817, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442, it was held that it was the duty of the owner of premises to keep them in a reasonably safe condition for those who may enter thereon by his invitation, express or implied. He is not an insurer of their safety, and, in order to hold him liable for any injury occurring on the premises, it must have been the natural and probable result of the condition of the premises, and one which under the circumstances he ought reasonably to have foreseen might probably occur.

It is not claimed that the premises upon which the plaintiff's decedent was traveling was unsafe or dangerous in any respect except from the running of the locomotive and cars upon them. That the locomotive and cars would run upon the rail, or tram road was as well known to the plaintiff's intestate as it was to the defendant company. The fact that the locomotive was running at the time of the accident after night, and that it seldom ran after six o'clock in the evening, was not negligence on the part of the defendant. It had the right to run its locomotive at any time. If in running at an unusual or unexpected hour on the night of the accident it had failed to exercise reasonable care to give the plaintiff's intestate warning of that fact and of its approach, then there might be ground for claiming that it was negligent; but the uncontradicted evidence shows that, while the locomotive had no headlight, its front end was red hot, and could be seen on the straight line of road a mile, and that the whistle of the locomotive was blown at that distance for the station, again a quarter of a mile nearer for the crossing, then within 200 yards, and then within 50 yards of where the accident occurred. This was clearly sufficient to warn the plaintiff's intestate of the approach of the locomotive, and, if there had been a headlight, it could not have been seen by him any farther than the red-hot end of the locomotive. The mere failure to have a headlight, when not required by statute, cannot be considered negligence when other means of warning the plaintiff's intestate of the approach of the locomotive, equally efficient, were used.

But, if the failure to have a headlight were negligence, the plaintiff's intestate was clearly guilty of contributory negligence. If he was walking on the railroad, as the declaration alleges, he could not have failed in the exercise of due care to see the red-hot end of the locomotive as it approached, neither could he have failed to hear the whistle which was blown, as before stated, four several times as it approached him, once within 200 yards and again within 50 yards of the point where he was injured. If he was lying down on or near the track, as the evidence tends to show, he was plainly guilty of contributory negligence.

But it is insisted that, even if he were guilty of contributory negligence, he was entitled to recover upon the doctrine of "the last clear chance." This contention is based upon the theory that, if the defendant's locomotive had been operated with a headlight, those in charge of the locomotive would, or in the exercise of reasonable care could, have discovered the peril of the plaintiff's intestate, and have avoided the accident.

Conceding that the accident might have been avoided if there had been a headlight, was it the duty of the defendant to operate its locomotive with a headlight, when, as we have seen, the means used to warn the plaintiff's intestate of the approach of its locomotive was sufficient for that purpose?

The owner of premises upon which another is invited, expressly or impliedly, to come, is not an insurer of that other's safety, and all that the invitee is entitled to demand or expect is that, while exercising reasonable care for his own safety, the owner of the premises will likewise use ordinary care not to expose him to danger. In order to hold the owner liable for an injury occurring on the premises, it must have been the natural and probable result of the condition of the premises, and one which, under the circumstances, he ought reasonably to have foreseen might probably occur. Clark v. Fehlhaber, supra, and authorities cited.

Tested by this rule, the defendant was not liable under the rule of the last clear chance for operating its locomotive without a headlight. The means used to warn the plaintiff's intestate of the approach of the locomotive were ample, as we have seen, if he had been exercising due care or any care whatever on his own part. The injury was not the natural and probable result of the defendant's running its locomotive with the warnings given, nor was the injury one which the defendant, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, ought reasonably to have foreseen might probably occur. It was not its duty to provide means not necessary for the running of its locomotive or for giving the plaintiff's intestate sufficient warning of its approach merely to enable it to protect him from the result of his own negligence while on the defendant's premises. To hold the owner of premises liable for failing to provide in advance appliances for the purpose of protecting an invitee from the result of his own negligence when his peril could have been discovered by the use of such appliance and the injury avoided would be requiring not ordinary care but extraordinary care for the safety of the invitee. The law does not impose such a duty upon the owner to an invitee upon his premises.

Considered as upon a demurrer to the evidence, we are of opinion that the plaintiff's intestate was not entitled to recover in this case.

The action of the trial court in directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant is assigned as error. While directing a verdict in this state, yet where it appears, as in this case, that no other verdict could have been properly rendered, the error was harmless, and the judgment will not be reversed on that ground. Taylor v. B. & O. Ry. Co., 108 Va. 817, 62 S. E. 798, and cases cited.

The judgment of the circuit court must be affirmed.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 235*)—ENFORCEMENT—LIMITATIONS—BRINGING IN SUBSEQUENT INCUMBRANCERS.

A suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, under Code 1904, §§ 2481, 2484, requiring a suit to be brought within six months, and declaring that the liens may be enforced in equity, and when a suit is brought all persons entitled to any lien may file petitions for the enforcement of their respective interests, etc., must be conducted as other suits in equity to subject property to the payment of liens; and where a suit to enforce a lien is brought against the debtor within the time fixed, the failure to implead within the time a subsequent incumbrancer, within section 2483, does not defeat the lien as against the incumbrancer.

4. LIENS (§ 22*)—ENFORCEMENT—ACTIONS.

A lien creditor may sue on behalf of himself and other lien creditors to subject the property to the payment of the liens, and such other creditors may come into the suit by petition or under a decree for account, and on the return of the account the court may sell the property and distribute the proceeds among those entitled thereto.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Norfolk County.

Suit by John Monk and another against the Exposition Deepwater Pier Corporation and others. From a decree of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Jeffries, Wolcott, Wolcott & Lankford, for appellants. W. L. Williams, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. This is a suit in equity by the appellants, who were general contractors, originally against the appellees, the Exposition Deepwater Pier Corporation and the stockholders, under Code Va. 1904, § 2484, to subject their property, known as "the Deepwater Pier," to a mechanic's lien thereon amounting to $5,913.94.

This suit was admittedly brought within six months from the time when the whole amount covered by the lien became payable, as prescribed by section 2481.

The second lien on the property in question is a deed of trust executed by the owners to W. L. Williams, trustee, to secure $40,000 in bonds issued by the corporation. After the expiration of the six months, the plaintiffs in the original bill filed an amended and supplemental bill, making the trustee and holders of the bonds parties.

In the decree appealed from the circuit court dismissed both the original and amended and supplemental bills as to the trustee and holders of the bonds, because the suit against them was not brought within the six months. In other words, the holding amounts to this: That, though a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien is brought within due time against the debtor upon whose property the lien rests, the failure to implead subsequent lienors within six months defeats the lien so far as such incumbrancers are concerned.

This is plainly an erroneous construction of the mechanic's lien act. There is no statutory requirement that subsequent incumbrancers shall be made parties, and, though they are proper parties, they are not necessary parties to such suit.

Section 2481 prescribes the six months' limitation, and section 2484 declares that such liens may be enforced in a court of equity, and that when a suit is brought for that purpose all parties entitled to any such lien against the property bound thereby may file petitions in the main case for the enforcement of their respective liens, to have the same effect as if an independent suit were brought by each claimant, and the only priority among them is in favor of the subcontractor over the general contractor. The statute prescribes no form of procedure, and such suits are to be conducted as other suits in equity to subject property to payment of liens. It is settled practice, in the case of lien creditors of a living person or a corporation, that a suit will lie by one creditor on behalf of himself and other lien creditors; and such other creditors may come into the suit by petition, or under a decree for account, and prove their liens before the master, to whom an account of liens is referred. On the return of the account, the court sells the property of the debtor and distributes the proceeds among those entitled, as their rights appear. 1 Bar. Chy. Pr. (1st Ed.) 270.

Such suit is in no sense a suit against other lien creditors of the common debtor, even when convened as parties defendant. No relief is sought against them; and, where such course is adopted, they are thus impleaded as matter of convenience to enable the court to audit liens, and transfer the charge from the property to the purchase money. In this way the court offers an unincumbered title to intending purchasers, and, in the interest of all concerned, the land is sold to best advantage.

In Fidelity Loan, etc., Co. v. Dennis, 93 Va. 504, at page 508, 25 S. E. 546, at page 547, Riely, J., observes: "The statute, besides preserving, in a distribution of the proceeds of sale of the property, the equitable principle of natural justice, which is the basis of the mechanic's lien law, of giving to each lienor the benefit of his particular security, keeps also in view the settled practice in this state, which requires that the liens and incumbrances upon real estate, with their amounts and priorities shall be ascertained and determined before it is sold, in order that the parties interested may know how to act to protect their respective interests." See, also, Shultz v. Hansbrough, 33 Grat. 567, 577; Bailey Const. Co. v. Purcell, 88 Va. 300, 13 S. E. 456.

These cases and others illustrate the principle that the two classes of litigation are analogous, and controlled by the same considerations, and subject to similar rules of equity practice.

Section 2483 (after declaring that "no lien or incumbrance upon the land created before the work was commenced or materials furnished shall operate upon the building or structure erected thereon, or materials furnished for and used in the same, until the lien in favor of the person doing the work or furnishing the materials shall have been satisfied") provides: "Nor shall any lien or incumbrance upon the land created after the work was commenced or materials furnished operate on the land or such building or structure until the lien in favor of the parties doing the work or furnishing the materials shall have been satisfied."

Under the plain language of this enactment, it was necessary for the court to hold that the appellants had no mechanic's lien against the Exposition Deepwater Pier Corporation itself (there being no pretense that such lien had not been satisfied), in order to give priority to the subsequent deed of trust; and the fact that the appellants had such a lien, if not a concession in the case, is indisputably established.

It is true that in some cases one creditor may set up the statute of limitations to defeat the demand of another creditor against the common debtor; but to sustain such plea it is essential to show that the co-creditor's debt is barred as between himself and his debtor. McCartney v. Tyrer, 94 Va. 198, 26 S. E. 419; Callaway's Adm'r v. Saunders, 99 Va. 350, 38 S. E. 182.

In the case of De La Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Montgomery Brewing Co., 57 Fed. 111, 6 C. C. A. 272, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit, in construing the Alabama statute, which is substantially the same as the Virginia act, says: "If suit for the enforcement of the lien be commenced against the owner or proprietor within six months after the maturity of the indebtedness secured by it, the lien is not lost; and our opinion is that incumbrancers may, at any subsequent time, be made parties to the proceeding. The object in making them parties is to ascertain and adjust the priorities in the property charged with the lien, and to make the judgment in the proceeding binding on them. The effect of not making them parties is simply to exempt them from being concluded by the judgment. * * * It seems clear to us that the effect of not making them parties is not to lose the lien."

The cases relied on by counsel for the appellees are controlled by local statutes and have no application to a case arising under the Virginia statute, the provisions of which are essentially dissimilar.

The remaining assignment of error demanding consideration complains of the failure of the trial court to hold that under the facts in the case stockholders of the Exposition Deepwater Pier Corporation are personally liable upon their stock subscriptions to pay a sufficient sum to discharge the appellants' debt.

We do not think it necessary to pass upon that assignment at this time. The lien of the appellants, as we have seen, amounts only to $5,913.94, and the commissioner ascertains the value of the property upon which the lien rests to be $10,000. Therefore the necessity for a call upon stockholders for any installment upon their stock is not likely to arise. If, however, the real estate should prove inadequate to satisfy the lien, appellants are not to be concluded by the decree under review from seeking such relief as they may be entitled to, if any, against the stockholders.

For these reasons, the decree of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings, to be had therein not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 183*)—DISPOSAL OF LANDS OF STATE—CAVEAT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Code 1904, § 2312, providing that if a person not having possession shall locate a warrant on public land in the possession of another under color of title, without giving notice of his intention to the person in possession, as required by section 2311, the person having such possession and claim may locate a warrant on the land and file a caveat at any time before the issuing of a grant to the person failing to give the notice, the person in possession cannot maintain a caveat without himself locating a warrant on the land.

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 183*)—DISPOSAL OF LANDS OF STATE—CAVEAT—TITLE OF CAVEATOR—EVIDENCE.

Where a caveator to an application for a grant of public land shows paper title in himself and those under whom he claims, but fails to connect it with the commonwealth, and the caveator's predecessors paid taxes on the land in connection with a large tract said to include the land in dispute, and at one time a cabin had been erected on the land and occupied by one of the claimants, which was torn down by the caveator about four years prior to the survey and entry by the caveatee, and on several occasions timber and tan bark had been cut and sold from the land, but the boundary consisted of wild land, principally in original forest, uninclosed, and uncultivated, there is not such evidence of title and possession as to sustain the caveat.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

5. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 183*)—DISPOSAL OF LANDS OF STATE—CAVEAT—COURT RIGHT PROCEEDINGS.

Code 1904, § 2339, providing that no location of any land office warrant on land which shall have been settled five years previously, on which taxes have been paid at any time within five years by the settler or any person claiming under him, shall be valid, and any title of the commonwealth is relinquished to the person in possession under such settlement or payment, and authorizing any person making such settlement and payment to have the land surveyed and prove the settlement and payment before the court of the county where the land lies, cannot be relied on to sustain a caveat by one who was not in possession of the land at the date of the caveatee's location, and who has never obtained a court right thereto, nor taken any steps to acquire it.

Error to Circuit Court, Patrick County.

Caveat by one Minick to an application by one Woods for a grant of land entered as waste and unappropriated land. From a judgment in favor of the caveatee, the caveator brings error. Affirmed.

S. A. Thompson and R. E. Woolwine, for plaintiff in error. J. M. Hooker, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. The defendant in error, having located a land office warrant on 77½ acres of land on the head waters of Johnson's creek, in Patrick county, as waste and unappropriated land, filed with the register of the land office the requisite papers and made application for a grant. The plaintiff in error, by caveat, resisted the issuing of the grant on the following grounds: First, because at the time the survey was made the caveator was in actual possession of the land, claiming the same under written color of title duly recorded, extending back for many years, and that the caveator failed to give him the notice required by section 2311, Code Va. 1904; second, that the land in question is not vacant and unappropriated land, but is included in a grant of land in 1853 to Samuel Bowman (under whom the caveator claims), lying in Carroll and Patrick counties; and, third, that, if for no other reason, the grant ought not to issue because the caveator and those under whom he claims have held actual possession of the land in controversy under written recorded color of title, exercising rights of ownership over the same and regularly paying the taxes thereon for a sufficient period to raise the presumption of a grant, though it should appear that the whole tract is not embraced in the Bowman patent.

The caveatee appeared in obedience to summons, and, neither party requiring a jury, without formal pleadings in writing, all matters of law and fact were submitted to the court, which pronounced the judgment under review in favor of the caveatee. The case is, therefore, before us as upon a demurrer to the evidence by the caveator, and will be so treated in applying the principles of law relevant to the case.

In the case of Trotter v. Newton, 30 Grat. 582, 588, Christian, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "While cases of this kind are now of rare occurrence in this court, the rules which govern them are well defined * * * as follows: First. In every caveat founded on the alleged better right of the caveator to the land in controversy, the first inquiry is as to his title or interest in the subject. He cannot recover upon the mere infirmity of the title of the caveatee; for, however defective that may be, no one has a right to interpose for the purpose of preventing him from carrying his entry into grant, unless he has a better right, legal or equitable, in himself. Second. The caveator must state in his caveat the grounds on which he claims the better right to the land in controversy, and he will not be permitted to abandon in the trial the right which he has set out in his caveat as that under which he claims and prove a different right. See Walton v. Hale, 9 Grat. 194; Carter v. Ramey, 15 Grat. 846; Harper v. Baugh et al., 9 Grat. 508."

The first ground assigned against issuing the grant is that the caveator has actual possession under color of title of the land in controversy, and was so in possession when the warrant was located thereon, and that the notice required by section 2311 of the Code of the caveatee's intention to locate a warrant on the land was not given.

Section 2312 prescribes the rights and remedy of one in possession under color of title, when the notice provided by the previous section is not given, as follows: "If any person not having such possession and claim shall locate a warrant on such land without having given such notice, then the person having such possession and claim may, at any time before a grant issues to the person thus failing to give notice, locate a warrant on such land and file with the register of the land office a caveat to prevent the issuing of a grant to the person thus failing to give such notice."

To maintain a caveat under section 2312 for failure to give notice under section 2311, the party having such possession and claim must himself locate a land office warrant on the land. There is no pretense that the caveator pursued that course in this instance, and therefore his caveat cannot be maintained for want of notice.

There is no evidence to sustain the second contention, that the land in controversy is included in a grant issued to Samuel Bowman about the year 1853, so that assignment does not demand further notice.

Lastly, it is contended that the grant ought not to be issued, because the caveator and those under whom he claims have held actual possession of the land under written recorded color of title, and have exercised rights of ownership over the same, and have regularly paid taxes thereon for a sufficient length of time to raise the presumption of a grant.

The caveator does show a paper title to the land in himself and those under whom he claims as far back as the year 1886; but there is a total failure to connect such title with the commonwealth. It also appears that all or most of these claimants paid taxes on the land—chiefly in Carroll county, in connection with a large tract said to include the land in dispute. The evidence likewise shows that at one time a cabin had been erected on the land and occupied by one of the claimants, which was torn down by the caveator about four years prior to the survey and entry by the caveatee; that on several occasions timber and tan bark had been cut and sold from the land. But it clearly appears that the boundary consisted of wild mountain land, principally in original forest, uninclosed, and uncultivated. There is no evidence of actual possession of any part of the land at the date of the survey and entry, and it was regarded by the people in the vicinity as "unpatented land."

Evidence of title and possession of that kind does not show such better right, legal or equitable, in the caveator as would authorize him under the statute and decisions of this court to intervene and prevent the caveatee from carrying his entry into grant.

In his petition, however, the plaintiff in error relies upon section 2339 of the Code to maintain his caveat. There is no specification in the caveat to justify reliance upon that section; but, if there were, the facts in the case do not bear out the contention.

The section reads: "No location of any land office warrant upon any land which shall have been settled five years previously, upon which taxes shall have been paid at any time within said five years by the person having settled the same, or any person claiming under him, shall be valid, and any title which the commonwealth may have to such land shall be hereby relinquished to the person in possession of the said land claiming the same under such settlement or payment to the extent of the boundary line inclosing the same. But said boundary line shall not include more than fifteen hundred acres, and any person who has made such settlement and paid such taxes, or any one claiming under him, may have the land surveyed, and prove the settlement and payment before the court of the county where the land or a greater part thereof lies, whereupon such court shall order the plat and certificate of survey to be recorded. The said record shall be conclusive evidence in any controversy between the claimant thereunder and any person claiming under a location of the said land made after the date of such order. * * *"

The statute now contained in section 2339 was construed by this court in Slocum v. Compton, 93 Va. 374, at page 378, 25 S. E. 8, at page 4, and it was there held that, in order to acquire title by "Court Right Proceedings," the party must be in possession of the land at the time such proceeding is instituted. Judge Buchanan observes: "The object of the statute was to protect actual settlers upon the lands of the commonwealth which were subject to entry, and those in possession of such lands claiming under them. It was never intended that persons should, under its provisions, acquire title to her lands without paying anything therefor, except where they had been actually settled as required by the statute, and where the possession of the original settlers, or those claiming under them, where proceedings were had in the county court under the statute for the purpose of obtaining record evidence of their rights in the land, and in order to protect themselves from the subsequent location of land office warrants thereon. The statute only provides for the relinquishment of the commonwealth's title 'to the person in possession of the land claiming the same under such settlement,'" etc.

So in Hurley v. Charles, 110 Va. 27, 65 S. E. 468, it is said: "It expressly limits the use of the court order as evidence to those who have become locators since the date of the order."

The caveator in this case was not in possession of the land at the date of the caveatee's location, and has never obtained a court right thereto, or taken any steps to acquire it.

We find no error in the judgment of the circuit court, and it must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Error to Circuit Court of City of Richmond.

Action by Mary E. Schonberger, an infant, by next friend, against the City of Richmond and others. From the judgment, defendant city brings error. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

H. R. Pollard, Bev. T. Crump, and Emmett Seaton, for plaintiff in error. L. O. Wenderburg, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. Mary E. Schonberger, an infant under 21 years of age, brought suit by her next friend against the city of Richmond, William E. Fletcher, and Charles Gasser, to recover damages for an injury received by her, due, as she claims, to their negligent conduct.

It is the duty of the city of Richmond to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition, and in the performance of this duty it employed the defendants Fletcher and Gasser to put in proper order the crossing on the south side of Louisiana street at its intersection with Eighth street. The crossing was made of two parallel lines of stone flagging, separated from each other by a short distance, the intervening space to be filled in with stones. The declaration alleges that it is the duty of the city, in paving and filling in this space, to do the work so as not to cause the same to be a defect in and obstruction upon Eighth street, but that the city and its employes, unmindful of their duty in this behalf, filled in the open space between the lines of flagging with stone blocks, and left them projecting above the level of the flagging about 2½ inches, against which the plaintiff, without negligence on her part, struck her foot while crossing Eighth street in the nighttime, and was thrown and greatly injured.

Fletcher and Gasser were made parties defendant by virtue of a provision of the charter of the city (Acts 1899, p. 288) which provides that "in any action against the city to recover damages against it, for any negligence in the construction and maintenance of its streets, alleys or parks, where any person is liable with the city for such negligence, every such person shall be joined as defendant with the city in any action brought to recover damages for such negligence, and where there is a judgment or verdict against the city, as well as the other defendant, it shall be ascertained by either the court or the jury which of the defendants is primarily liable for the damages assessed."

The case was tried before a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant Gasser, and against the city of Richmond and William H. Fletcher for the sum of $3,000, and further found that Fletcher was primarily liable therefor. During the progress of the trial numerous exceptions were taken, but in the view that we take of the case it will only be necessary to consider one of them, as its decision will be conclusive of the controversy and render unnecessary the consideration of subordinate questions.

Stating the case of the defendant in error as strongly as is warranted by the evidence, it amounts to this: On the evening of May 16, 1908, she with two other female companions were passing along Louisiana street, going in the direction of Williamsburg avenue. When she reached the crossing of Eighth street the light fell so as to throw a shadow over the crossing. She stepped down from the sidewalk on the crossing, struck her foot against an obstacle, and fell, sustaining the injuries for which she sues. The crossing consists of two parallel paths or courses of flagging stones, laid smooth and level, separated by a small space which was filled in with pieces of stone, one of which projected about 2 inches above the level. The proof is that this work was done in the usual way, and that it was left four days before the accident, by the contractor under whose supervision the work was done, in good condition; that, having laid the paving stones, the intervening space was filled in with loose stones and covered with earth, the custom being to leave the crossing in that condition, to be finished with granite blocks by those employed to do that part of the work.

We are of opinion that the obstruction was not such as to render the city liable in damages.

In City of Richmond v. Courtney, 32 Grat. 798, it is said by Judge Christian, in whose opinion Judge Moncure concurred, that: "A municipal corporation is not an insurer against accidents upon its streets and sidewalks. Nor is every defect therein, though it may cause the injury sued for, actionable. It is sufficient if the streets are in a reasonably safe condition for travel in the ordinary modes, by night as well as by day. It is not to be expected, and ought not to be required, that a city should keep its streets at perfectly level and even surface. Slight obstructions, produced by loose bricks in the pavement, or by the roots of trees which may displace the pavement, from the very nature of things cannot be prevented. And so there cannot be perfect uniformity of a level surface, where curbstones and culverts are necessary to be constructed on the streets. In a large city, with many miles of paved streets, it must often happen, from the very nature of the material out of which the pavement is constructed, that the bricks from the very wear and tear of the use to which they are subjected, will become broken and displaced, so as to cause the fall of a person not careful in walking over them. Certainly, if the obstructions are of such a character as those indicated, and which would not cause the fall of a person exercising ordinary care, the city in such case could not be held liable."

The obstruction in that case consisted of a place in the pavement 3x5 feet, or thereabouts, from which bricks had been removed and loose bricks were lying about in the opening—certainly a more serious obstruction than the one under consideration. In that case the obstruction was upon the sidewalk. In this, the obstruction was upon the crossing of a street, which it is true may be considered, in a sense, as a part of the sidewalk. But it is only reasonable to say that one passing over a street crossing may more reasonably expect obstructions, and should, therefore, exercise a greater degree of care than when upon the sidewalk, strictly so called. To hold the city liable for every slight inequality in its streets would, we think, be altogether unreasonable.

In Bigelow v. City of Kalamazoo, 97 Mich. 121, 56 N. W. 339, it is said: "Even in our most prominent thoroughfares, paved in the most approved manner, curbs must be carried, and at the crossings they are from 2 to 6 inches higher than the pavement. The curb must be left bare, and inattentive people be liable to stumble, or, as is frequently done, a plank is placed upon an incline, upon which pedestrians carelessly advancing are liable to slip. In either case there is the minimum of danger. The walk is not absolutely safe, but it cannot be said that it is not in a reasonably safe condition. The same is true of nearly all of our alley crossings. Gutters are necessarily left for the passage of water. These crossings are not absolutely safe, but they may be reasonably so. Neither streets, sidewalks, nor crosswalks can be constructed upon a dead level. People are liable to stumble over a Persian rug upon a parlor floor, and streets cannot be made less dangerous than drawing rooms. * * * Cities are not required to keep streets in a condition absolutely safe for travel. A crosswalk must be reasonably safe—reasonably safe in view of the purpose for which it is constructed, the necessary uses of the street, and all the varying conditions."

In Weisse v. City of Detroit, 105 Mich. 482, 63 N. W. 423, it appears that there was a rise in a crosswalk, caused by one end of a plank, lying lengthwise in the walk, being raised 2 inches above the adjoining plank. It was held not a defect in the walk, so that it was not reasonably safe for travel. The court said: "If the plaintiff could recover in this case, every municipality would be compelled to exercise the most vigilant care over its streets to see that no rise of 2 inches occurred along the line of travel on side and cross walks."

We are of opinion that neither the city of Richmond nor Fletcher was guilty of actionable negligence. The judgment of the circuit court must therefore be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial, to be had not inconsistent with the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed.

STATE v. STEPHENSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1105*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—IDENTIFICATION.

For identification of a bill of exceptions as one made a part of a record by an order, it is not necessary that it bear any number, letter, or peculiar mark, or that the order refer to it as bearing a number, letter, or mark, if the substance of the bill and the descriptive matter found therein are such as leave no room for reasonable doubt that the paper is the one referred to in the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1105.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 274*)—PLEA OF GUILTY—LEAVE TO WITHDRAW.

In the absence of any controlling fact or circumstance rendering it manifestly unjust to do so, the trial court may refuse leave to withdraw a plea of guilty of murder of the first degree and enter, in lieu thereof, a plea of not guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 633; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 274*)—PLEA OF GUILTY—LEAVE TO WITHDRAW—REFUSAL.

To make the action of the court in doing so an abuse of its discretionary power, it must appear that the plea was entered under some mistake, misapprehension, compulsion, or inducement, or circumstance working injustice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 633; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 274*)—TRIAL—PLEA OF GUILTY—WITHDRAWAL—REFUSAL.

That the plea was entered under a mere surmise or conjecture of the prisoner or his attorney, or both, that, owing to the known temperament of a special judge, sitting at the time of the entry thereof, the punishment would be lighter than that anticipated from the regular judge, who returned to the bench to render judgment on the plea and fix the penalty, is not sufficient to deprive the court of its discretionary power to refuse such leave.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 633; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

5. JUDGES (§ 49*)—DISQUALIFICATION—CRIMINAL LAW.

Such regular judge is not disqualified to render judgment on such plea and determine the penalty, by reason of his having derived impressions, unfavorable to the accused, from conversations had with such special judge and the witnesses, and previously pronounced a sentence of death upon him, erroneous and reversed because of his failure to hear the witnesses regularly in the presence of the prisoner, for the enlightenment of his conscience and judgment in fixing the punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

6. JUDGES (§ 39*)—DISQUALIFICATION TO SENTENCE PRISONER.

In determining whether to sentence a prisoner to life imprisonment or death, upon his plea of guilty of first degree murder, the court is not limited or bound to an exact finding as upon an issue of fact. It exercises a discretionary power, conferred upon it by a statute. Wherefore the judge need not possess the qualifications of jurors trying the issue upon a plea of not guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

Error from Circuit Court, Mercer County.

Frank Stephenson was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Hugh G. Woods, for plaintiff in error.
Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., and D. E. Matthews, for the State.

POFFENBARGER, J. Frank Stephenson, under sentence of death by the criminal court of Mercer county, on his plea of guilty, had his case in this court once before on a writ of error, and procured a reversal of the judgment, as will appear from the report of the decision found in 64 W. Va. 392, 62 S. E. 688, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713. After the case was remanded, he renewed his motion for permission to withdraw his plea of guilty; but the court, after overruling it, again sentenced him to death, and he obtained a second writ of error.

The order in which the motion was overruled shows no exception to the action of the court, but it appears in what is brought up with the record as a bill of exceptions. The order which is said to make it a part of the record is a vacation order, bearing the style of the case and saying: "This day the prisoner presented to the undersigned judge a bill of exceptions, setting out the proceedings in this case, which, being inspected by the court, was signed, sealed, and is made a part of the record herein this 26th day of July, 1909." It does not, by any number or special mark, identify the bill of exceptions. The paper brought up, as having been referred to in this order, bears the style of the case, is signed as and for a bill of exceptions, mentions the name of the defendant and his attorneys, shows the evidence introduced, motions made and overruled, exceptions, and the sentence pronounced upon the prisoner by name. It also embodies the evidence heard by the judge to enable him to determine whether to sentence the prisoner to confinement in the penitentiary for life or to death. Under principles repeatedly declared by this court, the bill of exceptions is sufficiently identified by its subject-matter and designation in the body thereof. De Board v. Railway Co., 62 W. Va. 41, 57 S. E. 279; Chadister v. Railway Co., 62 W. Va.

566, 59 S. E. 523; Jackson v. Railway Co., 65 W. Va. 415, 64 S. E. 450; McKendree v. Shelton, 51 W. Va. 516, 41 S. E. 900.

The error for which the former judgment was reversed, namely, failure of the judge to hear the evidence, for the guidance of his discretion in determining the penalty, was avoided on this second trial, and no complaint of his action in that particular is made.

The only inquiry raised is whether the court erred in refusing to permit the prisoner to withdraw his plea of guilty and re-enter his plea of not guilty for the purpose of obtaining a trial by jury. The application for such leave is based upon no special grounds other than (1) that Special Judge McGrath was sitting in the case when the plea of guilty was entered, and the attorney for the prisoner, knowing the sentiment and feeling of said McGrath respecting the death penalty, had advised the prisoner that, in his judgment, said McGrath would not sentence him to death upon a plea of guilty, but would sentence him to confinement in the penitentiary for life, and that, not knowing the sentiment of the regular judge, who afterwards came upon the bench and actually pronounced the sentence, he would not have pleaded guilty, if he had known said McGrath would not pass sentence upon him, or that the regular judge would do so; and (2) that said regular judge, who rendered said first judgment which was reversed, having interviewed the special judge and witnesses, and so become impressed with the certainty of the prisoner's guilt and the heinousness of his crime, had delivered a lengthy sentence in which he vigorously expressed such convictions and impressions. In resistance of the motion, it was shown that certain witnesses for the state had died and others had left the country, by reason by which the state was not in as good condition to prosecute as it would have been had the prisoner allowed his plea of not guilty, entered in the first instance, to stand, and gone to trial on it at the term at which he withdrew it and pleaded guilty.

That the trial court has discretion to refuse leave to withdraw a plea of guilty in a capital case was declared by this court in the decision upon the former writ of error allowed the prisoner. That such discretion is reviewable was also asserted, but the action of the court in such case is reversible only for abuse of its discretionary power. For the same general principle, see State v. Taylor, 57 W. Va. 228, 50 S. E. 247, and State v. Shanley, 38 W. Va. 516, 18 S. E. 734. From this it follows that the plea cannot be withdrawn merely because the offense confessed is capital, and that some ground for leave to withdraw must appear, making it unjust and wrong to refuse it. There are express decisions to this effect. Griffith v. State, 36 Ind. 406; Commonwealth v. Winston, 106 Mass. 485. It only remains, therefore, to inquire whether the matters set up as special reasons for a desire to withdraw the plea were sufficient to deprive the court of its discretion in the premises. There is nothing in them to indicate misapprehension on the part of the prisoner as to the nature of the crime he was confessing, at the time he pleaded guilty, or the punishment denounced by the law upon persons found guilty thereof. He knew the penalty would be one of two things, death or life imprisonment. His application for leave to withdraw the plea does not deny his guilt. The whole tenor of his application is the right to a chance of a recommendation by the jury, precluding in law a sentence of death. In pleading guilty, he was not misled as to anything respecting the question of his guilt. He had no intimation from the court as to what the punishment would be. His action, according to his own showing, was based upon a mere surmise as to what punishment the court would inflict. He does not know, and cannot assert, even now, that the special judge, sitting at the time of the entry of the plea, would have given him the lighter sentence. It is all a matter of pure speculation and surmise. It is not enough to deprive the court of its discretion to show that the prisoner expected a milder punishment than was inflicted upon him. Mastronada v. State, 60 Miss. 86; Mounts v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky. 274, 12 S. W. 311.

The other matter relied upon, as constituting sufficient grounds to control the discretion of the court or render his disregard thereof an abuse of discretion, appeared in the record on the former writ of error. All that could be said of it now could have been said of it then. That record discloses that the judge who pronounced the sentence had interviewed the special judge who had heard the evidence and the witnesses, and subjected himself to certain impressions from their statements, heard out of court. If that were sufficient to disqualify him now, it was sufficient then. Regarding it as insufficient, we said the judgment could not be reversed on that ground, and that the court had committed no error in refusing leave to withdraw it. Hence we might now say this is a matter already adjudicated in the case. But, independently of that, we do not think the trial judge is incapacitated by his knowledge of the facts and impressions formed. His function was not to determine the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. It was only to ascertain and determine the penalty. It was competent for the Legislature to say what disposition should be made of a plea of guilty in a murder case, and it has done so by providing that the court may pronounce a sentence of death or confinement in the penitentiary, as may seem right, in the same manner and with like effect as if the prisoner had been found guilty by the verdict of a jury. Code 1906, c. 159, § 19. This gave the court discretion to inflict either er penalty, according to its judgment as to what is just and right under the circumstances. We do not think the phrase "in the same manner and with like effect as if he had been found guilty by the verdict of a jury" was intended to affect the discretion of the court. If, under this, the court acts in the same manner as a jury, the power is nevertheless discretionary, because the statute says the jury may, in their discretion, recommend confinement in the penitentiary for life in lieu of punishment by death. Its purpose and intent is to confer upon the court, in the event of a plea of guilty of murder of the first degree, that discretionary power, as to the penalty, which the jury has when it has found the accused guilty of such crime on his plea of not guilty. In exercising this power, the judge does not hear and determine an issue of fact, a question of guilt or innocence. He is empowered to do what he deems just and right, and considers the facts only for the enlightenment of his conscience and judgment. He is not bound to make an exact finding on an issue of fact, as a juror is upon an inquiry as to guilt. Hence impressions and opinions do not disqualify. Fixing the punishment is subsequent and sequential in nature. Having determined the guilt of the accused, the jurors themselves necessarily have adverse impressions, when they enter upon an inquiry as to the penalty.

In order to deprive the court of its discretionary power to refuse leave to withdraw a plea of guilty, it seems to be necessary to show that the prisoner was uninformed or misadvised as to the nature of the charge against him and the effect of his plea, or induced by threats or promises to confess the crime. This mistake, misapprehension, promise, or inducement may relate to the manner and extent of punishment; but it must appear that something of this nature induced the plea. Mounts v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky. 274, 12 S. W. 311; Davis v. State, 20 Ga. 674; People v. Scott, 59 Cal. 341; DeLoach v. State, 77 Miss. 691, 27 South. 618; 12 Cyc. 351, 352.

For the reasons stated, the judgment complained of must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

NORVELL v. KANAWHA & M. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied
June 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 331*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER ON PLATFORM—NEGLIGENCE.

It is negligence in a passenger, under ordinary circumstances, to stand upon an open platform of a rapidly moving railroad car. If one voluntarily and unnecessarily takes such position and is injured in it he cannot recover damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1371, 1374-1383; Dec. Dig. § 331.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 331*)—PASSENGER RIDING ON PLATFORM—NEGLIGENCE.

To ride on a car platform is not always a negligent act. If the train is so crowded that one cannot reasonably enter a car, it is not negligent to ride on the platform when the carrier acquiesces in the use of such accommodations by collecting fare for the same or by some other indicative act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1371, 1374-1383; Dec. Dig. § 331.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 280*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—DUTY TOWARDS PASSENGER RIDING ON PLATFORM.

The carrier owes to a passenger unvoluntarily, necessarily and rightfully riding on the platform the high degree of care commensurate with the circumstances and its act in undertaking to carry him there.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1099-1101; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 318*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER ON PLATFORM—NEGLIGENCE.

Injury to a passenger while excusably riding on the platform because of the overcrowding of the train usually constitutes a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1307-1314; Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 280*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—DUTY TOWARDS PASSENGER RIDING ON PLATFORM.

The liability of the carrier to one excusably riding on the platform is not absolute. If it used reasonable diligence to provide cars for his safe carriage, and, with fair excuse for failing to provide them, exercised the increased care demanded by the passenger's enforced position on the platform, it is not liable for injury to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1099-1101; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 296*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—INJURY TO PASSENGER ON PLATFORM—LIABILITY OF CARRIER.

If a railroad company negligently and unreasonably fails to provide sufficient cars so that passengers are compelled to ride on the platforms and then accepts passengers for carriage in such hazardous places, it is liable for damages to one injured therein, unless he has contributed to the injury by negligence on his part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1200-1203; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 283*)—LIABILITY OF CARRIER FOR CONDUCTOR'S ACTS.

The conductor of a train represents the railroad company in relation to the transportation of passengers on his train, and his act in receiving and carrying passengers on the platforms when the train is overcrowded binds the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1119-1124, 1140, 1141; Dec. Dig. § 283.*]

8. TRIAL (§§ 141, 143*)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The court cannot properly direct a verdict in a case turning on a conflict of evidence which makes the material facts so doubtful that a verdict for either party would be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 336, 342, 343; Dec. Dig. §§ 141, 143.*]

RELEASE (§ 17*) — RELEASE EXECUTED THROUGH FRAUD.

A written release or acquittance of a claim for personal injury will not sustain a plea of accord and satisfaction in the premises if its execution was obtained by deception and fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 32; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

10. RELEASE (§ 58*) — EXECUTION — FRAUD — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether a release of liability for injury was obtained by a carrier from a passenger by fraud, held, under the evidence, to be for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. §§ 109-114; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Mason County.

Action by J. C. Norvell against the Kanawha & Michigan Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Charles E. Hogg and Somerville & Somerville, for plaintiff in error. Brown, Jackson & Knight, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, P. Norvell, the plaintiff, riding on a platform of a crowded train, fell therefrom and was injured. He sued the railroad company for damages. The company defended upon the ground that there was no negligence on its part; that plaintiff's injury was caused by his own negligence; and that, at any rate, full accord and satisfaction for the injury had been made. The case came on for trial and all the evidence was adduced before the jury. The defendant moved the court to direct a verdict in its favor. The motion was granted, verdict for the defendant was returned, and judgment upon the same was entered. The plaintiff asks a reversal of that judgment.

Was the case one for jury determination? It is contended that the evidence was conflicting and that therefore the case should have been submitted to the jury. The pleadings made the case to involve two main inquiries—whether negligence on the part of defendant in the overcrowding of its cars caused plaintiff's injury, and, if so, whether accord and satisfaction therefor had been made. A conflict of evidence as to each of these propositions is claimed.

It is negligence in a passenger, under ordinary circumstances, to stand upon an open platform of a rapidly moving railroad car. If one voluntarily and unnecessarily takes such position and is injured while there he cannot recover damages. His contributory negligence bars recovery. But to ride in such place is not always a negligent act. Whether it is negligent to ride on the platform may depend on circumstances. If the train is so crowded that one cannot reasonably enter a car, and no safer place on the train is reasonably obtainable, it is not negligent to ride on the platform when the circumstances thus force the passenger to do so and the carrier acquiesces in the use of such accommodations by collecting fare for the same or by some other indicative act. What other choice has a passenger but to ride on the platform when the carrier, negligently or unavoidably, fails to provide safer accommodations for him? Must he forego his journey and the engagements dependent upon it, or his return to home at the expected time? It is not reasonable to say that he is obliged to do so. He may accept such accommodations when they are the best offered to him and rely upon the carrier to take the greater care and diligence in transporting him which are commensurate with the increased dangers of the situation in which it has placed him as a passenger. The carrier's duty to him in such situation is to use the high degree of care which its act in undertaking to carry him on the platform demands. If it fulfills that duty, and is free from negligence in other particulars, it may be absolved from damages if he is injured. Its liability for injury to him in the premises is not absolute. But injury to him in such dangerous situation, if he is obliged to take that place of carriage for want of a safer one, may make a prima facie case of liability. The liability will not exist, however, when the carrier shows that it exercised reasonable diligence to provide cars for his safe carriage, and, with a fair excuse for failure to provide them, used the increased care demanded by the lack of a safer place for his transportation. Nor will the liability exist when it appears that the passenger, by not conducting himself with the care and prudence which his position on the platform required, did that which was the proximate cause of his injury. Baldwin on American Railroad Law, 309; Moore on Carriers, 856; Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) §§ 1197, 1198; 6 Cyc. 623, 653.

If a railroad sees fit to earn a revenue by offering to the public hazardous accommodations on the platform, why should it not assume liability for the dangers incident to its own act in so doing? In justice and reason it must do so, unless it shows that it provided the best accommodations that it could under all the circumstances attending the running of its train and then exercised the degree of care that it owed to those it undertook to carry in those accommodations. This is neither a strict nor an unjust rule. If the carrier is taken unawares by unusual and unexpected demand for passage and has not safe accommodations to offer, it may justly and without liability decline to take on board more than the room within its cars will admit. The conductor in charge of the train may refuse to receive passengers that by reason of unavoidable circumstances cannot be given safe places of carriage. To do this is surely within the line of his authority. He is in charge of the train and must necessarily represent the carrier in the transportation of passengers thereon. On the other hand, when he permits passengers to ride on the platform because there is no room for them inside, and recognizes them as passengers and not trespassers by accepting fares for such carriage, or by doing some other act indicative of the fact, he also indeed represents the company. It is within the line of his duty and authority, and he binds the company by the act. Baldwin on American Railroad Law, 311. What weight can be given the notice which is usually posted on the cars that "passengers are not allowed to stand on the platform" if in fact passengers are allowed to stand there for the convenience of the company? Surely none. The company waives this notice and the rule which it recites when, for its own convenience and gain, it receives passengers as such on the platform—uses the platform to earn a revenue. It is nonsensical to give force to such rule when the company does not enforce the same, but violates the rule for its own purposes. Of course the question whether in a particular case the rule is violated for the convenience or gain of the carrier is always an important question to be considered and determined.

A railroad company knows the usual amount of travel on any one of its trains. The sale of tickets and the reports by the conductor or train auditor give it accurate basis of information upon which it can furnish cars to meet all usual demands for passage. And when it is advised of an occasion that will make demand upon any of its trains for more than the usual accommodations, it owes a duty to the public to take reasonable precaution to furnish the same. Particularly is this so when excursion occasions are advertised by the railroad company and excursion tickets sold. If it is made to appear that an overcrowding of cars was so great that passengers were compelled to ride on the platforms, that the lack of sufficient room was due to the negligence of the company itself, that the passengers were accepted for carriage on the platforms, and that such conditions and acts caused injury to a passenger, why should not the company be liable in the premises? Railroad companies seek and demand much from the public. They are entitled to the good will and fair consideration which the people through right views and just laws should always give them. They are the great commercial arteries which indeed feed our prosperity and give life and vitality to our riches and comfort. But they owe a reciprocal relation to the public. They are in duty bound to render good and reasonable service and at all times to refrain from neglect, carelessness and imposition in their operations. They peculiarly owe a duty to provide safe and sanitary accommodations for passengers—to refrain from imposing conditions that cause the inconvenient and dangerous overcrowding of trains and the unhealthy and barbarous use of filthy stations.

Since it depends upon the circumstances of each particular case whether the act of a passenger in using the platform as a place of carriage is negligence on his part, the question is usually one for jury determination. 6 Cyc. 654. It is always a question for the jury, and is not determinable by the court as a matter of law, when circumstances reasonably excusing the passenger for riding there are not admittedly shown. If the alleged necessity for riding on the platform is based on an overcrowding of the train and evidence supporting the fact of overcrowding is introduced which is met with other evidence tending to disprove the fact, a conflict is presented which it is the province of the jury to settle. Again, if there are conflicting facts and circumstances in relation to the excuse of the carrier for its alleged failure to provide ample places of safe carriage, or in relation to the degree of care which it used for the transportation of one necessarily on the platform, the jury should pass upon them. It is the province of the jury to pass upon conflicting oral testimony of witnesses which is given in their presence, and that province should not be invaded. But when the evidence, though orally given in the presence of the jury, and though conflicting as a whole, embraces uncontradicted facts or circumstances which cause the case admittedly to turn in favor of one of the parties so that a verdict against him would be set aside, the court may properly direct a verdict in his favor. The court cannot properly direct a verdict, however, in a case turning on a conflict of evidence which makes the material facts so doubtful that a verdict in favor of either party would be sustained. Ketterman v. Railroad Co., 48 W. Va. 606, 37 S. E. 683; White v. Brewing Co., 51 W. Va. 259, 41 S. E. 180; Coalmere v. Barrett, 61 W. Va. 237, 56 S. E. 385, and other cases.

Now, in the case before us, the first pertinent inquiry in relation to the alleged negligence of the railroad company is whether a safe place of carriage was provided for plaintiff. Was plaintiff, as he claims, compelled by insufficient passenger accommodations to ride on the platform? Or, did he voluntarily and unnecessarily ride there so that his own act in thus doing was the proximate cause of his injury? Then, if the overcrowding was so great that plaintiff was excusable for taking passage on the platform, was that overcrowding the fault of the railroad company in failing to provide ample accommodations? Or, was the overcrowding so unexpected and unusual that provision reasonably could not be made to prevent it? Did the company accept and receive plaintiff as a passenger on the platform of its train for lack of space in the cars? If so, and if it was excusable therein, did it then exercise the degree of care that was due to plaintiff in the hazardous position in which he was permitted to ride? Readily is it to be seen that a charge of negligence involving so many questions of fact must make, in practically every instance, a case for the jury. The determination of any of these questions would usually and naturally turn upon a mass of conflicting facts and circumstances. So it is in this case. A substantial conflict of testimony is involved. No decisive facts are so admittedly shown as to make the general issue determinable as one of law. Many facts and circumstances tend to prove that plaintiff made a reasonable effort to enter the cars, that he was prevented by the overcrowding from doing so, and that he was thus compelled to ride on the platform. Other facts and circumstances tend to prove that there was ample room in the cars and that he took passage on the platform from choice. If this primary issue should be determined in favor of plaintiff, then conflicting facts and circumstances appear which must be settled in order to determine whether the company was negligent by an inexcusable failure to provide ample cars; and, if not so negligent, whether it then failed to take the degree of care that it owed plaintiff because of the unsafe position in which he was obliged, through unforeseen and unavoidable circumstances, to ride. It is not our purpose to multiply words by a recital of the particular facts pertaining to this case. It suffices to say that witnesses as to controlling facts and circumstances on the proposition of negligence are in direct contradiction.

To support its plea of accord and satisfaction the defendant railroad company introduced a receipt for seventy-five dollars, signed by the plaintiff, which recites in substance that the sum is paid by the company and accepted by plaintiff in full payment of any liability for his injury. Plaintiff admitted that the signature thereto is his own. He, however, introduced evidence tending to prove that he was deceptively induced to sign the receipt by representatives of the company at a time when he was in the hospital suffering from the injury, lying on his back, with his senses deadened by pain and narcotic medicines; that he was made to understand and believe that the company was gratuitously giving him the amount for the purpose of paying the hospital charges and for none other; that the paper which he was asked to sign was falsely represented to him as a check for that purpose; and that the paper was so folded when presented to his reclining position for signature that he was deceived, excusably on his part, as to its real character and purport. The evidence of his witnesses in this behalf is flatly contradicted by the company's physician, in whose hospital he was, and who was present at the time the receipt was obtained. Thus we have a conflict of testimony in this branch of the case also. If the paper was obtained by deception and fraud it cannot sustain the plea of accord and satisfaction. If the receipt was fraudulently obtained it is no bar to this action. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 308, 309. While it is admitted that plaintiff did not read the paper before signing it, yet there is evidence tending to prove that he used as much prudence and circumspection as a man ordinarily would under the circumstances stated as existing at the time. Whether he did exercise such prudence and circumspection, whether he was incapacitated so that he was thrown off his guard, were questions to be determined by the jury. The disputed questions of fact relating to the validity and binding force of the terms of the paper claimed to be a release should have been submitted to the jury under proper instructions by the court as to the law in the premises.

The case was improperly taken from the consideration of the jury. It involved in its material points such disputed questions of fact that a case was not presented for the court's action in directing a verdict. Jury trial in cases to which it rightly belongs is sacredly guaranteed to all. This fundamental right must not be curtailed. The judgment will be reversed, the verdict set aside, and a new trial granted.

STATE v. ATKINSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 172*)—ILLEGAL SALES—MANAGER OF SOCIAL CLUB.

The manager of a social club chartered and organized under and pursuant to section 120a, chapter 32, Code Supplement, 1907, with license regularly obtained from the county clerk, and payment of taxes thereon as assessed by such clerk, as provided by said section, is not liable to indictment for selling intoxicating liquors to a member of such club.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 186; Dec. Dig. § 172.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 50*)—LICENSE—SOCIAL CLUBS.

Such social club, having obtained such license and paid the taxes assessed thereon, is not required by section 1, chapter 32, Code Supplement, 1907, as a condition precedent to selling or dispensing intoxicating liquors to its members, to also obtain a state license from the county court, or from the council of a municipality, where such club is located.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 51; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 80*)—LICENSE—"TO KEEP SAID CLUB."

A certificate of license "to keep said club," regularly issued by a clerk of the county court to such social club, as provided by said section 120a, with assessment and payment of taxes thereon as provided thereby, constitutes a valid license to sell and dispense intoxicating liquors to members of such club, though such certicate does not on its face specifically give right to sell.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 234*)—SOCIAL CLUBS—ILLEGAL SALES—EVIDENCE.

It is error for the court on the trial of an indictment, charging the manager of such a social club, with selling intoxicating liquors without a state license therefor, to exclude from the jury its charter, license, minutes of stockholders and board of directors, and other documents relating to the organization and management of such club, and the application for and membership therein of the person to whom it is alleged illegal sales were made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 198*)—ILLEGAL SALES—SOCIAL CLUBS—ADJUDICATION OF BONA FIDES OF ORGANIZATION.

The remedy by complaint to the circuit court, or a judge thereof in vacation, and notice thereof to such club, as provided by said section 120a, for obtaining an adjudication that such club is being or has been conducted for the purpose of violating or evading the laws of the state regulating the licensing and sale of intoxicating liquors is exclusive, and the question of the bona fides of such organization can not prior to such adjudication, and on the trial of an indictment of the manager of such club for alleged illegal sales to members thereof without a state license therefor, be determined by the court or submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

Robinson, P., dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Logan County.

Everett Atkinson was convicted of an illegal sale of liquor, and brings error. Reversed and remanded.

J. S. Miller and Marcum & Marcum, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., for the State.

MILLER, J. The defendant was indicted at the October term, 1908, of the circuit court for selling, offering and exposing for sale spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, without having obtained a state license therefor. On the trial the State proved by Simpson Thompson sales to him by defendant of whisky and beer within the county, and within one year next before the finding of the indictment, but that he had at that time joined the Guyan Valley Social Club, had "signed something" to become a member, and had agreed to pay $2.50 for his membership, and the State then rested.

The defendant, without objection by the State, thereupon introduced the charter of incorporation of the Guyan Valley Social Club, issued by the Secretary of State, July 18, 1908, to Spencer Ison, U. C. Hager, E. H. Atkinson, E. E. Epling and L. C. White, with the certificate of recordation thereof endorsed thereon, it being agreed by counsel that defendant is the E. H. Atkinson mentioned in said charter; also the affidavit of said Atkinson, made August 1, 1908, filed with the clerk of the county court, as provided by section 1044a, Code Supplement, 1907, at the time he applied for license for said club to sell and distribute to its members spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, "that the number of members of said club for the fraction of the preceding year for which said club was organized was thirty," together with the subscription of membership referred to therein and accompanying said affidavit; also the certificate of license issued by J. R. Henderson, clerk of the county court of said Logan county, August 1, 1908, together with the receipt of the clerk for $60.00, license tax assessed by him thereon, objection to which by the State was overruled, and whereby said clerk certified, "that the undersigned, in pursuance of the authority vested in him by law, has this day granted to the Guyan Valley Social Club, of City of Logan, Logan County, West Virginia, a license to keep said club at the place known as the G. W. and E. H. Atkinson property in said city, beginning 1st day of August, 1908, and ending June 30, 1909, and has assessed the tax at Sixty dollars;" also the application in writing of said Thompson for membership in said club, objection to which by the State was also overruled, whereby said applicant represents himself as over twenty-one years of age, not of intemperate habits, agrees to conform to the by-laws and regulations of said organization, if permitted to become a member thereof, and to pay an admission fee of $5.00, also agreeing to introduce no one into the club who is not a member thereof, or until he has filled and signed an application to become a member, and that he would not recommend for membership anyone of intemperate habits. A copy of the rules and regulations was also offered in evidence, and a copy of the by-laws, adopted by the stockholders on the organization of said club; also the minutes of subsequent meetings of the board of directors, which were attended by said Atkinson, a member thereof. The minutes of the board of directors show authority to the manager to hold social sessions of the club. He also offered in evidence the petition of the Guyan Valley Social Club, dated October 13, 1908, verified by L. C. White, president, addressed to the clerk of the county court of Logan County, West Virginia, setting forth at length the organization of said club, the location of its club house, its desire to keep on hand at its club house spirituous liquors to be sold directly or indirectly to its members, and its desire for a license to do so and for no other purpose than that contemplated by law, tendering the amount of the taxes and praying for such license. Said petition endorsed by said clerk was received and filed for record October 13, 1908. Counsel say they do not know why this petition was filed. And we see no reason therefor. The defendant also proved by himself that he was at the time of the sale in question secretary and general manager of the club, that he had sold no liquor to Thompson until he had become a member of the club, and had made no sales to others than members; that the money derived from all sales was deposited by him in bank to the credit of the club. He also testified to other facts not important in the disposition of the case.

After the defendant had rested, the State called G. R. Armstrong, and proved by him that he was the agent of the C. & O. Railroad at Logan, and the quantity of different kinds of intoxicating liquors received upon consignment to it at Logan, from the time of its organization up to October 26, 1908; and by Atkinson, defendant, recalled by the State, the State proved that on the 26th day of October, 1908, the club had a membership of one hundred and twenty-six. And the State again rested.

Thereupon the court on motion of the prosecuting attorney, over the objection of the defendant, struck out all the defendant's documentary evidence relating to the organization of said club, including the charter, the agreement of membership, the affidavit of Atkinson, the license issued to said club by the clerk, the application for membership by said Thompson, and the minutes and proceedings aforesaid; and upon its own motion also struck out the evidence of the witness G. R. Armstrong, and directed the jury not to consider any of the evidence so excluded.

Upon the evidence admitted the jury returned a verdict of guilty, which verdict the court, upon motion of the defendant, refused to set aside, or to grant him a new trial, and adjudged that he pay a fine of twenty-five dollars and be imprisoned in the county jail for a period of two months. To this judgment a writ of error was obtained from this court.

The errors assigned here are: First, the exclusion from the consideration of the jury of the charter of the club, the license issued by the clerk, and the other documentary evidence offered in defense; second, the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict and grant defendant a new trial.

On the trial below the fact of the sale or sales to Thompson was not controverted, and is not controverted here, but admitted. The sole question presented for our decision, therefore, is, did the court below err in excluding defendant's documentary evidence?

The attorney general justifies the action of the court below upon several grounds. The first is that the license issued by the clerk, without a regular license to vend intoxicating liquors, required by section 1, chapter 32, Code Supplement, 1907, furnished no justification for the sale to Thompson. Prior to the amendment of that chapter, section 120a, serial section 1042a, Code Supplement, 1907, as held in State v. Shumate, 44 W. Va. 490, 29 S. E. 1001, such was undoubtedly the law. But said section 120a, in force at the time of the offense charged in the indictment, is too plain to call for interpretation. It provides: "Any corporation or association chartered and organized as a social club and paying the tax above prescribed shall be entitled to distribute and dispense wines, ardent spirits, malt liquors or any mixture thereof, alcoholic bitters or bitters containing alcohol, or fruit preserved in ardent spirits, to and among its members, without obtaining any license or paying any further tax, either state, municipal or county, for the said privilege, than is above prescribed; provided, that the said corporation is organized and conducted as a bona fide social club; and provided, further, that no person or corporation shall be entitled by the payment of the tax above prescribed to conduct the business of a wholesale or retail liquor dealer for which a license is required under the existing laws of the state." The second ground is that without authority of the county court, as required by section 10, chapter 32, Code Supplement, 1907, and by virtue of section 22, chapter 3, Acts of Special Session 1907, incorporating the City of Logan, empowering the council of said city to make and enforce ordinances for the regulation and control of the sale of all intoxicating liquors, and providing for the forfeiture, cancellation and annulment of any license for the violation of any condition of the bond given, etc., and providing also "that in no event shall such license be granted to any person without the consent of a majority of the board of control," the license issued to said club by the clerk of said court without authority of said city was invalid, and constituted no defense for the sales made to Thompson. We think this ground also without any merit. Said section 10, by its very terms, has application alone to state licenses issued pursuant to section one of said chapter; and certainly the section of the charter of the City of Logan referred to, neither by its terms, or by implication, repeals the social club law. That provision of the charter relates, and was intended to relate to licenses required by the first section of said chapter 32 of Code. Said section 120a specifically provides that a social club chartered and organized pursuant thereto, upon paying the tax prescribed thereby, shall be entitled to distribute and dispense spirituous liquors to and among its members, without obtaining any license or paying any further tax either state, municipal or county for said privilege. How could language be made plainer? Repeal by implication is never favored; and the repeal of a general law by a special statute must be either express, or the language be so clear as to amount to an express direction. The same answer may be made to the argument based on section 10, chapter 36, Acts of 1905 [Code 1906, § 922], which prohibits a county court from granting a license to sell intoxicating drinks within two miles of an incorporated town, city or village, without the consent of its council, and that a license granted without such consent is void, and sales made under it violate the law. This provision clearly relates to licenses issued under the provisions of said section 1, chapter 32, and not to a social club license. The Supreme Court of Virginia in Norfolk v. Board of Trade and Business Men's Association, 109 Va. 853, 63 S. E. 987, gave similar construction to the social club law of that state. A third ground is that the license issued by said clerk is not in terms a license to sell intoxicating liquors, but "a license to keep said club" at the place designated. We see no force in this contention. No form of license is prescribed. The statute says that any such corporation or association desiring to keep on hand at its club house or other place of meeting, spirituous liquors for sale to its members, shall "make application to the county clerk wherein the club house or other place of meeting of such corporation is located, for a certificate of license." The statute does not say the application shall be by petition. It simply says that "the person making application for such license shall file with the clerk of the county court an affidavit showing the number of persons who have been members of such corporation during the preceding year, and the clerk of the county court shall file such affidavit in his office which shall be open to the examination and inspection of the prosecuting attorney or the state tax commissioner, and assess the taxes against such corporation or association at two dollars for every person who has been a member thereof during the preceding year, and the applicant shall pay the license tax as other license taxes are paid." So far as the record shows the applicant did everything required of it. The clerk issued his certificate of license, assessed the taxes thereon, and the taxes were paid. We think that this was substantial compliance with the law, both by the applicant and by the clerk. The certificate of license, with the assessment of taxes thereon, and the payment of the taxes by the applicant together constituted a good license under the statute. True the certificate might have specifically recited authority to sell spirituous liquors, but without that the certificate, as issued, with the assessment and collection of the license tax, in legal effect authorized the licensee to do the business which the statute authorized. The fourth and last ground relied on is that the evidence shows that the said club was not a bona fide organization, and that this must have been clearly apparent to the trial court, from the amount of liquor shown to have been bought and sold, the size of the membership never having exceeded one hundred and fifty-four, and that the court was justified on this ground in excluding the documentary evidence. Conceding the court may have inferred from this evidence that this club was not a bona fide social organization, was it justified on the trial of this indictment, on that ground, in excluding the defendant's documentary evidence? or could the court have lawfully submitted that question of fact to the jury? We think not. The law may have been a bad one. The legislature in 1909, in amending it, evidently thought so; but the issue of the charter to defendant's club, the organization thereunder, and the obtaining of license from the clerk, seem to have been regular, and the statute in every way complied with. Therefore, until it had been judicially determined, as provided, that said corporation was being conducted, or had been conducted for the purpose of violating or evading the laws of the state, regulating the sale of liquors, the rights and franchises of the corporation did not cease. The same statute provides that upon complaint of any person that such corporation so chartered as a social club is being conducted for the purposes of violating or evading the laws in the way indicated, and the service of such complaint on such corporation at least ten days before the hearing of such complaint, the circuit court of the county wherein is located the place of business or meeting, or the judge thereof in vacation, shall inquire into the truth of said complaint, and if such court or judge in vacation shall adjudge that said corporation is being or has been conducted for such illegal purposes "the chartered rights and franchises of said corporation shall cease and be void without any further proceedings, and the said corporation and all persons concerned in the violation or evasion of said law shall be subject to the penalties prescribed by section 3 of this chapter for the sale of intoxicating liquors without a state license therefor." Was it competent, therefore, in the face of this statute for the circuit court on the trial of an indictment to prejudice this question of bona fides without notice to the corporation and an opportunity for a hearing? We think not. We think the remedy prescribed by law exclusive, and until the question was thus judicially determined no prosecutions for violations of the law against illicit sales of spirituous liquors by such club or any one acting for it were justified.

We are therefore of opinion that the court erred in excluding defendant's evidence and directing the jury not to consider the same, and that it also erred in overruling defendant's motion for a new trial, and entering judgment against him of fine and imprisonment. The judgment below will therefore be reversed, the verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded.

STATE v. GIBSON.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 17, 1910.)(Syllabus by the Court.)1. HOMICIDE (§ 141)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INDICTMENT.

An indictment for malicious cutting and wounding, with intent to maim, disfigure, and kill, need not specify the instrument with which the injury was inflicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 247; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 90*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—"WOUND."

To constitute a "wound," within the meaning of section 9, c. 144, Code 1906, an injury must have been inflicted with a weapon other than any of those with which the human body is provided by nature, and must include a complete parting or solution of the external or internal skin.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 119; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, p. 7528.]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 142*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INDICTMENT.

Though said statute makes it a felony for a person maliciously to cause another bodily injury by any means, with intent to maim, disfigure, or kill him, an indictment, charging only malicious cutting and wounding with such intent, is not broad enough to let in proof of such injury, inflicted otherwise than by cutting or wounding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 256; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 135*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INDICTMENT.

An indictment for maliciously or unlawfully causing bodily injury otherwise than by shooting, stabbing, cutting, or wounding should specify the means by which the injury was caused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 215; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 315*)—TRIAL—PRESENCE OF ACCUSED—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption of the continuance of a fact or state of things, shown to exist, applies to a record, showing the presence of a prisoner in court at the commencement of each day's proceedings in the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 748; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 1036, 1054*)—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

Admission of hearsay evidence, without objection and exception, affords no ground for complaint in the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2639, 2662; Dec. Dig. §§ 1036, 1054.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR.

Error in sustaining an objection to a proper question is cured by admitting an answer to another question covering the same subject-matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3148; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Pocahontas County.

William Gibson was convicted of unlawful wounding, and brings error. Reversed and remanded.

N. C. McNeill and Price, Osenton & McPeak, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., and D. E. Matthews, for the State.

POFFENBARGER, J. Upon an indictment for feloniously and maliciously wounding one Cleveland Slavin, the plaintiff in error, William Gibson, was convicted of the milder offense of unlawful wounding, and sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary for a period of five years. On the writ of error allowed him, he makes a number of assignments of error.

Gibson and several others were employed in a mill at Dunlevie, W. Va. Practical joking was a custom among these men. Slavin, without the knowledge of Gibson, put oil on the handle of the latter's oil can, so that, in picking it up, his hand became greasy. He also oiled an iron bar used by Gibson. Having ascertained from the other men who had played the prank on him, Gibson began to throw oil on Slavin's back, and, when he turned around, threw it in his face. Thereupon Slavin threw a stick at Gibson, who responded with another, which broke in two. Slavin returned a piece of this stick. Then Gibson threw an iron bar at him, which struck him on the right side of the back over the kidney, injuring him to such an extent that he was confined to his bed for two weeks or more, and his bladder had to be relieved, by artificial means, of the urine, which, when extracted, was found to be bloody.

The sufficiency of the indictment is challenged because it omits designation of the instrument with which the wound was inflicted. This assignment of error is not well taken. The indictment need not set forth or describe the instrument. Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510; Canada's Case, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 899; Jackson's Case, 96 Va. 107, 30 S. E. 452; Erle's Case, 2 Lew. 133; State v. Ladd, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 226.

As the evidence fails to show any solution or breaking of the skin of the prosecuting witness, lack of an essential element of the offense charged in the indictment is asserted, under the technical rule that there can be no wound, within the meaning of the maiming statute, without a solution or fracture of the skin. This position seems to be well sustained by authority. There must be a complete breaking of the skin, external or internal. Our statute (section 9, c. 144, Code 1906), in so far as it uses the terms "stab, cut or wound," is the same as the English statute of 9 Geo. IV, and the term "wound," in that connection, has been limited in its meaning to the extent above stated. Rex v. Wood, 4 O. & P. 381. In order to inflict a wound, within the meaning of that statute, it was necessary to use an instrument of some sort, wherefore it was not effected by biting off a finger, nose or ear or causing any other injury with the teeth or hands. Jenning's Case, 2 Lew. 130; Elmsly's Case, 2 Lew. 128; Rex v. Stevens, 1 Moody, 409; Rex v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 446. But the instrument need not be a sharp or pointed one. Anything with which the skin is broken is sufficient, though blunt, provided it is a weapon other than those with which the human body is naturally provided. Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 173; Rex v. Withers, 1 Moody, 294; Rex v. Hughes, 2 C. & P. 420; Rex v. Sheard, 2 Moody, 13, 7 C. & P. 846; Rex v. Payne, 4 C. & P. 558; Rex v. Griggs, 1 Moody, 318. But a fluid, working injury, not by the force of its contact but only by its effect, when applied to the body, was not regarded as a weapon, wherefore a wound inflicted by throwing oil of vitriol in the face was not within the statute. Rex v. Morrow, 1 Moody, 456; Henshall's Case, 2 Lew. 135. For these principles, see the following additional authority; 1 Russell, Crimes (3d Eng. Ed.) 731; Bish. Stat. Crimes, 314; State v. Leonard, 22 Mo. 449, 450; Commonwealth v. Gallagher, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 563, 568.

Our statute has been broadened somewhat by the use of the term "or by any means cause him bodily injury with intent," etc. Under a proper indictment, any sort of bodily injury, inflicted by any means, with intent to maim, disfigure, or kill, is an offense under this statute, punishable as a malicious or unlawful wounding; but it is not a technical wounding, and an indictment merely for cutting and wounding does not cover it. This addition to the statute does not alter the meaning of its original terms. It simply introduces a new offense, made up of new elements. The indictment in this case charges that the prisoner cut and wounded the prosecuting witness, with the intent to maim, disfigure, and kill, thereby causing him great bodily injury. There is no averment of any bodily injury caused otherwise than by cutting and wounding. Under it, therefore, no other sort of injury can be proved. The indictment gives no notice of intent to charge any other malicious or unlawful act.

Admitting lack of proof of any fracture of the external skin, the Attorney General is forced to the contention that the presence of blood in the urine justifies an inference of fracture of the covering or skin of the kidney; there being some authority for the position that the solution of an inner lining of any portion of the body constitutes a wound. In Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 173, it was held that a blow on the face with a hammer, breaking the lower jaw and parting the internal skin, was sufficient. Two cases, Reg. v. Waltham, 3 Cox, C. C. 442, and Reg. v. Jones, 3 Cox, C. C. 441, are cited, in Bishop on Stat. Crimes, § 314, as holding that the parting of the membrane lining of the urethra constitutes an offense; but these two reports are not in our library, for which reason we are unable to see what the evidence was. The fracture may have been shown by positive and direct evidence. It was susceptible of proof in that way in the case of the broken jaw, and may have been in the other two cases. Here we have nothing but a mere uncertain inference, arising from the presence of blood in the urine. We think this is too remote and uncertain to sustain a verdict.

The next important assignment of error is the omission from the record of any plea and joinder of issue. After the writ of error was allowed by this court an attempt was made to cure this by the entry of a nunc pro tunc order, showing that, before the jury was impaneled and sworn, the defendant had entered his plea of not guilty, and placing the same upon the record as of the 7th day of October, 1909, the date of the trial. Upon what evidence the entry of such plea before the trial was ascertained, the record does not show. The defendant objected to the entry of the order, but did not take any bill of exceptions, showing the character of evidence upon which it was made, nor in any way place such evidence upon the record. Hence the action of the court, in entering the order, does not seem to have been objected to on account of the insufficiency of the evidence. The court having had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, there is a presumption in favor of the correctness of the judgment. McClure-Mable, etc., Co. v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. 921; Griffith v. Corrothers, 42 W. Va. 59, 24 S. E. 569; Reed v. Nixon, 36 W. Va. 681, 15 S. E. 416; Ramsburg v. Erb, 16 W. Va. 787; Harris v. Lewis, 5 W. Va. 575. For aught that appears in the record here, there may have been a formal plea of not guilty in the file of papers or a minute of its entry upon the clerk's docket. The only inquiry, therefore, is whether the court had power, after the end of the term at which the judgment was rendered and after the allowance of a writ of error by this court, to enter such an order. It was a mere interlocutory order, placing upon the record what had actually transpired, by way of amendment, to sustain the judgment. Both reason and authority sustain the action of the court in making such amendment at a subsequent term. In re Wight, 134 U. S. 136, 10 Sup. Ct. 487, 33 L. Ed. 865; Galloway v. McKelthen, 27 N. C. 12, 42 Am. Dec. 153; Hyde v. Curling, 10 Mo. 374; State v. Clark, 18 Mo. 432; Nelson v. Barker, 3 McLean, 379, Fed. Cas. No. 10,101; Bilansky v. State, 3 Minn. 427 (Gil. 313); Weatherman v. Commonwealth, 91 Va. 793, 22 S. E. 349; 10 Am. Cr. Rep. 93; Black on Judg. § 128; Freem. on Judg. § 156; 18 A. & E. Enc. Law, 1005; 1 Bish. Cr. Proced. § 1343. That it was done after the allowance of a writ of error is also immaterial. It is an amendment, made by the trial court and certified here, to sustain its judgment, and comes fully within the reasoning of our decisions. Gauley Coal Land Ass'n v. Spies, 61 W. Va. 19, 55 S. E. 903; McClure-Mable, etc., Co. v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. 921; Hopkins

v. Railroad Co., 42 W. Va. 535, 26 S. E. 187; Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750.

In response to the complaint that the record does not show the prisoner was in court when the verdict was rendered, it suffices to say the order shows he was there when the jury was impaneled and after the verdict was rendered, from which the presumption of his presence during the intervening period arises. The continuance of a fact or state of things once shown to exist is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. State v. Nethken, 60 W. Va. 673, 55 S. E. 742; State v. Goodrich, 14 W. Va. 834, 846; Moore v. Gilliam, 5 Munt. 346.

The hearsay evidence of the witness Slavín was not excepted to. Hence the court did not err in admitting it.

While the court sustained an objection to a question, propounded to the witness Copeland, concerning the attitude of Arbrogast and Jennings, and the prisoner excepted, the evidence, desired and sought by the question, was admitted in response to another question. Hence the error, if any, was cured.

As it does not appear what it was expected the witness Bodin would say, in response to the question propounded to him, concerning a weapon in the hands of Arbrogast, the action of the court in sustaining the objection to the question is not shown to have been prejudicial, even if erroneous.

It is said the court abused its discretion in sentencing the prisoner to five years' imprisonment; but, as the judgment will have to be reversed for insufficiency of the evidence, we do not deem it necessary to pass upon this question.

For the reasons stated, the judgment will be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

HEATON v. HOOPER, Justice of the Peace. (Supreme Court of Georgia. June 15, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—RIGHT TO REMEDY.

The writ of prohibition will not be granted in a case where the applicant is afforded any other legal remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Error from Superior Court, Stephens County; J. J. Kimsly, Judge.

Prohibition by C. F. Heaton against J. W. Hooper, as Justice of the Peace. From a judgment denying the writ, applicant brings error. Affirmed.

A case pending in a justice's court was dismissed for want of prosecution. An appeal was entered to a jury in the same court. At a subsequent term, before a jury was impaneled, the justice of the peace, on motion of defendant's counsel, again dismissed the case for want of prosecution. At a later term, after notice to the defendant, a motion to reinstate was granted over defendant's objection, and the case ordered to stand for trial at the ensuing term. After the order reinstating the case, the justice of the peace passed another order transferring the case for trial to the justice's court of another district, reciting in the order that it would be more convenient to all the parties interested to try the case in the other district, and that all the parties were consenting to the transfer. After the order last mentioned, counsel agreed, in writing, that the case be tried at a subsequent term of the court to which the case had been transferred, without further notice or service. Upon the call for trial in the court to which the case had been transferred, it was again dismissed, upon motion of defendant's counsel, for want of jurisdiction. Subsequently the justice of the peace of the district from which the case had been transferred issued an order, upon motion of plaintiff's counsel, calling upon the defendant to show cause "why said case should not be tried, for the reasons, as claimed by movant's counsel, that said case was never legally dismissed or legally transferred from this court." After service of the order on the defendant, he applied to the superior court for a writ of prohibition to prevent the justice of the peace who issued the order from further interfering with the case. The grounds relied upon for obtaining the writ of prohibition were: (a) That the justice of the peace had no right to set aside his own judgment or to reinstate a case which had been dismissed; (b) that the case had been transferred to another court by consent of all the parties, and the justice of the peace had lost jurisdiction, and the case had already been adjudicated, and the plaintiff had lost his right of certiorari and "of resuing" the case. A rule nisi was granted on the writ of prohibition, but on the hearing the writ was denied, and the applicant excepted, on the ground that the judgment was contrary to law.

N. R. C. Ramey, for plaintiff in error. J. B. Jones and Claude Bored, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. The notice issued by the justice of the peace required that the defendant show cause why the trial of the case should not proceed in the court where it was originally instituted. In response to that notice the defendant, who was subsequently the plaintiff in the application for writ of prohibition, could have set up any matter which he regarded as sufficient to prevent the further trial of the case, and the writ of certiorari would have been available to correct any error in the judgment rendered by the justice of the peace. The writ of prohibition will not lie where the applicant is afforded any other legal remedy. Hudson v. Preston, 134 Ga. —, 87 S. E. 800; Civ. Code, § 4885.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

HENDRICKS v. ALLEN et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PLEADING (§ 248*)—AMENDMENT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

There was no error in allowing the amendment to the equitable petition, or in overruling the demurrer to the petition as amended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 686-709; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

2. GROUNDS OF NEW TRIAL.

Upon a consideration of all of the grounds of the motion for new trial, none of them presents any reason for a reversal.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Action by Henry Allen and others against A. H. Hendricks. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. R. L. Smith, for plaintiff in error. Martin & Morcock and Akerman & Akerman, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. This case was before the Supreme Court on a former occasion. Hendricks v. Allen, 128 Ga. 181, 57 S. E. 224. A reversal was had because the court submitted the case to the jury on a theory or theories not authorized by the pleadings or the evidence. In the opinion it was shown that the pleadings and evidence did not raise an issue as to an agreement or understanding for the conveyance of the land by Locke to Allen; but it was said that it must not be concluded that the plaintiff might not have relief upon proper pleadings. When the case was returned to the superior court, the plaintiff amended his pleadings so as to raise the issue which the former decision held he had not in the first instance made. This amendment did not add a new cause of action, or change an action of tort into one of contract. The original proceeding was not an action of tort, but an equitable suit praying for specific performance, for the cancellation of a mortgage, and for general relief. The amendment varied somewhat the grounds on which it was claimed that he was entitled to these remedies, but there was no valid objection to its allowance. Nor was the petition, as amended, subject to the demurrer on the ground that it failed to set out any cause of action, or for want of proper parties.

A number of the grounds of the motion for new trial revolve about the question of whether or not the evidence measured up to the necessary standard to obtain relief under the pleadings, and whether there was enough evidence of a contract or understanding between Locke and Allen in regard to the manner in which the former held a deed to the land. Without taking up each of the grounds of the motion in detail, we have carefully examined them all, and are of the opinion that there was no error in any of the rulings complained of, either in regard to the evidence or certain portions of the charge, or the refusal to charge as requested: certainly nothing that requires the grant of a new trial. The evidence was necessarily somewhat general and inferential. Locke was dead, and the plaintiff could not testify; but upon the whole we think that the case was made out. As against Hendricks, the mortgagee, there was enough to show that he was affected with notice, and there was no error in refusing the motion for new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

JOHNSON v. CURRY & SEALY.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 16, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—TIMBER CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—IMPLIED WARRANTY.

In a written contract, one party, for a named consideration, "granted, leased, and conveyed" all the pine timber upon a described tract of land to others, "for the purpose of boxing, working, and otherwise using such timber for turpentine purposes" within four years from the time such use of the timber began, the former unto the latter and their assigns warranting the "timber, with the right to box, work, and otherwise use the same for turpentine purposes." The contract provided that the obligees therein might assign "this lease," and that all the rights and privileges thereunder should "vest in whomsoever may succeed to the interests hereby conveyed" to such obligees. On the back of the contract was a writing signed by the obligees, reciting that "for value received we hereby transfer to W. A. Johnson the within lease." The obligor in the original contract only had a life estate in the timber and land, and after Johnson, the assignee, began to cut boxes in the timber, he was enjoined from further using the timber by the real owners thereof. Whereupon the assignee brought suit against the assignors to recover the consideration paid them for the assignment, alleging in his petition the death of the obligor in the original contract and the insolvency of her estate. Held, that the assignor in such assignment did not impliedly warrant that the obligor in the original contract had the right to confer the privileges undertaken to be conveyed therein, and the court committed no error in dismissing the petition upon demurrer thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Error from Superior Court, Randolph County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Action by W. A. Johnson against Curry & Sealy. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. I. Gear, for plaintiff in error. M. O. Edwards, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. The defendants in error, who were also the defendants in the court below, held an agreement executed to them on October 25, 1905, by Mrs. L. J. Avera, wherein the former were granted a right to box and work the pine timber on certain lands for turpentine purposes for a period of four years after beginning operations. This contract was by the defendants, on November 8, 1905, assigned to the plaintiff by a transfer indorsed thereon and signed by the defendants, reading as follows: "For value received we hereby transfer to W. A. Johnson the within lease, with the understanding that he cancels one lease previously given him by Mrs. L. J. Avera." (In his petition in the present case, the plaintiff alleged a compliance with the condition named in the transfer.) After the plaintiff had boxed the trees on the land referred to in the contract, he was restrained by an order of the court, granted on November 19, 1906, from further operations thereon at the instance of the heirs of Arthur D. Avera, who claimed to own the fee-simple title to the property covered by the contract, and that Mrs. L. J. Avera, who executed it, had only a life estate, which had then determined by her death. Thereupon the plaintiff, after ascertaining the correctness of this contention of the heirs, acting upon legal advice, relinquished any further attempt to enforce the assigned contract as against the Avera heirs, and brought suit against the defendants to recover the consideration paid them for a transfer of the contract, alleging the insolvency of Mrs. Avera, the original obligor. There was no allegation that either the plaintiff or the defendants knew that Mrs. Avera had only a life estate, nor was there any allegation concerning any express warranty by the defendants. The petition was dismissed by the court upon demurrers filed thereto, and the plaintiff excepted.

We think the court committed no error in sustaining the demurrer to the petition and dismissing the same. In the case of Thompson v. First State Bank, 102 Ga. 696, 698, 29 S. E. 610, 611, the court uses this language: "It is true that in the assignment of a judgment the assignor impliedly warrants that the judgment is unsatisfied, that he has a legal title, and that it is a valid and subsisting obligation for the sum for which it purports to be, but there is no implied warranty of the solvency of the judgment debtor." In the case of Giffert v. West, 33 Wis. 617, it was ruled: "The doctrine of this court in Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 112, 135, and subsequent cases, that in the assignment of an instrument or contract in writing, though not negotiable, for a full and fair price, the assignor impliedly warrants that it is valid, and that the obligor is liable upon it, unless it clearly appears that the parties intended otherwise, approved and followed. Such implied warranty is limited to the validity of the contract or chose in action sold, or the liability of the persons appearing as parties to it, and does not include their ability to discharge its obligation or to furnish satisfaction out of their property." We do not think in the present case the assignor is liable to the assignee because the maker of the original contract only had a life estate in the timber about which the contract was made, and died before the rights of the assignee afforded by the contract had been exercised. It is true that the assignor, in assigning the contract, impliedly warranted, among other things, that the contract was genuine and that the assignee had a right to demand of the obligor therein, or the representatives of her estate in case of her death, what the contract called for; but this implied warranty did not include a guaranty of the ability of the obligor to carry out her part of the contract by affording the assignee a valid and enforceable right to exercise the rights accorded him thereunder with reference to the timber, or of her ability to respond in damages if she was unable to give to the assignee the privilege of exercising such rights. The fact that the assignee was unable to avail himself of the privileges sought to be afforded by the obligor in the contract gave the former a right of action against the latter if living, and against the representatives of her estate in case of her death; and the assignor, when he transferred the contract to the assignee, did have the right to demand of the obligor the right to exercise such privileges, which right was transferred to the assignee. The contract provided in terms that the defendants could assign it, and that the assignee, under the assignment, should acquire all of the rights which they had by virtue of the contract, and the assignment simply placed the assignee in the shoes of the assignors, with all of the rights and privileges which the latter had under and by virtue of the contract.

The original contract provided that the obligor therein, "her heirs, executors, and administrators, the said granted and leased timber, with the right to box, work, and otherwise use the same for turpentine purposes, unto the said parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns, will forever warrant and defend." Under the contract, the assignee of the obligees therein succeeded to all the rights and remedies of the assignor in case of any breach of this warranty. If the assignee wanted to hold the assignors liable on a similar warranty, he should have had a contract providing for such warranty. There was no implied warranty on the part of the assignors that the obligor would survive until the privileges referred to in the contract were exercised by the assignee, or that such privileges could be exercised after her death. In such an assignment it was not implied that the assignor warranted the obligor had a right to confer the privileges referred to in the contract, though the assignor did impliedly warrant that the obligor was, by virtue of such contract at the time of the assignment, under a valid obligation to accord to the assignee a valid right to the exercise of such privileges. In such an assignment there is no more an implied warranty that the obligor in the original contract had such a title as permitted her to allow the exercises of the privileges referred to in the contract than there is in an assignment by the holder of a judgment an implied warranty that the party against whom the judgment exists is able to pay it. In both instances, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, there is simply an implied warranty that the assignee will have a valid right to demand that the third party respond and fulfill his obligations, and no implied warranty that such obligor is able to respond and fulfill the obligation imposed upon him.

In the assignment we are considering, the assignor impliedly warranted that the obligor in the contract assigned was under a legal obligation to perform it and accord to the assignee a legal and enforceable right to the exercise of the privileges undertaken to be conferred by it; but there was no implied warranty on the part of the assignor that the obligor in the original contract could or would faithfully perform it, or could or would permit the exercise of the privileges undertaken to be conferred by it. In this connection, see 1 Jones on Mortgages, § 884.

PAYTON v. FORD.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 16, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INJUNCTION AUTHORIZED.

The allegations of the petition and the evidence submitted in support of the same authorized the grant of an interlocutory injunction against the plaintiff in error.

2. INJUNCTION (§§ 157, 158*)—GRANT OF INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION — EFFECT OF GRANTING PERMANENT INJUNCTION ON APPLICATION FOR INTERLOCUTORY WRIT.

Upon the hearing of an application for an interlocutory injunction, if the prayer be granted, it operates to grant the injunction until the final hearing. While it is improper to grant a permanent injunction at such a hearing, the error in granting such an injunction will not require a reversal, but only a direction that the order be so modified as to render the injunction granted interlocutory, instead of permanent. COVINGTON v. SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 15, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MOTION TO DISMISS OVERRULED.

The objection to the affidavits in forma pauperis having been removed by the payment of costs, under permission of this court, and, upon a suggestion of a diminution of the record, a certified transcript sent to this court by the clerk of the trial court showing an acknowledgment of service upon the motion for a new trial, the motion to dismiss the writ of error is overruled.

2. DIRECTED VERDICT UNAUTHORIZED.

Upon a careful consideration of the evidence in the case, it did not authorize the direction of a verdict in favor of the defendant.

(a) In the case of Atlantic & Birmingham Railway Co. v. Reynolds, 117 Ga. 47, 43 S. E. 456, the decision made was in reference to a charge of the court in regard to the rule of diligence incumbent upon a master who has purchased a permanent structure and continues to use it. It did not involve the direction of a verdict, and the evidence in the present case in regard to the construction of the telephone line in question presented some features for consideration by the jury which were not present in that case.

GLENNVILLE INV. CO. v. GRACE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 15, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LOTTERIES (§ 3*)—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 55*)—PROMISE TO PAY PRIZE IN LOTTERY ENTERPRISE — TRANSACTION CONSTITUTING LOTTERY.

Where an owner of land divided it into a considerable number of lots, varying widely in value, and made contracts purporting to sell a certain number of lots to various parties, without reference to what lots were to be sold to any particular person, this being left for determination later, and after a certain number of "applications" had been sold, at an appointed time the names of purchasers were by a committee of such purchasers put into one box and the numbers of the lots placed in another, under rules prescribed by and at the direction of the seller, and names and numbers were drawn, the agreement being that the lots drawn in connection with the name of a purchaser should be conveyed to him by the seller, this was a lottery scheme, and illegal; and such an agreement was not enforceable by an equitable proceeding for specific performance, brought by one who drew certain lots.

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by B. H. Grace against the Glennville Investment Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

B. H. Grace brought his equitable petition against the Glennville Investment Company, alleging as follows: On June 15, 1907, plaintiff bought from the defendant 10 lots of land in the city of Glennville, Ga., as evidenced by a written contract containing the following terms: "This is to certify that the Glennville Investment Company has received of B. H. Grace, county Toombs, state Ga., one hundred dollars, the first installment deposit on application of ten lots, stores, dwellings, or other buildings in Glennville, Tattnall county, Ga. The deferred payment on same to be paid to the Glennville Bank either by registered letter, post office money order, express money order, or Savannah, Atlanta, or New York exchange, as follows: $900.00 six months after this date. Said Glennville Bank will give receipts for all deferred payments by crediting the accepted drafts drawn on the applicant by this company; and when all deferred payments are made, said bank will deliver draft as paid in full, entitling applicant to warranty deed to ten lots, stores, dwellings, or other buildings on the day of opening without further expense. The contract on the back hereof is to constitute a part of this receipt. Salesman #1 and name J. A. Wheeler. #10 lots." On back of contract: "It is hereby mutually agreed between Glennville Investment Company, the undersigned, and the other holders in this enterprise, as follows: First. You will have no taxes to pay until after 1907. Second. Each applicant holder certificate on final payment shall be entitled to a warranty deed to the lot or lots or parcels of land of which he may be the purchaser, immediately after the opening. Third. Where ten applications are sold in one town, the applicant must select one man to attend the opening, and all purchasers must be represented either in person or by proxy. Fourth. The opening and distribution of these lots and land will be conducted on a plan entirely in keeping with the law, and fair to all, and shall be agreed upon by a majority of the purchasers present. The company will furnish warranty deeds for them to distribute, divide, or dispose of their lots and lands in common in any lawful manner they may elect. Each application paid for in full will represent one unit interest in the whole number of lots, stores, dwellings, or other property until the distribution and division. Should any applicant make first deposit and fail or refuse to make final settlements, he will forfeit former deposits after ten days' grace, without notice, and the money paid by him shall be retained by the company as liquidated damages, time being of the essence of the within instrument in respect to said payments, and such payments shall be considered as payments for the option of buying said property, and therefore forfeited. Sixth. The Glennville Investment Company will not be responsible for any representation made by any salesman other [than] that found in their printed literature. Seventh. You will not be required to build on lots. Eighth. No application will be sold to negroes. No negroes now own any land in the corporate limits of Glennville. Ninth. Should any applicant die after having purchased four or less applications in this enterprise, and having paid 50% or more of his deferred payments, then this company will denote the remaining part of his indebtedness to his family or legal representatives. Tenth. The opening day will not be later than Feb. 1, 1908, but will be as much sooner as it is possible to make it." Signed by the company and the applicant.

The plaintiff paid the sum of $100, and agreed to pay $900 more in six months. The defendant drew a draft on him for that amount, which he accepted. The defendant deposited the draft in the Toombs County Bank, and drew upon it the full face value less discount. At the maturity of the draft, by reason of a panic, he was unable to meet it, and arranged with the bank to "carry him over for a short time." On February 4, 1908, he started to the town where the bank was located, in order to take up the draft, according to an arrangement which he had made with one of the directors of the bank for that purpose. On his way he learned that on that morning the defendant had paid the draft to the bank and taken possession of it. On December 12, 1907, he had requested the defendant to meet the draft for him, and the latter refused to do so. He then "arranged said draft with the said bank as above set out." On the day the draft fell due he inquired at the Glennville Bank, the place designated for payment, for the draft. It was not there, and had not been since it was sold to the Toombs County Bank. "Your petitioner shows that the drawing of the lots of land under and by virtue of said contract, as shown by Exhibit A, was not to be later than February 1, 1908, for the opening day. Your petitioner shows that on the 3d day of February, 1908, the proper committee met and considered all applications for drawings as provided by said contracts and rules of the said company, your petitioner holding and owning said contract, marked Exhibit A. * * * Your petitioner shows that the said committee of five, at the direction of the proper officer of the said defendant, placed the name of your petitioner in the box for drawing his said ten lots so purchased and paid for. Your petitioner shows that he drew by said arrangement the following lots of land, to wit: [Naming by number and block eight lots.] Your petitioner shows that he drew the above-named eight lots at said drawing; that he endeavored to ascertain the other two lots he drew, and the said defendant refused to tell him the number of the other two lots he so drew. Your petitioner shows that he was eligible to draw lots until he drew lot No. 14 in block 104, on which lot of land there is located a first-class brick store worth, together with the said land, the sum of $3,000; and after the drawing was completed, and it cropped out that your petitioner had good luck [and] incidentally ascertained the number of the above lot he so drew, the said defendant refused to tell the number of the other two lots, and also declared that your petitioner had no right to the lots he had drawn. * * * Your petitioner shows that one other lot he drew is now valuable, in that he is to receive in cash $250, or buildings erected thereon to that value. But your petitioner does not know which lot it is. Your petitioner further shows that he verily believes that the other two lots, the numbers not known to your petitioner, are valuable indeed, their value and location not known to your petitioner." On the day following the drawing the defendant employed a lawyer, and caused him to hasten to the town where the bank which held the draft was located, and pay it off. This attorney arrived at the bank about 2½ hours before the plaintiff did. On February 8, 1908, the plaintiff's attorney tendered to the attorney of the defendant the sum of $911.20, and also tendered to the secretary and treasurer of the defendant company the same amount to pay the draft which the defendant had caused to be taken up. Both tenders were refused. The tender is continuous. The plaintiff prayed "that said defendant be required to disclose to your petitioner the numbers of the other two lots of land so drawn by your petitioner, and not known to your petitioner, which lots of land he is entitled to, and their location"; that the defendant be required to convey to plaintiff all the lots of land drawn by him (giving certain numbers), and also the other two lots at present not known to him; that defendant be required to pay to plaintiff reasonable rent for the lots, including improvements thereon, "with interest on the said $250 to improve one of the said lots of land; also whatever the amount of rent may be due on the two lots of land not known to your petitioner"; that the defendant be enjoined from selling or disposing of the lots, and for process. The plaintiff amended his petition by striking out from one of the paragraphs, which gave the numbers of the lots drawn by him, all of the numbers except that of one lot, described as having a brick store located upon it. The amendment then proceeded as follows: "Plaintiff further amends his petition so as to ask specific performance from the defendant as to lot 14 in block 104, being the brick store and lot; and plaintiff strikes from his petition all reference to all other lots mentioned in said petition. Plaintiff so amends his petition without prejudice as to his rights and title to said lots so stricken." The defendant demurred to the petition. The demurrer was overruled, and this was assigned as error.

Kelley & Smith and E. C. Collins, for plaintiff in error. Jas. K. Hines and W. T. Burkhalter, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The arrangement sought to be enforced was plainly a lottery scheme. The seller did not convey or contract to convey any particular lots or land to any certain purchasers. It received from proposed purchasers arbitrarily fixed amounts, without reference to the relative value of the lots into which it had divided its property. These varied very much in value. Whether a purchaser received lots of greater or less value for his money was not determined by contract but by chance. A drawing was had, by which names were put in one box and numbers in another, and upon the hazard of drawing out names and numbers depended the determination of what lots a proposed purchaser should get for his money. The drawing was conducted by a committee of the proposed purchasers under rules and regulations of the proposed seller. The plaintiff in the present case appears to have drawn the capital prize. He alleged that under his contract he was to pay $1,000, for which he was to receive 10 lots, and that one of them drawn by him was of the value of $3,000, while others were of considerable, though less, value. The mere use in the written contract of such euphonic expressions as that the "opening and distribution of these lots and land will be conducted on a plan entirely in keeping with the law, and fair to all, and shall be agreed upon by a majority of the purchasers present," will not serve to conceal the real illegality of the scheme. The seller did not sell a tract of land to tenants in common and leave them to divide it among themselves. It was to participate in the "opening," and did so. It was only to convey such lots as were drawn. The "opening" was to take place when 10 applications were sold in one town. Disregarding any mere device of words, what was actually contracted for by each so-called purchaser was evidently a right to have a certain number of lots conveyed to him by the seller, to be determined by chance; the various lots being widely different in value. A lucky draw would result in obtaining valuable lots for the amount paid by the purchaser. An unlucky draw would give him lots of much less value for his payments. The plaintiff alleges that "after the drawing was completed, and it cropped out that your petitioner had good luck," the defendant refused to convey to him the lots drawn on his behalf; that he was absent at the time the drawing took place, and the defendant would not even disclose to him what lots were drawn in his favor, but that he had ascertained several of them, one of them being a store lot valued at $3,000.

In his original petition he prayed discovery in order to find some of the lots he claimed to be entitled to, and also specific performance in regard to them. By amendment he confined his prayer for specific performance to the particular lot mentioned. The plaintiff's own allegations show how far this was from a bona fide sale of the land to him. Such schemes as this are illegal and will not be enforced. A court of equity will not decree specific performance of a promise to pay a capital prize in a lottery or gift enterprise. Pen. Code 1895, § 406; Whitley v. McConnell, 133 Ga. 738, 66 S. E. 933; Lynch v. Rosenthal, 144 Ind. 86, 42 N. E. 1103, 31 L. R. A. 835, 55 Am. St. Rep. 168; *Guenther v. JONES et al. v. E. B. EZELL & CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 556*)—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER—RIGHTS OF MINORITY STOCKHOLDERS.

Where creditors of an insolvent corporation file a petition praying the appointment of a receiver and a sale of the corporate assets, and that from the proceeds of the sale the debts of the corporation be paid, and the balance, if any, distributed among the stockholders, and the corporation answers, admitting its insolvency and the indebtedness of the complaining creditors as alleged, and a receiver is appointed, minority stockholders, who allege that the claims of the principal creditors are based on ultra vires acts of the corporation and its officers, in fraud of the stockholders' rights, and that they have been unable to obtain relief from the corporation, may intervene for the purpose of contesting the claims of such creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2224; Dec. Dig. § 556.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 557*)—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER—INTERVENTION OF MINORITY STOCKHOLDERS—DUTY TO PLEAD.

As the stockholder's right to intervene in suits against a corporation brought by its creditors springs from the refusal of the corporation to assert a meritorious defense which the corporation has to the action, such defense must be pleaded with the same particularity as if made by the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 557.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 477*)—MORTGAGES.

A mortgage deed, reciting that it was executed by virtue of the charter of the corporation, as well as under a resolution of the stockholders, copied in the mortgage, authorizing the board of directors, through its president and secretary, to issue, sell, or hypothecate first mortgage bonds on the property and franchises of the corporation, for a certain amount, in certain denominations, and maturing at stated intervals, and purporting to be the mortgage of the corporation, and signed: "B. W. H. [L. S.], President. E. B. E. [L. S.], Secretary"—though no corporate seal be impressed thereon, is nevertheless prima facie the mortgage of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1857–1869; Dec. Dig. § 477.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 557*)—ULTRA VIRES ACTS—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS.

Allegations by intervening stockholders in a creditors' petition against the corporation that the officers of the corporation were without authority to execute a mortgage upon which the corporate seal is not impressed, but which recites that it is executed under authority of a resolution of the stockholders, and allegations that neither the corporation nor its officers had authority to create the indebtedness of complaining creditors, are sufficient, as against a general demurrer, to raise the issue that such acts are ultra vires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 557.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 8*)—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS—CONCLUSIONS.

General and loose allegations, consisting merely of the statement of conclusions, without averring the facts upon which the conclusions are based, are too indefinite to raise an issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

Error from Superior Court, Putnam County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Proceedings for the appointment of a receiver for the Middle Georgia Cotton Mills, in which S. E. Jones and others, minority stockholders, intervene, and E. B. Ezell & Co. and others, petitioning creditors, demur to the intervention. The intervention was dismissed, and interveners bring error. Reversed.

A. E. Wilson, Robt. McMillan, and Robt. B. Blackburn, for plaintiffs in error. W. B. Wingfield and W. F. Jenkins & Son, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. Certain creditors of the Middle Georgia Cotton Mills filed a petition in the nature of an insolvency proceeding against that corporation, praying the appointment of a receiver, a sale of its assets, and a distribution of the proceeds. It was alleged that the corporation was insolvent; that it had shut down its factory, and was unable further to operate, for lack of finances; that the manufacturing plant was rapidly deteriorating in value; that petitioning creditors represented substantially nine-tenths of its liabilities, nearly half of which were past due; and that the corporation had failed to pay the past-due indebtedness on demand. The corporation in its answer admitted its insolvency and its indebtedness to the petitioning creditors. A receiver was appointed. Certain minority stockholders filed an intervention, to which the petitioning creditors interposed demurrers, general and special. The court dismissed the intervention on general demurrer, without passing upon the various special demurrers, and the interveners except to this judgment.

One of the petitioning creditors was the trustee for the first mortgage bondholders, in whose behalf it was alleged that the corporation had issued 80 bonds, in denominations of $500, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, on January 1st and July 1st, and secured them by a mortgage on all of the property, real and personal, of the corporation, executed to the trustee on August 1, 1901. A copy of the mortgage was attached, and it recites that at a meeting of the stockholders of the Middle Georgia Cotton Mills, held on July 10, 1901, the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, that the board of directors, through its president and secretary, be and they are hereby authorized to issue and sell or hypothecate, from time to time, first mortgage bonds on the property and franchises of the Middle Georgia Cotton Mills, for a sum not exceeding the sum of $40,000, to bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, and in amount of $500 each, and payable as herein set forth, viz.: $5,000 payable July 1, 1906; $10,000 payable July 1, 1911; $15,000 payable July 1, 1916; and $10,000 payable July 1, 1921." It was further recited in the mortgage that under this resolution the directors of the corporation had issued bonds as therein provided, and, in order to secure their payment according to their tenor and effect, B. W. Hunt and E. B. Ezell, secretary of the said Middle Georgia Cotton Mills, by virtue of the authority contained in the charter of the corporation, as well as the authority of this resolution, created in favor of the trustee a mortgage lien upon all the property, both real and personal, of the corporation, specifically described. The mortgage concluded with the clause: "In testimony whereof, we hereby set our hand and the seal of the corporation, this 1st day of August, 1901. Benl. W. Hunt [L. S.], President. E. B. Ezell [L. S.], Secretary." It purports to have been signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of two witnesses, one of whom was a magistrate. It was further alleged that the trustee had actually sold and delivered 61 of the bonds, amounting to $30,500, to certain named persons, and that the remaining 19 bonds, of the face value of $9,500, were held as collateral security by five of the complaining creditors. All of the interest due on the bonds to January 1, 1903, except $330, had been paid. It was further alleged that others of the complaining creditors, whose debts were evidenced by notes, were secured by hypothecation of the 19 unsold bonds, that one of the creditors was secured by a bill of sale to some of the manufactured product of the corporation, and still another creditor was secured by the personal indorsement of the president and secretary of the corporation. It was also set out in the petition that the corporation had outstanding preferred stock to the extent of $24,000, by the terms of which a holder had no voting power as a shareholder, but was entitled, upon final dissolution of the corporation, to be paid, after the payment of the creditors, in preference to the common stockholders, and that the corporation had an outstanding issue of common stock to the extent of $65,329.56.

In their intervention the stockholders alleged that they were the owners of 76 shares of the common stock and 6 shares of the preferred stock, each of the par value of $100; that prior to the filing of the creditors' bill they had filed suit against the corporation, praying for the appointment of a receiver and the repudiation of the bonds and a part of the stock, and for the winding up of the business of the corporation and a distribution of its assets, based upon allegations of want of authority on the part of the officers to issue the bonds and stock; that they had complained to the proper officers of the corporation, prior to filing their intervention, of the illegalities in the issuance of the bonds and stock as set up in their intervention, and requested them to take proper steps for the protection of their interests as stockholders; that the corporation had wholly failed to do this, and in its answer had admitted substantially all of the allegations of the complaining creditors, and had refused to set up any defense having for its purpose the cancellation of the bonds and the mortgage to secure same, and all of the common stock in excess of the original issue of $40,000; that "Exhibit A, attached to said petition, which plaintiffs term a 'mortgage,' is not in fact a mortgage, is barred by the statute of limitations, it has no consideration, no authority was given the officers to execute the same, and said paper, whatever it may be, is simply the individual undertaking of B. W. Hunt and E. B. Ezell, and is not binding on said defendant, nor its legal stockholders; * * * that neither said defendant nor its officers have any authority to create the indebtedness specified in the petition, nor to execute said notes, nor to give the securities and collateral therein set out."

Inasmuch as the court did not pass upon the various special demurrers to this and other allegations in the intervention, the only point for determination is whether they are sufficient to withstand a general demurrer. The stockholder's right to intervene in suits against a corporation brought by its creditors springs from the refusal of the corporation to assert a meritorious defense which the corporation has to the action, and such defense must be pleaded with the same particularity as if made by the corporation. Helliwell on Stocks and Stockholders, § 417; Cornell v. Sims, 111 Ga. 828, 86 S. E. 627. It is contended that, if the corporation should undertake to defend against the trustee's suit to recover on the mortgage, it would be necessary for the corporation to allege in its pleadings that it had not received the proceeds of the bonds secured by the mortgage, or that the same had not been applied to legitimate corporate uses. We do not think it incumbent upon the corporation, in making its defense of lack of authority of its officers to execute the contract, to plead that the corporation had received no benefit from the contract. A recovery is not sought upon the original consideration, but upon the form of the contract; and the corporation may plead that its officers did not have authority to execute the contract. We are discussing a question of pleading, and not the effect of evidence showing that the proceeds of the contract was received by the corporation and applied to legitimate corporate use. If on the trial of the case it should appear that the officers were without authority to execute the various contracts, but did in fact execute them, and the fruits thereof were applied to proper corporate use, the corporation will still be liable, notwithstanding its officers may have been without specific authority to execute the particular form of contract. The corporation cannot retain the property or money of the creditor, and successfully defend because it was obtained by an ultra vires act of its officers. Towers Excelsior Co. v. Inman, 96 Ga. 506, 23 S. E. 418. A plea by the corporation that the act is ultra vires is one thing. Evidence which holds the corporation responsible for the consideration of the contract in spite of its ultra vires character is quite a different matter. The stockholder, in the absence of specific acts of fraud and collusion between the corporation and the creditor, has no greater right than the corporation itself in this regard.

We will now inquire if the mortgage is in such form as to show it prima facie to be the act of the corporation. It shows upon its face that the agents of the corporation were acting in its behalf, and not for their personal benefit. It is stated that the corporate seal is to be affixed; yet, so far as the record discloses, the original mortgage was never impressed with the corporate seal. If the corporate seal had been impressed, the law would have raised a presumption that it was within the power of the agents of the corporation to execute the mortgage, and it would be clearly a corporate act. Nevertheless, if agents of the corporation have authority to execute a mortgage and affix thereto anything which the law recognizes as a seal, when affixed by an actual person, it will presumptively be a good execution by the corporation. Inasmuch as the mortgage deed recited that it was executed by virtue of the charter of the corporation, as well as by resolution of its stockholders authorizing its board of directors, through its president and secretary, to issue, sell, and hypothecate first mortgage bonds on the property and franchises of the corporation for a certain amount and in certain denominations, and maturing at stated intervals, and purporting to be the mortgage of the corporation, and signed by "B. W. H. [L. S.], President," and "E. B. E. [L. S.], Secretary," though there be no impression of the corporate seal, nevertheless it is presumptively the mortgage of the corporation. Johnston v. Crawley, 25 Ga. 316, 71 Am. Dec. 173. It being executed under seal, it is not barred on its face by the statute of limitations, and its expressed consideration is for the securing of the bonds issued by the authority of the stockholders themselves.

Interveners allege that no authority was given the officers to execute the mortgage and create the indebtedness. As already stated, we are not called upon to pass upon the sufficiency of this allegation, as against appropriate special demurrers—as to whether the act of the officers in executing the bonds and mortgages was ultra vires the corporation or ultra vires the officers, or whether it was a denial that the officers had kept within the limitations of their power under the resolution passed by the stockholders in the execution of the instrument complained of. Where the officers' authority to execute a mortgage or note not impressed with a corporate seal is contested, we think that a general denial of authority is sufficient to form an issue, in the absence of a special demurrer calling for particularity in specification as to such lack of authority.

Interveners undertake to contest the claims of the creditors by general allegations asking proof of their claims, without alleging any specific matter tending to deny that they are the debts of the corporation. These allegations go for naught, because, as we have pointed out, where minority stockholders undertake to set up a defense which the corporation refuses to make, they must allege the facts constituting the defense, in order that the courts may determine whether such defense is a meritorious one, or one which the officers of the corporation, having due regard to the interest of the complaining stockholders, were bound to make.

It is also alleged in the intervention, in general terms, that all the common stock issued in excess of $40,000 was null and void. In the absence of any express provision or agreement to the contrary, persons who have become stockholders in a corporation by subscribing or purchasing shares have a right to presume that other stockholders have come in on the same terms; and if the corporation has issued stock in violation of its charter or the law, or in violation of the rights of its stockholders, a dissentient stockholder may maintain an independent action in order to cancel the illegal stock. 2 Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, § 397. The dissentient stockholder in an insolvency proceeding instituted by creditors, having for its purpose to sell the entire assets of the corporation for distribution, may likewise intervene in that proceeding, for the purpose of objecting to the holders of illegally issued stock participating in the corporation's surplus, if any, after the payment of the corporation debts. However, in his intervention the dissentient stockholder must allege the facts relied on to establish the illegality of the stock, and a general allegation that all stock issued over a certain amount is null and void is but the statement of a legal conclusion, and is insufficient, even against a general demurrer. General allegations of this sort are analogous to a general charge of fraud, without stating any specific fact upon which the charge is based, which has always been held too loose and indefinite to withstand a general demurrer. Orr v. Brown, 5 Ga. 400.

It is also alleged in the intervention that the president and treasurer have neglected to collect a part of the amount subscribed for the original issue of stock, which amount could have been collected. Manifestly an allegation so general as this presents no issue.

Interveners further "deny the authority of the defendant or its officers to execute said notes and to give any security, and thereby obtain a preference and advantage to themselves, they being also officers and directors of said defendant." This complaint is made of the indebtedness held by E. B. Ezell and B. W. Hunt, the Middle Georgia Bank, of which they are both directors, and the firm of Ezell & Co., which is a partnership composed of these individuals. It is true that officers of a corporation are trustees, and a sound public policy forbids the assignment to them of any of the corporate assets while the corporation is insolvent, with a view to prefer them as creditors for antecedent debts. Atlas Tack Co. v. Macon Hardware Co., 101 Ga. 391, 29 S. E. 27. It does not appear from the record whether the security claimed by these creditors was given at the time of the creation of the debt, or was assigned to secure an existing debt, with the intent of giving them preference as creditors.

We have presented in our discussion of the pleadings substantially all of the contentions made by the interveners from the standpoint of their sufficiency as against a general demurrer; and the judgment of the court below is reversed, because the allegations respecting the authority of the officers of the corporation to contract certain debts and secure the same by mortgage and other collateral security were sufficient to withstand a general demurrer.

1. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 33*)—SAWMILL LIEN—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT BY DEFENDANT.
In the foreclosure of a sawmill lien, a counter affidavit by the defendant, which states that he owes the plaintiff no "sum whatever for which plaintiff has a lien," is, especially in the absence of special demurrer, adequate to raise the issue that the items claimed to have been furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant do not fall within the class as to which the law allows a lien.

Error from City Court of Sylvester; J. B. Williamson, Judge.

Action by D. A. Slappey against J. B. Charles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. J. Forehand, for plaintiff in error.
Claude Payton and C. E. Hay, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Charles foreclosed an alleged lien for supplies furnished to Slappey's sawmill. Attached to the affidavit of foreclosure is an account showing total charges of $935.77 and total credits of $534.51, leaving a balance due of $401.26. The defendant filed a counter affidavit on the ground that he was "not indebted to the plaintiff in the sum claimed, nor in any sum whatever for which the plaintiff has a lien." Some point is made as to the sufficiency of this affidavit as a basis for the defendant's contesting the existence of the lien. The defendant in error treats it as merely challenging the amount due. We construe it as asserting, first, that Slappey did not owe Charles as much as the latter claims, and, further, that while he may owe him some amount, on open account or otherwise, he does not owe him any sum whatever for which the law gives a lien; and this, we think, put the existence of the lien in issue, and placed upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that the items enumerated on his account fell within the class of articles for which the law allows a lien.

2. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount claimed. The account confessedly included the price of standing timber, money, and household supplies for the family of the mill owner. The plaintiff made no effort to show what part of the account consisted of supplies furnished to the sawmill and what part fell within the classes just mentioned. There is no law allowing a sawmill lien for standing timber, for money, or for family supplies. Balkcom v. Empire Lumber Co., 91 Ga. 651, 17 S. E. 1020, 44 Am. St. Rep. 58; Giles v. Gano, 102 Ga. 593, 27 S. E. 730; Dart v. Mayhew, 60 Ga. 104; Loud v. Pritchett, 104 Ga. 649 (3), 30 S. E. 870; Ray v. Schmidt & Co., 66 S. E. 1035. The jury had no legitimate basis for calculation wherefrom they might have found any particular sum in the plaintiff's favor. From an examination of the account itself it is easy to see that the plaintiff was not entitled to a lien for the full amount. The justice of the defendant's paying the account, the moral obligation resting upon him to pay an honest debt, seems to have overpersuaded the jury; and if this were a suit on account, instead of a lien foreclosure, we would take great pleasure in sustaining their verdict, based, as it seems to be, on so commendable a sentiment. However, the plaintiff was not entitled to the lien he claimed. He may still sue on his open account in a common-law action.

3. The defendant in error in his brief makes some point as to the fact that in the brief of evidence there is a statement that the account "thereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,'" was introduced in evidence, and that no account or exhibit was in fact attached. He argued that the brief of evidence is, therefore, not to be considered at all. It is plain, however, that the account referred to is the account sued on, and, as it is attached to the affidavit of foreclosure in the record, it would have been improper to have set it out again in the brief of evidence—either in the body of the brief or in an exhibit.

William J. Pugh was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Herbert L. Grice, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was convicted at the August term, 1910, of Pulaski superior court. A motion for a new trial was duly filed, and was set to be heard on October 2d, in vacation. On that date the movant asked for a continuance until October 8th. The continuance was granted, and noted on the docket, but no written order was taken. On October 8th the movant applied for and obtained a written order continuing the motion until October 18th. On October 18th the movant having failed to appear and prosecute the motion, it was dismissed.

The only point made was that, as no written order of continuance was taken on October 2d, the case went over to the next regular session, and that the subsequent orders were coram non judice. Even if this point were otherwise valid, in the light of the movant's own participation in procuring the orders, still it is not well taken, for the very sufficient reason that under Civ. Code 1896, §§ 4323, 4324, the judges of the superior and city courts have the power to hear and determine motions for new trial in vacation, without any order having been passed in term to that effect, provided the party or his counsel has 10 days' notice of the time and place of the hearing.

HOMICIDE (§ 257*)—EVIDENCE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 547, 548; Dec. Dig. § 257.*]

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Tom Baynes was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Eugene M. Baynes, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Tom Baynes was indicted jointly with his brother, Bob Baynes, for the crime of murder, and on a separate trial was convicted of an assault with intent to murder. He made a motion for a new trial, based on the general grounds and on several special grounds contained in the amended motion. The trial judge overruled the motion, and he excepted.

The evidence makes substantially the following case: Bob Baynes and one Ned Dudley were engaged in a fight with the deceased, Taylor Branch. The evidence does not disclose the origin of the difficulty; but it appears that the deceased was endeavoring to shoot Ned Dudley, and Ned Dudley shot him with a pistol, and Bob Baynes hit the deceased over the head with a scantling. Just before the deceased was shot by Dudley and hit over the head by Bob Baynes he was cursing and threatening to shoot. The sister of the defendant was standing near Ned Dudley, and cried out, "Don't shoot! Don't shoot!" Following immediately this exclamation, the defendant grabbed a single-barrel shotgun and shot the deceased in the back. This was the first and only time the defendant participated in the difficulty, and his defense was that he shot because he believed the deceased was about to shoot his sister, and he shot to prevent a felony about to be perpetrated by the deceased upon her. The physician who made the autopsy testified that neither one of the gunshot wounds were necessarily fatal, but the probability was that the fatal wound was the one on the head caused by the blow from the scantling in the hands of Bob Baynes. The learned trial judge did not present to the jury at all the theory of joint action on the part of the defendant, his brother, and Ned Dudley, but treated the act of the defendant as independent of the acts of the others and having no connection therewith. He did present to the jury very clearly, fully, and accurately the theory of the defense relied upon by the defendant, that he shot in order to protect his sister from one who was manifestly endeavoring to kill or to commit a serious personal injury upon her.

The jury did not accept this view, and found the defendant guilty of assault with intent to murder, on the theory that he shot at the deceased with the specific intent to kill him, with a deadly weapon and without justification; but as the wound was not necessarily fatal, and he was actually killed by the blow from the scantling in the hands of Bob Baynes, he was only guilty of assault with intent to murder. It was the sole province of the jury to solve any uncertainty in the facts, and to accept as the truth any reasonable theory deducible therefrom. Exercising their right, they refused to believe the defendant's statement, but believed that he shot the deceased without mitigation or justification, using a deadly weapon in a manner likely to cause death. They could infer from these facts the specific intent to kill. While not entirely satisfied with the correctness of this conclusion, it is supported by evidence, and reasonable inferences from the evidence, and we cannot interfere.

The special assignments of error are without merit.

Judgment affirmed.

QUEEN INS. CO. OF AMERICA v. HARTWELL ICE & LAUNDRY CO.
(No. 2,484.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE (§§ 132, 506*)—TEMPORARY CONTRACT—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

A. made a verbal application to a local agent of an insurance company for a policy of insurance on certain described property, then offering to pay the premium to the agent. The agent stated that he could not at that time issue the regular standard policy of the company, nor accept the tender of the premium, because he did not know the rate on that class of property. The agent agreed, however, to enter upon the books of the company a written memorandum in the nature of a "binder," which he stated would be effective as a contract of insurance until the regular policy was issued by the company, and that, on receipt of this regular policy, A. could pay the premium. This was satisfactory to A., and the agent, in compliance with his agreement, did write, sign, and place in the book of policies issued by the company at his agency a statement or "binder," containing all the essential elements of a contract of insurance between A. and the company, and made a written report to the company of this memorandum or "binder," and of his action relating to the same, all of which was affirmed and ratified by the company. Held: (a) A complete temporary contract of insurance existed between A. and the insurance company during the period set out in the memorandum or binder. (b) For a loss which occurred during the existence of the temporary contract, and before the rate of premium had been fixed on the property covered thereby, A. could recover the amount stipulated as indemnity in the binder, less the rate of premium fixed by the company subsequently to the loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 210, 1294; Dec. Dig. §§ 132, 508.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 371*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—TEMPORARY CONTRACT—ACTION—QUESTIONS OF FACT—WAIVER OF BREACH OF POLICY.

The property described in the memorandum or binder was insured during the term specified therein upon the terms and conditions of the regular standard policy of the company, and a breach of any of these terms and conditions that would render void the regular policy would also make void the temporary contract, and any waiver of such breaches would apply to the latter. Whether there was a waiver by the insurance company of breaches of the terms of the policy relating to other concurrent insurance, as to incumbrance on the property, and proofs of loss, and what would be a reasonable time within which to submit proofs of loss, were issues of fact for the jury, under the evidence; and where the law pertinent to the issues has been fully and correctly charged, as in this case, this court cannot, as to them, interfere with a verdict supported by any evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 371; Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

Error from City Court of Hartwell; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by the Hartwell Ice & Laundry Company against the Queen Insurance Company of America. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

On August 27, 1908, Linder, as president of the Hartwell Ice & Laundry Company, made a verbal application to Matheson, agent of the Queen Insurance Company, located at Hartwell, for a policy of insurance of $2,000 on the plant and machinery of the company. Matheson then informed Linder that he could not at that time issue a regular policy, because he did not know the proper rate of premium, but that he would make a memorandum on the books of the insurance company kept by him of a "binder," and that the insurance would go into effect from that date. Linder then offered to pay the premium, but Matheson refused to accept it, stating that he did not know the rate, but that immediately upon receipt of the rate he would notify him when the regular standard policy would be issued. In pursuance of his agreement and promise, Matheson on the same day made the following pencil memorandum on a sheet of paper: "Queen, $2,000, on Hartwell Ice Plant Machinery from August 27th, 1908, to August 27th, 1909. R. E. Matheson, agent. Policy to be issued when new rate is received." The sheet on which this memorandum was written was put in the book of the Queen Insurance Company's policies kept by Matheson as agent. Subsequently Matheson pinned this sheet on page 95 of this book, numbering it 123, in a place in the book reserved for the regular standard policy when issued, the regular policy to be numbered 123. On the day when the "binder" was made and put in his book of the Queen Insurance Company's policies, he wrote to the manager of the insurance company in Atlanta, Ga., as follows: "I have accepted a $2,000 risk on the Hartwell Ice Plant, and will send daily report as soon as rate is fixed on same, which I think will be within a few days." Matheson testified that it was his custom as agent of the Queen Insurance Company, where applications were made to him for policies of insurance, to make memoranda similar to that made in the present case, and that these memoranda or "slips" were known among insurance companies as "binders"; that he did not know what the rate on this policy was until after the fire. The standard policy of the company was not issued, and on September 10th the property covered by the alleged contract was entirely consumed by fire. On September 11th Linder notified the manager of the company in Atlanta of the loss, and on the same day Matheson wired the manager as follows: "Hartwell Ice Plant totally destroyed by fire. $2,000 loss for the Queen." On the same day, in reply, the assistant manager of the company wrote to Matheson: "We have your telegram advising of total loss of $2,000 under binder issued August 27th on this risk. I now beg to confirm our conversation over the phone this morning requesting you to reserve policy 121 to be issued covering this risk on arrival of our special agent or adjuster." In reply, on the next day, Matheson wrote to the assistant manager: "Your letter acknowledging receipt of my telegram in regard to the loss by fire of Hartwell Ice Plant received. You request me to reserve policy number 121 for the above, but I issued this number to Liquid Carbonate Company; so have reserved number 122 instead. I inclose daily report of same." The daily report referred to was on the regular form used by the agents of the company; the following being the material parts: "Queen Insurance Company of America: Name of the insured, Hartwell Ice & Laundry Company. Amount of insurance, $2,000. Present rate, 5%, premium, $100. Commencement of risk, August 27th, 1908; term, 1 year. Expiration of risk, August 27th, 1909. [Signed] Hartwell Georgia Agency." On September 18th Matheson again wrote to the manager in Atlanta: "I wrote you that I had reserved number 122 for the Hartwell Ice Company, but I unfortunately issued this to another party. So have reserved number 123 for the Hartwell Company." Matheson represented the Queen Insurance Company at Hartwell, Ga., under this commission: "Power to receive proposals for insurance against loss and damage by fire at Hartwell, Georgia, and vicinity, to fix rates of premiums, to receive moneys, counter-sign, issue, renew, and consent to transfer of policies of insurance signed by the manager at Atlanta, Georgia, of the Queen Insurance Company of America, subject to the rules and regulations of the said company, and to such instructions as might from time to time be given by said manager, which authority may be revoked at any time." It was admitted that at the time when the application for insurance was made by Linder to Matheson, and when the property was destroyed by fire, there was other insurance of $1,000 on the property, and that there was an outstanding mortgage of $500 on the property. Linder testified that he specifically informed Matheson of the existence of the other insurance and of the existence of the mortgage, when he made the application for the policy. Matheson testified that, when he wrote the pencil memorandum or "binder" and "slipped it in the book of the Queen Insurance Company," he knew nothing of the existence of the other insurance or the mortgage; that Linder did not disclose their existence to him when he made the application for the insurance, and did not tell him of their existence until several days after he made the application, and after the alleged binding memoranda had been made by him. The regular standard form of policy which was to be issued by the company contains a condition that the policy will be void if there is other concurrent insurance without the written consent of the company, or if the insured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property insured, or if there is any outstanding incumbrance on the property. It is also admitted that no proofs of loss were ever submitted to the company, as required by the standard policy. The plaintiff claimed that this condition of the policy had been waived by an unconditional and absolute denial of liability by the company and a refusal to pay the loss. This denial was contained in a letter to the plaintiff, written by King & Spalding, attorneys for the company, dated March 6, 1908. The foregoing is a statement of all the material and pertinent evidence illustrative of the issues in the case.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

Plaintiff based its suit on the written memorandum and binder, alleging that they constituted a valid contract of insurance. Defendant denied the existence of a valid contract of insurance, and contended that, even if the evidence proved a binding contract, it had been breached by the plaintiff, because of the concealment of the fact of other concurrent insurance and the incumbrance on the property, and because of a failure to submit due proof of loss. Plaintiff in reply set up a waiver of all these conditions and terms of the policy. The trial judge construed the writings as constituting a valid contract of insurance, and submitted to the jury the issues made by the evidence as to the alleged waivers by the defendant of the admitted breaches of the terms of the contract above mentioned. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,900, the amount of the contract, less $100 as premium, and the defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled. The contentions of the parties indicated by the above statement will be more specifically set out and discussed in the course of the opinion.

King & Spalding, E. Marvin Underwood, and Julian B. McCurry, for plaintiff in error. T. W. Rucker and A. G. McCurry, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. It is manifest that Linder, as president of the Hartwell Ice & Laundry Company, and Matheson, as agent of the Queen Insurance Company, intended to make a binding contract of insurance. It was in the contemplation of both parties that the memorandum made by Matheson, in accordance with his custom, called a "binder," should constitute an effective and complete contract of insurance between the insurer and the insured, and that the duration of the contract thus created, first by the temporary binder, and continued by the regular policy, should be for one year from August 27, 1908. It is equally manifest that the insurance company, with full knowledge of all the facts, confirmed and approved the temporary contract, as evidenced by the binder made by its agent, and both prior and subsequent to the fire treated it as valid. If the temporary contract lacked any of the essential elements of a valid contract of insurance, it was due entirely to the agent of the insurance company, and if, in fact, any incompleteness existed in this temporary contract, it was fully known to the insurance company which, nevertheless, recognized the binding effect of the temporary contract. These facts clearly appearing, the contract should be upheld, unless it contravenes some law of this state, or is too imperfect and incomplete to be enforced. It is insisted that the statute of this state requires that the whole contract of insurance shall be in writing, and shall be signed by the insurer, and that the written memorandum or "binder," relied upon as a contract, is incomplete, in that several elements necessary to make a contract of insurance are omitted therefrom. The memorandum in question, it is contended, does not sufficiently describe the parties thereto, it not showing, (1) who the insured is; (2) nor the insurer, unless the insurer is R. E. Matheson, individually, the word "agent" being merely descriptive personæ; (3) nor is the premium to be paid agreed upon, nor any promise moving from either party disclosed. Of course, there can be no contract without parties, and the contract should identify the parties. It should not be lost sight of in this case that the plaintiff, while setting up the memorandum made by the agent as creating the contract relies upon other contemporaneous and subsequent writings as evidence of the contract. The evidence shows "a series of writings internally connected one with another, executed contemporaneously with or subsequently" to the written memorandum, which are intelligible without parol, and which clearly prove the contract relied upon. Capital City Brick Co. v. Atlanta Ice & Coal Co., 5 Ga. App. 436, 63 S. E. 562. Construing together all the writings on the same subject-matter, every essential element of a complete contract of insurance appears; and the written report of the temporary contract made by the agent to the manager of the company omits no essential element of a complete contract of insurance. Todd v. German-American Insurance Company of New York, 2 Ga. App. 789, 59 S. E. 94. But, even if the memorandum made by the agent and called in insurance parlance a "binder" stood alone, we do not think it lacks any essential element of a contract of insurance. According to Mr. Joyce in his work on Insurance (1 Joyce on Insurance, § 46), temporary insurance contracts evidenced by "binders" need not contain all the terms and conditions of a permanent contract, as where the terms of the usual policy are presumed to be intended, or where the usual rate of premium is presumed to be meant; and this statement of the law is expressly approved by this court in the Todd Case, supra. But the binder now under discussion left nothing uncertain, except the amount of the rate of premium, and it shows an agreement to pay the rate of premium as fixed by the company, and when the regular policy should issue and be received by the insured. Any uncertainty as to the rate of premium was due solely to the action of the agent of the defendant and of the defendant itself. While the binder does not show any specific premium to be paid, it does show by necessary implication an agreement to pay whatever rate of premium might be fixed by the company, and when the permanent policy was issued and delivered to the insured. The insurer in this case, by the very terms of the binder, postponed the payment of the premium by the insured until the temporary contract was ended by the substitution of the regular standard policy. The fact that credit is given for the payment of a premium in no wise invalidates the contract of insurance. 1 Cooley's Briefs on the Law of Insurance, 375. Suppose in this case the memorandum or binder had been delivered to the insured, instead of having been kept by the agent, and made a part of the records of the company in his office, would not the insured have been legally liable, in accepting the "binder," to pay whatever rate of premium was subsequently fixed on the property covered by the contract? And, if the insurance company had failed to fix the rate of premium before the loss occurred, would not the insured have been bound to pay a reasonable rate for the protection which he received by the temporary contract, or under the facts of this case, the rate as subsequently fixed on similar property? But in this case the insured, when he made the application for the insurance, offered to pay the premium which was refused by the agent of the company, because the rate had not at that time been fixed. It seems to us that to hold that this contract was invalid or incomplete because there was no specific rate of premium mentioned in the "binder" under the uncontroverted evidence would be a gross injustice to the insured. A case very much in point is that of Smith & Wallace v. Prussian Insurance Co., 68 N. J. Law, 676, 54 Atl. 458. In that case an insurance company, by its agent, issued and delivered to the insured a "binder," or "binding slip," whereby it assumed and bound itself for $2,000 of insurance upon certain property of the insured, the "binding slip" to be void on the delivery of the policy. No rate of insurance was mentioned in the "binder," because the insured requested the agent to obtain from the company some concession, which the agent consented to do, and, before the rate was agreed on, the property covered by the "binder" was destroyed by fire, and the court held that a complete temporary contract of insurance existed between the insurer and the insured from the date of the delivery of the "binder," and the insured was bound to pay a reasonable rate of premium for the protection which he had received by the temporary contract.

While some of the earlier cases proceed on the theory that these "binding slips" or memoranda merely constitute agreements to issue policies, yet it is now universally held that these "binding slips," memoranda, or receipts have all the force and effect of insurance contracts, and are as binding as the policies themselves. The cases on this subject are collected by Mr. Cooley in his work Briefs on the Law of Insurance (volume 1), beginning on page 535. The case of Todd v. German-American Insurance Company, supra, in principle fully controls the point now under discussion, and we conclude this branch of the case by the statement that in our opinion the trial judge very properly construed the writing in question as constituting a valid contract of insurance, and very properly refused to submit this question to the determination of the jury; it being the duty of the judge, and not of the jury, to decide whether the memorandum or "binder" constituted a valid contract of insurance.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error, in the next place, that the agent had no authority to make such a contract of insurance. There are three reasons shown by the evidence why this position is unsound: (1) The agent who made the binding memorandum or temporary contract was fully authorized by his written commission to take applications for insurance, and to countersign and issue policies, and the making by him of a temporary contract was clearly within the limits of his authority as agent. (2) The temporary contract was in accordance with his general custom as agent in connection with his agency. (3) His act in making the temporary contract was fully approved and confirmed by the company. The company accepted the temporary contract, and treated it as valid.

2. The breaches of the terms and conditions of the contract of insurance relating to other insurance, incumbrances on the property, and failure to furnish proofs of loss within a reasonable time were each claimed to have been waived by the company. These issues were solely questions of fact, to be decided by the jury, and there was both positive and circumstantial evidence in support of the waivers claimed by the plaintiff, and in denial of such waivers by the defendant. The law applicable to these questions was fully submitted to the jury in the charge of the judge, in accordance with the repeated decisions of this court and the Supreme Court. Insurance Company of North America v. De Loach & Co., 3 Ga. App. 807, 61 S. E. 406; American Insurance Company v. Peebles, 5 Ga. App. 736, 64 S. E. 304; Southern Fire Insurance Co. v. Knight, 111 Ga. 622, 36 S. E. 821, 52 L. R. A. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216, and cases there cited. We are clearly of the opinion that the verdict is fully supported by the evidence and the law applicable thereto. Judgment affirmed.

POWELL, J. (concurring specially). I do not think that the so-called "binder" in this case, standing alone, would comply with our statute requiring all contracts of insurance to be in writing. It fails to show at least one essential element of a contract of insurance—the name of the person to be insured. But what was lacking in the "binder" was supplied by the daily report subsequently made out by the agent and accepted by the company. While a contract of insurance must be in writing, the writing need not be delivered to the insured. And under the principle announced in Capital City Brick Co. v. Atlanta Ice & Coal Co., 5 Ga. App. 436, 63 S. E. 562, though the contract may rest wholly or in part in parol, if it becomes evidenced by writing at any time before the suit is filed, the statute requiring the writing becomes satisfied.

MINOR v. CITY OF ATLANTA. (No. 2,857.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 398)—EVIDENCE—UNLAWFUL SEIZURE OF PROPERTY.

Although officers, whether with or without lawful warrant or other authority, have entered a person's place of business, and, by a violent and forceful search of the premises and seizure of property found therein, have obtained, over the protest of the owner, possession of articles tending to show his guilt of an offense, the evidence so obtained is admissible against him in a prosecution for the offense, as against the objection that it was obtained by an unlawful search and seizure, and that through the transaction the defendant was compelled to furnish testimony tending to incriminate himself.

2. COURTS (§ 91*)—DECISIONS OF SUPREME COURT—BINDING EFFECT.

While the Court of Appeals is a court of final review, yet the decisions of the Supreme Court are binding upon it as precedent. Whatever may be the personal views of the judges of this court upon any question, they are to be yielded, so far as they conflict with the decisions of the Supreme Court in letter or in principle.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

C. A. Minor was convicted of violating an ordinance of the City of Atlanta, and brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. A. Boykin, for plaintiff in error. Jas. L. Mayson and W. D. Ellis, Jr., for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Certain police officers of the city of Atlanta went to the defendant's near-beer saloon and compelled him to allow them to enter an adjacent back room, in which they found hidden a quantity of intoxicating liquors; he being present and protesting. They had what they called a search warrant; but whether the instrument had any legal efficacy as a search warrant it is not necessary for us to decide. For present purposes, we will consider the case just as if the so-called search warrant were wholly invalid. When the evidence thus obtained was offered against the defendant in the police court in the prosecution for a violation of the municipal ordinance prohibiting the keeping on hand of intoxicating liquors for the purpose of unlawful sale, he objected to it, on the ground that it had been obtained by unlawful search and seizure, and that the result of the transaction was to compel him involuntarily to give evidence tending to incriminate himself, in violation of the constitutional guaranties against unlawful search and seizure and against any person being compelled to furnish testimony tending to incriminate himself. The objection was overruled, and this action of the court is the basis of the exception relied on in the record before us.

If this point came before us as an original proposition, we would have but little hesitancy in pronouncing it well taken. We do not think that the unlawful search and seizure clause of the Constitution protects the defendant against the use of this evidence; but it would seem, as an original proposition, that he was compelled involuntarily to produce evidence against himself. Even if our previous reflections upon this question had not induced this view, which we personally hold, the very strong and able brief and argument of counsel for plaintiff in error would probably convince us. But the question is not an open one. The case is on all fours with Duren v. City of Thomasville, 125 Ga. 1, 53 S. E. 814—a case resting on a long line of similar precedents. In that case the city marshal went to Duren's store with two policemen, and "searched Mr. Duren's store, over his protest, and found a quantity of intoxicants." In that case the point was made that the evidence was inadmissible, because to admit it would be to violate that clause of the Constitution which provides that no man shall be compelled to furnish testimony upon which to convict himself. The Supreme Court held that the testimony was admissible, and that to admit it was not a violation of this constitutional guaranty.

The duty of this court, in the light of the constitutional provision making the Supreme Court decisions binding upon it as precedents, may be analogized to the duty of processions making a survey under Civ. Code, § 3243 et seq. Under that statute the processions are not charged primarily with the duty of making any new lines. They are merely to trace and find, if possible, the ancient landmarks. "If the corners are established, and the lines not marked, a straight line, as required by the plat, shall be run; but an established marked line, though crooked, shall not be overruled." So it is our duty to follow the precedents and the ancient landmarks of the law as declared by the Supreme Court. If the line leading from precedent to a particular point has not been marked, we are authorized to use the compass of our own judgment, and establish what we find to be the straight line; but wherever the Supreme Court has set up "an established marked line, though crooked," we have no power to overrule it. This is a necessary and salutary provision found in the organization of the two courts—a provision that relieves the litigants of this state from that uncertainty which comes about from having two courts of final review, with the consequent possibility of conflicting decisions, where the decisions of neither court are paramount as against the decisions of the other.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes Judicial work has always been and will always be necessarily somewhat affected by the personal equation of the individual judges. The conflict in the application of precedent is to be expected, and is found in the decisions of every court—the court thus in a sense conflicting with itself; and in like manner it is to be expected that this same element of the personal equation of the judge will bring about conflict in the application of precedent to a particular case, as between this court and the Supreme Court. But the beauty of our system is this: If any conflict exists between this court and the Supreme Court, the people, and especially the lawyers and the trial judges who have to use the decisions, are put upon advance information that the decision of the Supreme Court is to be followed, and is the paramount decision, binding upon this court, even in preference to its own opinion. This court will never intentionally disregard the Supreme Court decision as precedent. Therefore the harmony desirable in the body of our decisions as a whole is the natural result of the system; for as the individual judges of the two benches die or otherwise leave the bench, and what is called the personal equation expires, the coming on of new judges, uninfluenced by the same bent of mind that tended to bring about the conflict in the construction of precedent, will restore harmony in application as well as in principle. The path in this case has been plainly marked. There is no room for construction. The question has been settled. The Supreme Court has blazed the way. This court follows.

Judgment affirmed.

MIXON v. STATE. (No. 2,617.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 75*)—DEMURRER—GROUNDS.

Though, by reason of verbal inaccuracies, an indictment may be in part unintelligible, yet where, either by disregarding the unintelligible portion as surplusage, or by considering it along with the rest of what is said, the language of the indictment plainly, clearly, definitely, and accurately charges a particular offense, it is not subject to be quashed on demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 202-204; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Under the evidence the jury were fully authorized to find the defendant guilty of voluntary manslaughter.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 786*)—INSTRUCTIONS—STATEMENT OF ACCUSED.

Though it is the best practice for a trial judge, in charging the jury upon the subject of the defendant's statement, to follow the language of the statute on that subject literally, yet it is not reversible error for him to fail to do so, if in fact the instruction given substantially covers the material elements of the statute and is otherwise fair to the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1787, 1895-1901, 1960, 1984; Dec. Dig. § 786.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 31*)—"MANSLAUGHTER"—"VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER."

Wherever a homicide is neither justifiable nor malicious, it is "manslaughter"; and, if intentional, is "voluntary manslaughter."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 52; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4338-4342; vol. 8, p. 7715; vol. 8, pp. 7350, 7351.]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 217*)—DYING DECLARATIONS—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY.

Neither the parol evidence rule, nor any rule forbidding oral testimony as to the contents of court records, renders a witness incompetent to testify as to a dying declaration though the words of the dead man may have been taken down in writing by some one present at the time the alleged statement was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 462; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1168*)—NEW TRIAL—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

Slight or immaterial error in the admission or exclusion of testimony will not work a reversal of the judgment of the lower court refusing a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3129-3136, 3144; Dec. Dig. § 1168.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 834*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is not necessarily reversible error for a trial judge to refuse to give the exact language of a written request to charge, if he substantially covers the same matter in his general charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2013, 2014; Dec. Dig. § 834.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 945*)—EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL.

The alleged newly discovered evidence was not sufficient to require the grant of a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2324-2327, 2336; Dec. Dig. § 945.*]

9. HOMICIDE (§ 295*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVOCATION.

It is not unconditionally erroneous for a judge to instruct the jury that provocation by words, threats, menaces, and contemptuous gestures can in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from guilt of the crime of murder. Whether such a charge is erroneous or not depends on the facts of the case, and on what else is said in the charge on the same subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 606-609; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

George W. Mixon was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Jas. K. Hines and E. L. Stephens, for plaintiff in error. Alfred Herrington, Sol. Gen., W. W. Larsen, and Wm. Faircloth, for the State.

POWELL, J. 1. The indictment charged the defendant with the offense of murder, "for that the said George W. Mixon, on the 13th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1909, in the county aforesaid, with force and arms one pistol in the peace of God and said state then and there being, then and there unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, and of his malice aforethought, did kill and murder, by shooting the said Henry Claxton with a certain pistol which the said George W. Mixon then and there held, and giving to the said Henry Claxton then and there a mortal wound, of which wound the said Henry Claxton died. And so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said George W. Mixon him, the said Henry Claxton, in manner and form aforesaid, unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, and of his malice aforethought, did kill and murder, contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof." The defendant demurred to the indictment, on the general grounds and on several special grounds; the substance of the objections being that the indictment charged the killing and murdering of a pistol, and not of a human being. There is a manifest verbal inaccuracy in the indictment, but it requires no straining of the ordinary rules of construction to hold that the language, taken altogether, clearly, definitely, and accurately conveys no other meaning than that George W. Mixon killed and murdered Henry Claxton by shooting him with a pistol. This intelligent meaning can be gained from the language used; and the language is not subject to any other intelligent construction. The indictment is therefore held to be sufficient against the demurrer. Verbal absurdities will not render an indictment or other pleadings subject to demurrer, where the language, taken as a whole, nevertheless clearly, accurately, and definitely charges a crime. The maxim, "Utile per inutile non vitiatur" (Broom, Legal Maxims [7th Ed.] 468), is applicable to indictments as well as to other pleadings.

2. The indictment charged murder. The defendant was convicted of voluntary manslaughter. The evidence, probably the preponderance of the evidence, authorized this verdict.

3. Complaint is made as to an instruction of the court on the subject of the defendant's statement. The charge of the court did not follow the language of the statute, but did inform the jury, in substance, as to the same things mentioned in the statute. The Supreme Court and this court have time and again suggested to the trial bench that in charging upon the defendant's statement the better practice is to follow the language of the statute literally; but it is not held to be reversible error for the judge to fail to do so, where he nevertheless covers the same ground in his charge. The language of the trial judge in the present case is not as perspicuous as the language of the statute itself (indeed, it is hard to improve upon the statute itself for the quality of being luminous); but we do not think that the instruction complained of was materially misleading to the jury.

4. Complaint is made that the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "So in this case, if you find from the facts and circumstances of the case that the accused took the life of the deceased, and find at the time he was not justified, that the killing was done in a sudden heat of passion, generated and caused, so far as the deceased is concerned, by an endeavor on the part of the deceased to commit a serious personal injury upon his person, or other equivalent circumstances to justify the excitement of passion and exclude all idea of deliberation or malice, either express or implied, and the provocation was not by words, threats, menaces, and contemptuous gestures, but amounted to more, and you find that the killing occurred under such circumstances, and believe that to be the truth of it, then you would be authorized to find the defendant guilty of voluntary manslaughter." This charge is not subject to the exceptions made against it. It is not an incorrect statement of the law. Taken in connection with the remainder of the charge, it is not misleading, nor was it likely to confuse the jury, or to deprive the defendant of the defense of reasonable fear. It was not calculated to impress upon the jury that provocation by words, threats, menaces, and contemptuous gestures could in no case be sufficient to generate a reasonable fear in the mind of the defendant. While it might have been more emphatic for the judge to have qualified the expression, "serious personal injury," by adding parenthetically, "not amounting to a felony," yet as the judge had prefaced this instruction with the qualification that it was applicable only in the event that they find that the defendant was not justifiable, and as he had explained to them fully the circumstances under which the defendant would have been justifiable, the instruction was not inaccurate. There are other exceptions to the judge's charge on the subject of manslaughter, all of them based on grounds similar to those mentioned above; but, considering the charge as a whole, there was no material inaccuracy.

5. A witness for the state detailed a dying declaration made by the deceased. On cross-examination he admitted that some one present at the time the statement was made probably took down the statement in writing, though he was unwilling to swear positively that the statement was committed to writing. However, it is fairly inferable from what the witness testified that some one present made a memorandum of what the deceased stated. The court overruled a motion to exclude this testimony, on the ground that the writing would be the best evidence of what the statement was. There was no merit in this objection. It was competent for the witness to testify as to his recollection of what the dying man said, notwithstanding some one else present might have undertaken to commit the statement to writing. Neither the parol evidence rule, nor the rule which forbids oral testimony as to the contents of public records without accounting for the original, applies in such a case.

8. There was some testimony on behalf of the defendant to the effect that the deceased had cursed him; and thereafter certain witnesses for the state were allowed to testify that the deceased was not a "cursing man," that he was a member of the church, and that those who knew him well had never heard him curse. The exception to this ruling may be disposed of by the statement that, even if the ruling were erroneous, the error was of too little materiality to require a reversal.

7. The defendant requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "Defendant will be justified if there be a reasonable doubt as to whether he acted under such fears, or had reason to feel that it was necessary to kill in order to save his own life, or to prevent a felony from being committed upon his person." Perhaps this request to charge is subject to the criticism that it is not theoretically accurate. A defendant would not necessarily be justified because the jury might have reasonable doubts as to whether he acted under the fears of a reasonable man, though, if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to whether he had such fears as would have justified him, it is the fears that justify, and not the doubt, and they ought to acquit. But if this criticism be hypercritical, it is enough, to dispose of the exception, to say that the judge in his general charge fully covered the question as to reasonable doubt and as to reasonable fears. Indeed, at the conclusion of the charge he gave in substance the exact principle requested, and gave it in almost the exact language requested. Therefore the refusal to give the special request was not reversible error. Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168; Carr v. State, 84 Ga. 251 (4), 10 S. E. 626; McDuffie v. State, 90 Ga. 786 (1), 17 S. E. 105; Perdue v. State, 126 Ga. 112, 54 S. E. 820. It is true that in Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128 (7), 157 (relied on by plaintiff in error), a ruling apparently to the contrary was made. However, the decision in the Mitchell Case was by two judges only, and, as to this point, is in conflict with both prior and subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court.

8. The motion for a new trial contains several grounds based on alleged newly discovered testimony. One ground set up the fact that the dying declaration referred to above was in fact committed to writing, and that the witness who testified on the subject knew, as a matter of fact, that the writing was then in the courtroom in the possession of one of the witnesses. What has been said already on this subject seems to dispose of this ground. Even if the writing had been in existence, it would not have been the highest evidence of what the dying man had said, though it might, in a sense, have been the most reliable evidence (see Perry v. State, 102 Ga. 365, 374, 30 S. E. 908); so, for all practical purposes, the testimony of this alleged newly discovered witness would merely tend to impeach the testimony of the witness who expressed some doubt as to whether the statement had been committed to writing. There was further presented the alleged newly discovered testimony of an 11 year old boy who claimed to have been a witness to the transaction. As the affidavit of this witness tended to show a case of voluntary manslaughter, and as the defendant was convicted of that offense, it would hardly afford a reason for granting a new trial, even if it were otherwise sufficient to bring about such a result. There was alleged newly discovered testimony of still another witness; but the matter to which he referred was of such small materiality as not to authorize the granting of a new trial on that account. The judge did not err in refusing to grant a new trial on account of the newly discovered testimony.

9. The complaint is made that the judge charged the jury that provocation by words, threats, menaces, and contemptuous gestures can in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder; and it is true that the judge read to the jury section 65 of the Penal Code of 1895, which contains (among other things) this language. It is also true that this court has on several occasions cautioned the trial judges against the use of this broad statement; but we have never said that it did not state a correct principle of law, as applied to certain classes of cases. Wherever the question of justification, from apparent self-defense, is not involved, the court, for the purpose of distinguishing between murder and manslaughter, may without error instruct the jury in the language of the excerpt referred to. The sum and substance of the previous rulings of this court on the question is that, wherever this language is employed without explanation in such a context as to mislead the jury under the facts of the particular case, it will be error, and generally reversible error. But in the present case the judge was very careful to limit the language to its proper purpose. He plainly charged the jury that they had "the right to consider words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures, in deciding whether the defendant was acting under the fears of a reasonable man," and reiterated the statement. He further told them that the Legislature had not undertaken to say that any given state of facts or circumstances should or should not be sufficient to constitute grounds of reasonable fears, and that the matter was for the sole determination of the jury. The charge as a whole was a very fair and able presentation of the issues involved in the trial. The defendant seems to have been fairly tried and legally convicted.

Judgment affirmed.

GREEN v. STATE. (No. 2,613.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 761*)—HOMICIDE (§ 142*)—INCONSISTENT DEFENSES—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is permissible in a homicide case for the defendant to rely upon both defenses, that he did not kill the deceased, and that, if he did kill him, it was justifiable; and in such a case, when the defendant has not admitted that he was the person who did the killing, it is error for the court to charge the jury that the defendant contended that "he shot and killed the deceased, acting under the fears of a reasonable man." The evidence of the defendant's guilt being very slight, the error is of sufficient importance to justify a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 250-259, 1754-1764; Dec. Dig. § 761.* Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 582, 599, 607, 621; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

Error from Superior Court, Greene County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Lee Green was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Reversed.

Park & Park, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was indicted for murder, and convicted of voluntary manslaughter. By what is the apparently strong preponderance of the evidence, both for the state and for the accused, the homicide, if committed by the defendant at all, was justifiable, and yet by straining the testimony of one of the dead man's brothers, who testified for the state, it was legally possible for the jury to have rendered the verdict of manslaughter, on the theory that the defendant and the deceased were at the time of the killing possessed of a mutual intention to fight with deadly weapons. The defendant in his statement admitted that he had shot, but he did not admit that it was his shot that killed the deceased; and there was evidence indicating that there were several persons shooting, and the jury might have inferred from the testimony that not the defendant, but some other person, not acting in concert with him, killed the deceased. The killing occurred at a negro frolic, and those of us who live in this section of the country readily understand that, when a homicide occurs at a negro frolic, it is often difficult to tell who did the killing—that so soon as the fight begins, it generally becomes a free-for-all combat, in which not only the original participants, but others, are likely to become engaged. There is nothing unreasonable, from a practical standpoint, in the defendant's insistence that, although the immediate row was between him and the deceased, others were shooting also. The case is directly controlled by Phillips v. State, 131 Ga. 426 (1), 62 S. E. 239.

As the case goes back for a new trial, it is well enough for us to call attention to the fact that there is also an inaccuracy in the charge of the court on the subject of mutual combat, or mutual intention to fight. The court instructed the jury that "an assault may sometimes be evidenced by a mutual intention to fight with deadly weapons, and acts indicating a purpose on the part of the parties to carry out such mutual intention, and to use such weapons to kill each other. If both the defendant and the deceased form an intention to kill each other, and arm themselves for that purpose, or have pistols for that purpose, and in furtherance of such mutual intention to kill they use such weapons, the slayer would be guilty of voluntary manslaughter under the law." It is true that under the circumstances enumerated the slayer might be guilty of voluntary manslaughter, but not necessarily so. Section 73 of the Penal Code of 1895 allows for a margin of justification in such cases, and there is evidence in the case at bar that the person killed was the assailant, and that the defendant was endeavoring to decline any further struggle before the mortal blow was given. The judge should also have made it clear that though the defendant may have armed himself, and though he may have expressed the intention of shooting the deceased with a deadly weapon, he would not necessarily be guilty of manslaughter if he stood purely on defensive ground throughout the transaction. There was evidence from which the jury might have inferred that for some minutes prior to the killing the deceased was endeavoring to get to the defendant and kill him. If so, the defendant would have had the right to arm himself and to express the intention of killing the deceased, if he came upon him in this hostile and murderous attitude. A fully defensive killing, under these circumstances, would not be manslaughter.

Judgment reversed.

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67*)—LABOR CONTRACT LAW—VIOLATION—EVIDENCE.

To sustain a conviction of a violation of the "labor contract act" of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90), the evidence must show that there was a fraudulent intent at the time when the money or other thing of value was obtained from the employer, and that the laborer failed to perform his contract or repay his advances without good and sufficient cause. None of these facts were shown in this case. The evidence does not in any essential particular support the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

Error from City Court of Calhoun; H. M. Calhoun, Judge.

Alfred Johnson was convicted of violating the labor contract law, and brings error. Reversed.

W. A. Jordan, for plaintiff in error. E. L. Smith, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Johnson was convicted for a violation of the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90) commonly known as the "labor contract law," and, his motion for a new trial being overruled, he excepted.

The prosecutor, who was the only material witness for the state, testified in substance as follows: On January 21, 1908, he made a written contract with the defendant, Johnson, to work for him as a laborer from that day for 12 months, to be paid wages at the rate of $9 per month; that at the time when the contract was made he advanced Johnson the sum of $60 thereon; that Johnson, on January 22, 1908, commenced work under the contract, and continued to work until December 19, 1908, "and he did good and faithful service until that time." The contract further provided that if, at the expiration of the first 12 months, Johnson should owe the prosecutor for any advances made thereon, he (Johnson) agreed to work for the prosecutor an additional 12 months for the same amount of wages per month, and that any advances made to him on the first 12 months should be carried over and charged against him for the second 12 months. The prosecutor testified that on December 19, 1908, he advanced Johnson $5 on the contract, and that at that time Johnson owed him $15 or $20 more than his wages amounted to for the 12 months. The accusation contains two counts, the first charging Johnson with fraudulently obtaining from the prosecutor the $60, and the second count charging him with fraudulently obtaining the $5. The prosecutor testified that on December 19, 1908, Johnson quit work and went to the house of his mother, and he (the prosecutor) went to hunt for him, and found him at her house, and he then told the prosecutor he was sick and unable then to resume work. Under this evidence the solicitor abandoned the first count. We think justice would not have been seriously wounded if he had also abandoned the second count.

The state's testimony shows several reasons indicating that the prosecution was without probable cause, and that the conviction was manifestly unwarranted. In the first place, the prosecutor states that the laborer had done "good and faithful service" for him under the contract for a full period of 11 months, and during this entire time he had advanced $65, and owed him under the contract $99. It is true that the prosecutor states in an indefinite and general way that the defendant owed him $15 or $20, when he quit work, more than his wages for the year amounted to; but it is significant that he does not state the time when he advanced him an additional sum, or the amount of the advance, if any, and failed to include these advances in his accusation against him. In his anxiety to prosecute this "good and faithful servant," it would seem remarkable that he omitted anything. We are clear that the evidence by the prosecutor himself fully rebuts the existence of a fraudulent intent on the part of the defendant when he procured the $5, as well as when he procured the $60. Mulkey v. State, 1 Ga. App. 521, 57 S. E. 1022. In the second place, if the defendant was sick when he quit work, that was a good reason for his quitting; and there is no evidence that he was not sick, as he stated. The prosecutor found him at his mother's house, and he then told the prosecutor that he was sick and was not able to resume work. The defendant's sickness constituted a good and sufficient reason for his not working under his contract. Mobley v. State, 4 Ga. App. 78, 60 S. E. 803.

Altogether we are clearly of the opinion that the conviction in this case was without evidence to support it, and therefore was contrary to law.

Judgment reversed.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—VIOLATION OF PROHIBITION LAW—EVIDENCE.

No error of law is complained of, and there is some evidence to support the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 309; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Error from City Court of Columbus; G. Y. Tigner, Judge.

J. T. Davis was convicted of a violation of the prohibition law, and brings error. Affirmed.

Ed. Wohlwender, for plaintiff in error. T. H. Fort, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Davis was tried on an accusation charging him in two counts with a violation of the prohibition law. In the first count he is charged with keeping on hand at his place of business alcoholic, malt, spirituous, and intoxicating liquors, to wit, whisky, and in the second count he is charged with selling intoxicating liquors. The jury convicted him on the first count. His motion for a new trial, based on the general grounds only, was overruled, and he excepted.

The evidence for the state shows in substance that two detectives, pursuing their vocation in ferreting out offenses against the prohibition law in Columbus, Ga., induced a boy 14 years of age to go into the place of business, "a near beer" saloon, of the defendant, and see if he could purchase any whisky, and they gave him the money for the purpose. Before he was sent into the saloon these detectives searched him to see if he had any whisky on his person, and found none. They followed the boy until he entered the saloon, and saw him enter and talk to the defendant. He was in the saloon about five minutes. When he came out he pulled out of his pocket a half pint of whisky. It was "Supreme Court whisky." He stated that he had gotten the whisky in the saloon. The boy testified that he did not remember buying any whisky from the defendant on the night in question, as he was drinking that night and did not remember where he had gotten his whisky, though he did remember that he got some whisky that afternoon "across the river." About an hour after the detectives had gotten the whisky from the boy, they secured a warrant for the arrest of the defendant, and went to his place of business and made a search for intoxicating liquors, but found none there. They searched his person and found a half pint of "Kentucky Tavern" whisky in his pocket. It may be proper to state that both of the detectives swore that the boy was not drinking when they got him to go into the saloon. The defendant, in his statement to the jury said that he had not sold any whisky to the boy; that when the boy came into his place he refused to sell him whisky and ordered him out, telling him that he did not want "any kids" about his place; and that the boy took from the front of his waist a half-pint bottle and said, "Well, I have some anyhow," placed it in his inside coat pocket, turned around, and left the place. As to the half pint of whisky found in his pocket, he stated that he had had his porter to go out and buy it for him just a half hour before he was arrested; that he had gotten the whisky to take home to his wife, who was sick with the gripe.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is contended that this evidence is wholly insufficient to show that the defendant was keeping on hand at his place of business intoxicating liquors. Our attention is called to the fact that the jury found the defendant not guilty on the second count, which shows that they did not think the boy bought the half pint of "Supreme Court whisky" from the defendant in his saloon. Even conceding this, it would not follow that the verdict was not supported by the evidence. This high grade of whisky, judging from its name, the jury probably inferred had been bought by the boy from across the river in the state of Alabama, and the evidence also shows that the half pint of whisky which the defendant had on his person when arrested was a much lower grade of whisky than "Supreme Court whisky," being "Kentucky Tavern whisky." It seems from the evidence to have been a very low grade of intoxicating liquor. The conclusion as to the defendant's guilt might be placed upon the evidence as to the finding of the half pint of whisky on his person while at his place of business. The trial judge instructed the jury that "if they believed from the testimony that Davis, the defendant, had kept no whisky in his place of business other than that in his pocket, and if they believed his explanation of his possession of that, and if there was no degree of permanence attached to its presence there, and if he had it there merely in process of conveyance to his wife at home, then they should find him not guilty as to the first count." This certainly charged the law applicable to that issue as favorably to the defendant as he could have desired. Cohen v. State, 7 Ga. App. 5, 65 S. E. 1096. It was exclusively the province of the jury to solve this issue, and they did solve it by discrediting the statement made by the defendant. The jury had the right, under the law, to discard the defendant's statement entirely, and to believe that the defendant got this pint of whisky from his place of business. While the evidence was not strong, this court cannot say that it had no probative value whatever, and the strength of the evidence was for the jury. As repeatedly held, this court cannot, under the Constitution, set aside a verdict on the general grounds, where there is any evidence whatever in support of it under the law applicable thereto.

Judgment affirmed.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. DUKES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 16, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. RAILROADS (§ 351)—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

A widow brought suit against a railroad company for the pecuniary value of the life of her deceased husband, alleged to have been negligently killed by the defendant at a public crossing in an incorporated city. The evidence showed that the deceased, while undertaking in a wagon to pass over such crossing, was killed by a freight train, consisting of an engine and two cars, running backwards. There was evidence tending to show that the bell on the locomotive was not tolled in approaching the crossing. Held, the following charge: "Railroad companies are required by law to fix along the line of their road, and at a distance of 400 [yards] from the center of such public road crossings, on each side thereof, a post; and the engineer shall be required, whenever he shall arrive at either of said posts, to blow the whistle of the locomotive until he arrives at the public road, and to check and keep checking the speed of his train, so as to stop in time, should any person or thing be crossing said track on said road. In cities the railroad is required by another provision of the law to toll the bell, instead of blowing the whistle. I charge you that this is required by law, and if the railroad should fail to comply with this statute it would be negligence on the part of the railroad company"—was not error requiring a new trial, because of any of the reasons assigned, which were as follows: "This charge was error because inapplicable to the facts of this case and is an incorrect statement of the law; the injury having been inflicted at a street crossing in a city, and this statute does not apply to street crossings in a city. In a city, railroad companies are not required to erect blow posts at a distance of 400 yards from the center of the street, nor are they required to toll a bell for 400 yards before reaching the street. The charge is objectionable because it

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes led the jury to believe that the defendant was required to both blow the whistle and toll the bell. This charge was error, because the injury was caused, as defendant contends, by an engine, a switch engine, backing cars in the defendant's yards at Millen, and was therefore inapplicable to the facts in the case; there being no duty upon the company in such a case to observe such a statute."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1197; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

2. CORRECT CHARGE.

The charge that the plaintiff contended that the deceased was a man of good health and vigorous, and was earning from $1 to $5 per day, was not subject to the criticism that it was not authorized by the pleadings or the evidence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 969*)—CONDUCT OF TRIAL—VIEW OF PREMISES BY JURY—DISCRETION OF COURT.

One assignment of error in the motion for a new trial is as follows: "The court erred in refusing, at the request of defendant's counsel, at the conclusion of the evidence in said case, to permit the jury to view the premises under proper precautions; said request being made by defendant's counsel, and there being no objection by the plaintiff or her counsel to said request. When said request was made, the court promptly [denied] it, not waiting to hear from plaintiff or her counsel upon the subject. This refusal by the court was error, because it was the only way by which the jury could properly understand and intelligently apply the testimony to the occurrence." If the court in any case of this character is authorized, without the express consent of both parties, or their counsel, to permit the jury to view the premises where the injury or homicide occurred, it is a matter in his discretion, and his refusal to do so will not be adjudged error. Johnson v. Winship Mach. Co., 108 Ga. 564, 33 S. E. 1013; County of Bibb v. Reese, 115 Ga. 346, 349, 41 S. E. 636.

Code 1895, § 3588, and there was evidence tending to show such possession of some part of the land less than the whole, in charging the law of prescription the jury should have been so instructed as to restrict a recovery under such claim of prescription to such part of the land as was in actual possession of the prescriber for the requisite period; and the more especially should the judge not have refused to so charge upon timely and appropriate written request.

(a) The evidence tending to establish a prescription by 7 years' adverse possession under color of title was not without conflict, and was not of such character as to have rendered harmless the error committed by refusing to charge in accordance with the ruling announced in the above note.

EVANS, P. J. Jackson Rice devised a lot of land to be equally divided between his wife, Hannah, and his four children, one of whom was named Laura. The division was made by commissioners appointed by the court of ordinary. The commissioners divided the land by lot, and Hannah drew lot No. 3, and Laura lot No. 5. The commissioners made their return, which was made the judgment of the court, in 1876. Laura Rice, who had intermarried with one Thomas, brought suit against her son, Tom Thomas, and J. M. Youngblood, alleging that after the division her mother, Hannah Rice, was disappointed that she failed to draw lot No. 5, which contained the residence of her late husband, and, prompted by filial affection, she agreed to let her mother live thereon, and as her mother increased in years she became very feeble, and Laura lived with her and assisted in taking care of her. She alleges that on Sunday, January 25, 1906, while she and the others were away from home, her son Tom Thomas procured her mother to make him a deed to her land, known as lot No. 5, which he afterwards sold to his codefendant, Youngblood; that at the time of the making of the deed her mother's mental and physical condition were such that she did not have sufficient capacity to make a binding contract; and that Youngblood had knowledge of the facts at the time of his purchase. She prayed a cancellation of the deed from her mother to her son, and the latter's deed to Youngblood as a cloud upon her title. The defendants in their answer averred that immediately after the division of the estate of Jackson Rice, in which lot No. 5 was assigned to Laura and lot No. 3 to Hannah, Laura and Hannah agreed orally to exchange the lots; that since that time both have recognized such interchange, Laura returning lot No. 3 for taxation, and Hannah No. 5 for taxation, and in all their subsequent dealings with the land each recognized that the title to No. 5 was in Hannah and to No. 3 in Laura. They admitted that Hannah conveyed the land to Tom Thomas by deed executed at the time alleged, but denied that Hannah was incapable of making a valid contract at the time. The trial resulted in a verdict for the defendants. The court refused a new trial to the plaintiff, and she excepts.

1. The controlling point in the case, as made by the pleadings and evidence, was whether there had been an interchange of the property in 1876, upon which both of the parties had acted since that time. Upon this subject the evidence was conflicting, but was sufficient to support a finding that Laura and Hannah, after the division of the property of Jackson Rice in 1876, exchanged the lands assigned to them in the division, and had mutually recognized each other's title in the property exchanged by various acts, such as paying the taxes, renting the land, and the like.

2. The court refused to allow the plaintiff to show by witnesses that at the time her mother executed her deed to plaintiff's son she was non compos mentis and without capacity to make the deed, and also refused to allow witnesses to testify that the deed from her mother to her son was executed on Sunday. The plaintiff's contention, as presented by her petition, was that the title to lot No. 5, which she obtained in the division of her father's estate, had never passed out of her, and her right to have the deed canceled as a cloud upon her title was based upon her ownership of the land as devisee of her father. She did not sue as heir at law of her mother, but based her cause of action upon her title derived from her father's will. The evidence rejected was irrelevant to the issue as made by the pleadings.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

MCCRAW et al. v. WEBB et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 15, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 335*)—
— PROCEEDINGS TO SELL LAND — CLAIMS — AMENDMENT OF CLAIM AFFIDAVIT.

Where executors are proceeding to sell land as the property of their testator under an order from the court of ordinary, and four persons filed a joint claim to an undivided interest in the land, it is not error to allow, at the instance of the claimants, an amendment striking the names of three of them from the claim affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 120*)—CONVEYANCES—INTERESTS CONVEYED.

A deed was executed in 1859, between Luco M. Moore, of the one part, and James M. D. Webb and his wife, of the other part, for and in consideration of $3,800, wherein the grantor conveyed to James M. D. Webb and Elizabeth F. Webb a certain tract of land, "to have and to hold the said tract or parcel of land unto the said James M. D. Webb and his wife, Elizabeth F. Webb, her heirs and issue by the said James M. D. Webb, she, the said Elizabeth F. Webb, furnishing two-thirds of the purchase money, and the said James M.

D. Webb conveying and by these presents do convey unto his wife the said Elizabeth F. Webb and her issue by the said James M. D. Webb his interest in said land," with warranty of title to James M. D. Webb and Elizabeth F. Webb, and signed only by the grantor. Held: (1) That the acceptance of the deed by James M. D. Webb, containing the stipulation that by the deed he was conveying his interest in the land to Elizabeth Webb and her issue, was the equivalent of a covenant of conveyance by him, and that he took no beneficial interest in the land. (2) That the whole beneficial interest in the land passed to Elizabeth F. Webb, and that the words "her heirs and issue by the said James M. D. Webb," are words of limitation, and not of purchase. (3) That, if James M. D. Webb took any estate, it was that of a naked trustee, which trust would have been executed under the married woman's act of 1866 (Laws 1866, p. 146).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 430-434; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

8. QUESTION UNNECESSARY TO DETERMINE.

Under the most favorable view of the evidence, the claimant did not have title to so much of the land as was allowed by the verdict. As there must be another trial, it becomes unnecessary to determine whether there was evidence justifying the charge complained of.

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Proceeding by M. A. McCraw and others, executors of Samuel Evans, to sell land, in which W. A. Webb and others interposed a claim. Judgment for the mentioned claimant, the others having withdrawn, and the executors bring error. Reversed.

Allen & Pottle, for plaintiffs in error. D. B. & D. S. Sanford, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. The executors of Samuel Evans were proceeding to sell a certain tract of land as the property of their testator under an order granted by the ordinary, when W. A. Webb and his sisters interposed a claim to a one-third undivided interest in the land. The claim affidavit was returned to the superior court of Baldwin county, agreeably to the statute in such cases made and provided. On the trial the court allowed the claim affidavit to be amended by striking therefrom all of the claimants except W. A. Webb, and exceptions pendente lite were taken to the allowance of this amendment. It appeared that the executors and the claimant traced their title from Lueco M. Moore. The executors also set up title by prescription.

The deed upon which the claimant relied to establish his title is as follows: "Georgia, Baldwin County. This indenture, made this the fifteenth day of August in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, between Lueco M. Moore, of the state aforesaid and Baldwin county, on the one part, and James M. D. Webb and his wife, Elizabeth F. Webb, of the state aforesaid and Jones county, of the other part, witnesseth: That the said Lueco M. Moore, for and in consideration of the sum of three thousand eight hundred dollars to him in hand paid at and before the sealing of and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, hath granted, bargained, sold, and conveyed, and doth by these presents grant, bargain, sell, and convey, to the said James M. D. Webb and Elizabeth F. Webb, their heirs and assigns, that tract and parcel of land situate, lying, and being in the county and state aforesaid [fully described]. To have and to hold the said tract or parcel of land unto the said James M. D. Webb and his wife, Elizabeth F. Webb, for her, his wife, Elizabeth F. Webb, her heirs and issue by the said James M. D. Webb; she, the said Elizabeth F. Webb, furnishing two-thirds of the purchase money, and the said James M. D. Webb conveying and by these presents do convey unto his wife, the said Elizabeth F. Webb, and her issue by the said James M. D. Webb, his interest in said land, together with all and singular the rights, members, and appurtenances thereof to the same in any manner to his, her, and their own proper use, benefit, and behoof forever in fee simple. And the said Lueco M. Moore, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, the said bargained premises unto the said James M. D. Webb and Elizabeth F. Webb, their heirs and assigns, will warrant and forever defend the right and title thereof against themselves and against the claims of all other persons whatsoever."

The title set up by the executors was a deed from C. W. Ennis, sheriff, to Samuel Walker, dated October 7, 1884, conveying two-thirds undivided interest in the land described in the deed from Lueco M. Moore, this deed reciting that it was sold by virtue of an execution in favor of Thomas Johnson against Elizabeth Webb; and a deed from Samuel Walker to Samuel Evans, dated November 7, 1885, conveying the two-thirds undivided interest in the same land; and a deed from C. W. Ennis, sheriff, to Samuel Evans, dated December 2, 1884, conveying one-third undivided interest in the property described in the deed from Lueco M. Moore, reciting that the land was sold under an execution in favor of Samuel Evans against J. M. D. Webb. A verdict was rendered by the jury in favor of the claimant. A motion for new trial was made by the executors, and refused by the court, and they excepted.

1. There is no merit in the exception to the allowance of the amendment striking three of the claimants from the case. Four claimants were asserting title to an interest in the land. Three of these voluntarily dismissed themselves from the case. No reason appears why they should remain in the case for the settlement of the respective rights of the executors and the remaining claimant. It was the filing of the claim which made the issue with the executors, and the voluntary withdrawal of three of the claimants from the case was not to the prejudice of the executors. They cannot complain of the amendment striking them as parties. Civ. Code, § 5104.

2. The deed from Lueco M. Moore to the Webbs is not drawn with technical precision. However unskillfully a deed may be prepared, it is the duty of the courts to discover and give effect, if possible, to the intent of the parties. This deed was executed in 1859, before the married woman's act (Laws 1866, p. 146), and at a time when the husband's marital rights attached to the wife's property reduced to possession by him, and when a trust could be created for a married woman. The husband and wife jointly furnished the money to pay for the land, and the provision that the husband conveyed his interest to the wife and her issue by him, though he was one of the grantees, was manifestly inserted therein at his instance, and clearly shows that he did not intend to claim any beneficial interest in the land conveyed by the deed. A grantee who accepts a deed is deemed to have expressly agreed to what it is stipulated in the deed that he shall do. Ga. So. R. Co. v. Reeves, 64 Ga. 492. For the same reason, when Webb and his wife purchased the land from Moore and took a deed from Moore, stipulating that by that deed Webb conveyed to his wife all his interest in the land, the acceptance of the deed by Webb would have the effect of renouncing in favor of his wife and her issue by him all his interest in the land, and the most that he could claim would be as the holder of the naked legal title in trust for such person or persons as took thereunder the beneficial interest.

The next question in the construction of the deed is to ascertain whether W. A. Webb, the claimant, who was the only child of J. M. D. Webb and Elizabeth Webb in life at the time of its execution, was a joint beneficiary with his mother. The words of a deed will always be construed to have their legal significance, in the absence of a contrary intent plainly manifest in the instrument. The habendum and tenendum clause in this deed is: "To have and to hold the said tract or parcel of land unto the said James M. D. Webb and his wife, Elizabeth F. Webb, her heirs and issue by the said James M. D. Webb." In cases where there is a limitation over to heirs or issue, the words "heirs or issue" shall be held to mean children. Civ. Code, § 3084. But grants to one and "her heirs by a particular person," or "her issue," convey an absolute estate, to the exclusion of any children which may be in life at the time of the conveyance. Civ. Code, § 3085; Whatley v. Barker, 70 Ga. 790, 4 S. E. 387; Johnson v. Sirmans, 69 Ga. 617; Ewing v. Shropshire, 80 Ga. 374, 7 S. E. 554. If the grant had been to Elizabeth Webb and "her heirs by the said James M. D. Webb," clearly she would have taken a fee-simple estate, under the above authorities. Likewise she would have taken a fee-simple estate had the grant been to her and "her issue." The grant is to her, "her heirs and issue by the said James M. D. Webb," and the combination of two sets of words of limitation cannot by any sort of legal alchemy convert them into words of purchase. We therefore conclude that Elizabeth F. Webb took the full beneficial title; and, even if any part of the legal title ever vested in James M. D. Webb, he held it as trustee, and the trust became executed by virtue of the married woman's act of 1866. Two-thirds of the tract of land was sold by the sheriff as the property of Elizabeth Webb under process against her, and purchased by Walker, who conveyed it to Samuel Evans. So far as appears in the present record, James M. D. Webb had no leviable interest in the land at the time one-third undivided interest in it was sold by the sheriff as his property, and purchased by Samuel Evans. Therefore Samuel Evans obtained title, by virtue of the sales, to only an undivided two-thirds interest in the land.

3. But the executors of Samuel Evans set up that, under the two deeds to their testator, his possession until his death and their possession since then had been adverse, and for such a length of time as to ripen into a good prescriptive title. There was evidence to prove this contention. The court charged on this subject: "To constitute such a possession on the part of Samuel Evans as would ripen into a prescriptive title, it must appear that it was an exclusive possession; that is, it must be a possession in his own right and exclusive. If he knew of the interest of another party in the land, and the party occupied the land at the time he bought the land, his possession or acts of ownership would not be an exclusive possession, if that party was also exercising acts of ownership on the land. The occupancy and possession in that event would be the joint occupancy on the part of joint tenants, persons who were jointly interested in the land." The plaintiffs in error contend that there was no evidence to authorize a charge on the theory that Samuel Evans knew of the claim of title to any part of the land by the claimant. Under our construction of the deed, after the sheriff's sale to Walker and Walker's deed to Samuel Evans, he and Mrs. Elizabeth Webb became tenants in common; the former owning a two-thirds interest and the latter a one-third interest in the land. Elizabeth Webb died a year or two ago, leaving the claimant and his three sisters as her heirs at law. As there is to be a new trial, it is unnecessary to sift the evidence to ascertain the correctness of this contention. Under the present record, if the claimant has any title, it is only that of an heir at law of his mother. If the Samuel Evans title by adverse possession had ripened into a prescriptive title before the death of Elizabeth Webb, or after her death, the claimant would have no interest in the land. In any event he could not rightfully claim more than a twelfth interest in the whole, and a verdict finding that he was vested with title to a one-third interest is contrary to law and evidence.

DUKE et al. v. NEISLER & NEWSOM.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 16, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 48*)—DESCRIPTION—UNCERTAINTY.

A mortgage containing a description of the property mortgaged in the following language: "Our crop planted this year, and on which said fertilizer is used"—is not void for uncertainty in the description of the property upon which a lien is created.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 93-95; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 232*)—FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY.

Where a mortgage fi. fa., issued upon the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, is being enforced by a levy upon property of a husband, as appears from statements in the affidavit of illegality filed by the husband and by the wife, the question as to whether the wife signed the mortgage note as principal or as surety is not material, inasmuch as the mortgage, if valid in other respects, is being enforced solely against the property of the husband.

3. REVIEW.

The other assignments of error presented in the record are without merit and require no discussion.

Error from Superior Court, Crawford County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Action by Neisler & Newsom against Mittle A. Duke and E. C. Duke. Judgment for plaintiffs. E. C. Duke filed affidavit of illegality. Judgment against claimants, and they bring error. Affirmed.

R. H. Culverhouse and L. D. Moore, for plaintiffs in error. H. A. Mathews, for defendants in error.

BECK, J. Neisler & Newsom foreclosed a chattel mortgage against Mittle A. Duke and E. C. Duke. The property specified in the mortgage as that upon which a lien was created is described as follows: "Our crop planted this year, and on which said fertilizer is used." The mortgage fi. fa. was duly issued and levied on the following property: "Two hundred bushels of cotton seed more or less, in the house; also 1,400 lbs. seed cotton in house; also 15 bushels of corn in house, more or less; 2 bales of seed cotton in field, more or less." E. C. Duke and his wife, Mittle A. Duke, filed separate affidavits of illegality. The affidavit of illegality filed by E. C. Duke was, in substance, that he had never given to the plaintiff a mortgage which they would have the legal right to foreclose; that the description of the property upon which it is claimed that a lien was created was so vague and uncertain that the instrument was ineffectual to operate as a mortgage. The other grounds contained in his affidavit of illegality it is unnecessary to set out, as none of the grounds of the motion for a new trial which we have under review refer to them. The affidavit of illegality filed by Mrs. Duke alleged that the mortgage fi. fa. was proceeding illegally on the following grounds: "(1) Deponent is the wife of E. C. Duke, and has no interest in the property levied on. (2) Deponent's husband, E. C. Duke, is a renter from said deponent. (3) Deponent never signed any mortgage with deponent's said husband, but did sign a note with him to plaintiff, and she signed said note as security for her husband, E. C. Duke. (4) Deponent says that her signature to said note is void in law, for the reason that a married woman cannot be security for her husband." The jury returned a verdict finding "against the affidavit of illegality." A motion for a new trial was made and overruled.

1. The mortgage sought to be foreclosed and enforced was not void because of insufficiency in the description of the property upon which a lien was created. "It is only when a description of premises is manifestly too meager, imperfect, or uncertain to serve as adequate means of identification that the court can adjudge the description insufficient as matter of law." Broach v. O'Neal, 94 Ga. 474, 20 S. E. 113. See, in this connection, the case of Patterson v. Evans & Turner, 91 Ga. 790, 18 S. E. 31. In the case of Boulware's Adm'r v. Pendleton, 6 Ky. Law Rep. 727, it was held that description of property in the following words occurring in a mortgage: "My present crop of tobacco and other crops with other property to me belonging"—was too indefinite a description as to any of the property except the tobacco crop. In the case of Crine v. Tifts & Co., 65 Ga. 644, it appears that the question was raised as to whether a mortgage was invalid as such because of the insufficiency of the description of the property mortgaged, and it was urged that the description was "too vague, uncertain, and contradictory"—the description being in these words: "As an advance on my crops of cotton, corn, oats, etc., growing and to be grown in the year 1879, the same being now planted, to enable me to make my said crops; and I do hereby give them a mortgage on all my said crops to take effect as soon as my said crops are planted." But this court held: "The purpose was to create a lien by mortgage on all crops already growing or to be grown, and on that to be grown to fix the lien when planted. It is a little confused, but such is the meaning, and the description is sufficient, as it covers all the crops of that year. The crops levied on must have been all planted, as the earliest mortgage is dated the 19th day of April, and the other two in May. From the evidence, it is barely possible that a little cotton was planted afterwards. Certainly the execution should not have been quashed and the levy dismissed on this ground." In the instant case it is evident that the mortgagor intended that the lien sought to be created should cover his entire crop, and the property mortgaged is further identified as being the crop planted in the year in which the mortgage was given and "on which said fertilizer is used." We are of the opinion that the court correctly held that the mortgage could not be declared as a matter of law void for uncertainty in the description of the property mortgaged.

2. Inasmuch as Mrs. Mittle A. Duke disclaimed any title to the property levied upon by the mortgage fi. fa., it is unnecessary to decide whether the charges of the court relative to the contention upon her part that she signed the mortgage note, not as principal, but as surety, correctly submitted that issue or not. The mortgage fi. fa. is not being enforced against her or any of her property, and, even if she is not liable under the instrument foreclosed as a mortgage, that fact affords no reason why the mortgage execution, which the plaintiffs are seeking to enforce at present solely against property which she says belongs to her husband, should not proceed, unless he can show some valid reason for not enforcing the fi. fa. against his property.

STEWART v. HILL et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 16, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 8*)—CONSTRUCTION.

The act approved December 17, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 63), as amended by the act approved August 7, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 91), relating to the employment of tenants and croppers, and making it unlawful for any person to employ or contract with, as tenant or cropper, any person under contract with another, is penal in its nature, and is to be strictly construed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE TO CHARGE ON ISSUES.

This suit having been brought to recover damages of the defendant under the provisions of the acts referred to in the foregoing headnote, and the distinct issue having been raised by the allegations of the petition and the answer of the defendant as to whether the renting of certain lands by the defendant was to a party between whom and the plaintiffs the relation of landlord and cropper existed, or to the wife of such party, the failure of the court, in the course of his instructions to the jury, to charge them upon this issue, was error; there being some evidence to support the contentions of the defendant in reference thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

Error from Superior Court, Taliaferro County; D. W. Meadow, Judge.

Action by C. A. Hill and W. H. Burwell against D. S. Stewart. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

C. A. Hill and W. H. Burwell, as landlords of B. F. Rogers, brought suit against D. S. Stewart, alleging that the latter rented lands for the year 1907 to said Rogers with knowledge of a similar subsisting contract between plaintiffs and Rogers for that year; that while the contract made by Stewart with their tenants was, on its face, taken in the name of Rogers' wife, this was a mere subterfuge to evade the provisions of the statute in such cases provided; that the real intent and purpose of renting said lands to Mrs. Rogers was to secure the services of her husband; and that the effect of the same was to disturb the relation existing between petitioners and said B. F. Rogers. Rogers had rented a two-horse crop from petitioners; and it was alleged that by reason of the unlawful interference by defendant with petitioners' tenant their lands had lain idle and unproductive. Petitioners sued for the value of 4,000 pounds of lint cotton, double the rental of a two-horse farm. The defendant denied the allegations of the petition, and averred that he did not rent lands that year to B. F. Rogers, but that he did in good faith rent a crop to Rogers' wife. He further averred that, even if he had contracted with Rogers himself, and furnished him lands as alleged, it would not have been in violation of law, so as to subject defendant to damages or to prosecution by the plaintiffs, for the reason that no valid and binding contract was ever made between the plaintiffs and Rogers for that year; but, whether valid or not, that there had been such a breach of the alleged contract on the part of plaintiffs as to leave defendant free to treat it as rescinded and at liberty to contract with Rogers, independently of such prior contract and without regard to it. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for 2,000 pounds of lint cotton at a stated price per pound. The defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and he excepted.

Hawes Cloud, for plaintiff in error. Samuel H. Sibley, for defendants in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). The act approved December 17, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 63), as amended by the act approved August 7, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 91), relating to the employment of tenants and croppers, and making it unlawful for any person to employ or contract with, as tenant or cropper, any person under contract with another, is penal in its nature, and is to be strictly construed, where suit is brought against one alleged to have violated the provisions of the first section of the act. That section provides: "That when the relation of employer and employé, or of landlord and tenant of agricultural lands, or of landowner and cropper, has been created by written contract or by parol contract partly performed, made in the presence of one or more witnesses, it shall be unlawful for any person during the life of said contract, made and entered into in the manner above prescribed, to employ, or to rent lands to, or to furnish lands to be cropped by said employé, tenant or cropper, or to disturb in any way said relation, without first obtaining the written consent of said employer, landlord or landowner, as the case may be." In the present case petitioners alleged that the defendant had violated the provisions of this section by employing one Rogers, while the relation of landlord and cropper existed between them and Rogers, under a parol contract which was still in life, by renting lands to Rogers and furnishing him lands to be cropped. And in another paragraph of the petition it was charged that the defendant, with intent to obtain the services of Rogers in making a crop upon defendant's lands, "did rent and furnish lands to Mrs. Rogers, the wife of the said B. F. Rogers, without the written consent of petitioners." And it was also charged in the petition that "the real intent and purpose of the defendant in renting said lands to said Mrs. Rogers was to secure the services of her husband in making a crop as aforesaid, and that the taking of the rent note from the wife was a subterfuge to evade the provisions of the statute in such cases provided." The defendant in his plea, while he admitted that B. F. Rogers and his family were residing on his lands, denied that he had rented land to B. F. Rogers, and alleged that the premises upon which B. F. Rogers and family lived had been rented by him to the wife of B. F. Rogers in good faith and "without any intention or idea of interfering in any way with any relation that may have existed between B. F. Rogers and plaintiffs." From the allegations in the petition and those contained in the answer it will be seen that there was a distinct issue raised in the pleadings as to whether defendant rented his lands to B. F. Rogers, or to the wife of the latter. And if the defendant did rent the lands to the wife, and not to her husband, between whom and the plaintiffs there existed the relation of landlord and cropper, such renting or furnishing of lands cannot have been a violation of the provisions of the statute which we have quoted above, unless, instead of giving a strict construction of the statute, a broad and liberal construction should be given to it, which would render it so comprehensive that, if one should rent lands to the wife of another between whom and other parties there existed the relation of landlord and cropper, this would constitute an infraction of the terms of the statute. We do not think that the provision against disturbing in any other way the relation between landlord and tenant, or landlord and cropper, should be given a construction which would render an act other than one of the same nature as those expressly inhibited a violation of this highly penal statute.

The jury received no instructions from the court, in the course of his charge, touching the material issue raised by the pleadings and the evidence as to whether the defendant rented the lands, to which B. F. Rogers and his wife removed from the lands of the plaintiffs, to Mrs. Rogers or to her husband. Under the evidence in the case it was clearly a question for the jury as to whether the renting of the lands by Stewart was to the wife or the husband; and it was also for them to decide whether, if the wife was nominally the contracting party, the contract between her and Stewart with reference to the rent was merely colorable, while the real understanding was that Mr. Rogers, and not his wife, was to be the tenant or cropper of the owner of the lands. The defendant was entitled to have the issue which we have stated above submitted to the jury with appropriate instructions; and, the court having failed to charge the jury concerning this issue, the defendant in the case should have his cause retried before another jury.

No other error of sufficient materiality to require the grant of a new trial is shown in the grounds of the motion, though portions of the charge excepted to contain language which is not an altogether accurate statement of the law applicable to the issues dealt with. Such minor inaccuracies will no doubt be corrected by the court in charging the jury on the next trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

2. TRIAL (§ 45*)—OFFER OF PROOF.

The memorandum book should have been admitted in evidence, although at the time it was tendered counsel failed to state in explicit terms what he proposed to prove by it; it appearing from a colloquy between counsel for both parties and the court, in reference to the admissibility of the memorandum, and from the testimony of the witness who had made the memorandum, that court and counsel must have known what entry in the book was offered in evidence and what were the contents of that entry.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 16*)—CONTRACTS—OFFER—ACCEPTANCE.

A resident of Bloomfield, Conn., owning a tract of land in Screven county, Ga., wrote to a party at Sylvania, Ga., that he would sell the land for $1,800 cash, and in such letter also wrote: "I am now sole owner, and can furnish good warranty deed, with perfect title. Kindly advise me at your earliest convenience if you are prepared to accept same. This same price will be stated to others. If I do not get this amount of money soon, will raise the price nearer to its cash value." Held:

(a) The offer in the letter meant that a cash payment of the purchase money was to be made in Bloomfield, Conn. Robinson v. Weller, 81 Ga. 704, 8 S. E. 447.

(b) When the party to whom such offer was made wrote the owner a letter, stating that the former had decided to accept the offer, that a deed to the land was inclosed and should be executed in a specified manner, and that "I shall be glad if you will execute this deed and send it to Citizens' Bank of Sylvania and draft on me for the $1,800," held, that there was not such an acceptance of the offer as made a contract between the parties; no tender of the $1,800 cash at Bloomfield, Conn., accompanying the alleged acceptance. Robinson v. Weller, 81 Ga. 704, 8 S. E. 447.

(c) It not appearing that any tender of the purchase money was made to the owner in Bloomfield, Conn., and there being no acceptance by the owner of the terms proposed by the other party, an action against the owner for specific performance of the alleged contract would not lie in behalf of the other party, and was rightfully dismissed on demurrer. Robinson

CITY OF ROME v. RHODES et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. June 22, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 64*)—CHANGE OF GRADE OF STREET—LIABILITY FOR DAMAGE TO ABUTTING PROPERTY—INSURANCE.

The owner of a lot and a two-story brick storehouse thereon in an incorporated city sustained damages thereto, resulting from the raising by the city of the grade of the streets and sidewalks, causing a depreciation in the value of the storehouse and making it necessary, for it to be available and of the same value it was prior to the change in grade, that the lower and upper floors, roof, and walls be raised. Subsequently a fire so damaged the building as to render it of but little, if any, value, except the walls. The owner received from an insurance company on account of such fire an amount nearly sufficient to rebuild such house, with its floors, roof, and walls raised to such an extent as was necessary for the purposes above stated. Held, that neither such fire, nor the receipt by the owner of insurance money on account thereof, will relieve the city from liability for the full amount of damages which it occasioned. 1 Sutherland on Damages, p. 406, § 158; Dec. Digest, Damages, § 64; 13 Cyc. 70, 71; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Meigs, 74 Ga. 857. And see Nashville Ry. Co. v. Miller, 120 Ga. 453, 47 S. E. 959, 67 L. R. A. 87.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 108*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The court committed no error in refusing a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence to the effect that the plaintiffs agreed with the insurance company that $1,945 was sufficient to rebuild the storehouse anew, as the verdict was for only $700, and was for a less amount than the evidence showed the damage to be.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 223, 227; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

3. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

It was not complained that any error of law was committed upon the trial of the case. The evidence supported the verdict, and the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing a new trial.

MCCLENDON v. STATE (No. 2,439.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 472, 475*)—EVIDENCE—EXPERT EVIDENCE.

The testimony of an expert as to his opinion as such is admissible upon any matter, if the opinion given relates to scientific or technical knowledge. The weight of such testimony, and whether its application to the proved facts is illustrative of the particular transaction under investigation, is a question for the jury. There being an issue in this case as to whether the prosecuting witness could see his assailant under a culvert at the time of the assault, as he claimed to have done, and the condition of the culvert, so far as appears from the record, not having been changed up to the time of the trial, it was not error for the court to permit the witness to testify that he went to the same culvert, at the request of the solicitor general, and that "the light extended angling under it for a distance of eight steps." It was for the jury to say whether there had been any change in the condition of the culvert, as to whether that change would have affected the result, and, indeed, as to whether they would attach importance to the testimony of the expert upon the subject of the distance to which the light extended, as illustrating the distance to which the light extended at the time of the alleged assault. The witness in question having stated the facts as to the distance of the electric light from the culvert, and the time of the night at which he made his observations, it was likewise for the jury to determine whether, in their opinion, the opinion of the witness was of any value, when applied to the testimony as to the nature of the culvert and its surroundings at the time of the assault. The condition of the culvert and the light at the time of the assault would necessarily be controlling; but the opinion evidence might be helpful to the jury, if conditions were the same at the time of his observations as they were at the time of the assault.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1059, 1063; Dec. Dig. §§ 472, 475.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 461, 494, 1153*)—EVIDENCE—EXPERIMENTS—OPINION EVIDENCE—SPEED.

The admission of testimony as to experiments must largely rest in the discretion of the trial judge; and the exercise of this discretion will not be controlled, unless manifestly abused. The weight to be attached to such testimony is for the jury, and varies according to the circumstances of similarity which the jury may find to exist between the experiment made or observations taken and the actual occurrence whose facts and features are under investigation. The opinions of witnesses as to speed and distance are admissible in evidence. Augusta Railway & Electric Co. v. Arthur, 3 Ga. App. 513, 60 S. E. 213.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 206*)—REVIEW.

Though the justice of the peace may have erred in refusing to allow the defendant in mortgage foreclosure to amend his bond, yet it does not appear that he erred in dismissing the affidavit of illegality; it not being disclosed that the affidavit contained any meritorious legal defense. The action of the judge of the superior court in dismissing the certiorari, brought to review the action of the justice of the peace, is therefore affirmed.

BUTLER, STEVENS & CO. v. HALL
(No. 2,318.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 750*)—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

It is too well settled to question or to require any citation of authority that a general assignment of error, excepting to a judgment overruling and denying a motion for a new trial, is sufficiently specific to bring under review all the grounds of error properly made in the motion for a new trial. The motion to dismiss the writ of error is without merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3081; Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 166*)—RELIEF—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY.

Two defendants were sued jointly as the makers of a promissory note. The defendant first named in the suit filed a plea of non est factum, which, by consent of plaintiff, was sustained. The other defendant was duly served, but did not appear and defend, and a judgment was rendered against him by default. An execution was issued and levied, and the defendant filed an affidavit of illegality on the ground that he was surety on the note and that the consent verdict in favor of the plea of non est factum as to the principal maker of the note discharged him from all liability thereon as surety. Held, that a motion to dismiss the af-affidavit of illegality, because "it contained no allegation that could not have been pleaded as a defense in the original suit out of which the execution was issued," should have been sustained. The court that rendered the judgment having jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, the defendant could not, by affidavit of illegality, attack the judgment for any cause that he could have set out as a defense in the original suit. (Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 458*)—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY—AMENDMENT.

While the affidavit which the defendant is allowed to file in a mortgage foreclosure for the purpose of making his defense is spoken of as an affidavit of illegality, it is not governed by the ordinary rules as to affidavits of illegality. It is amendable to the same extent as ordinary pleas. See Civ. Code 1895, § 5122; Ragan v. Coley & Co., 4 Ga. App. 421, 426, 61 S. E. 862, and authorities cited.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 458.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 311*)—DISSOLUTION AGREEMENT—RIGHTS OF PARTY.

Where one partner is indebted to another by promissory note, and dissolution of the partnership is agreed upon, and the statement of the bills payable and bills receivable of the firm is made up, and it is stipulated that the purchasing partner will accept the assets and assume the liabilities of the firm, and surrender the note which he holds against the selling partner, provided that the statement is correct as to the liabilities of the firm, but that he will hold the note until it can be further ascertained whether the liabilities have been correctly stated or not, and it is subsequently ascertained that there are other debts owing by the partnership, the partner holding the note may proceed to enforce it against the other, at least to such an extent as will indemnify him against his losses resulting from the excess of the liabilities over the sum at which they were stated. In such a case it would not be necessary for the purchasing partner, upon discovery of the fact that the liabilities of the firm had been understated, to offer to rescind and to restore the status before he could hold the other partner to liability on the note. The doctrine of restoration as a condition of rescission for fraud is not involved. The case turns on the agreement between the parties. See, however, Oliver v. House, 125 Ga. 637 (3), 54 S. E. 732.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1094*)—REVIEW—VERDICT.

The only issue in this case was whether the cow sued for was killed by "the running of the locomotive or cars of the railroad company," or died from some natural cause. There were slight circumstances from which the jury were authorized to infer that she was killed by the former, and there was no evidence to rebut the statutory presumption of negligence arising against the railroad company upon proof of that fact. The judge of the superior court on certiorari approved the verdict. This court will not disturb it.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§§ 95, 97*)—EFFECT OF FILING PETITION AND BOND.

Where the right of removal exists, and the petition and bond have been filed in the state court in conformity with the statutes of the United States, the jurisdiction of the state court comes to an end. The filing of the petition and bond in such case ipso facto removes the case, and no order of the state court is necessary to make the removal effectual. Thereafter the state court can take no action in the case, even to the extent of allowing a dismissal by the plaintiff. After the case has been thus removed, the plaintiff should apply to the federal court, if he desires to dismiss his suit. 4 Fed. St. Ann. pp. 265, 266 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 508); *Stone v. POWELL, J. The decision in Cummings v. State, 110 Ga. 293, 35 S. This language could not correspond more closely with the only proposition involved in the present case, if it had been written upon the record now before us, instead of having been written on the record in the Cummings Case. In obedience to this authority, the judgment is reversed.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 511*)—EVIDENCE OF ACCOMPLICE—CORROBORATION—SUFFICIENCY.

The circumstances corroborative of the testimony of an accomplice were insufficient to authorize the conviction of the defendant of the offense of burglary. While the law cannot lay down a rule to measure the extent of corroboration necessary, still where the only witness in a felony case is confessedly an accomplice the corroborating circumstances are not sufficient to dispense with another witness, unless they are such as to connect the defendant with the crime. It is not sufficient for a witness to corroborate as to the time, place, and circumstances of a transaction, if there is nothing except the statement of the accomplice to show any connection of the prisoners therewith.

Paul Smith and others were convicted of burglary, and bring error. Reversed.

Hawes Cloud and J. A. Beazley, for plaintiffs in error. Thos. J. Brown, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendants were convicted of burglary. One Ad O'Rear had been convicted of burglarizing a certain storehouse and of taking therefrom a certain pistol and some money. At a subsequent term of the court the present plaintiffs in error were indicted, and at the trial O'Rear testified that they entered the store while he watched. Naturally the case turned upon whether there was a sufficiency of corroborating circumstances to dispense with another witness. We are of the opinion that the circumstances relied upon by the state are insufficient, when taken by themselves, to lead to the inference that the defendants were implicated in its commission. That must be the true test, because primarily an accomplice must be corroborated by another witness, and the corroborating circumstances necessary to take the place of this second witness, being only in the nature of a substitute for other witnesses, must (as the testimony of such witnesses would be required to do) connect the accused with the commission of the crime. Pen. Code 1895, § 991, declares that: "The testimony of a single witness is generally sufficient to establish a fact. Exceptions to this rule are made in specified cases, such as to convict of treason or perjury, and in any case of felony where the only witness is an accomplice; in these cases (except in treason) corroborating circumstances may dispense with another witness." It is plain that the testimony of a corroborating witness, if one can be had, must in some way connect the defendant with the crime, and the same requirement must be applied to corroborating circumstances, if such (instead of another witness to the direct fact of the felony) are relied upon.

While slight evidence that the crime was committed by the defendants and identifying them with it may sufficiently corroborate the accomplice and authorize a verdict of guilty, and while the law cannot fix an exact rule by which to measure the amount of corroboration necessary, the nature of the corroborative evidence is well defined. The testimony must be such as, independently of the testimony of the accomplice, to lead to the inference that the defendant is guilty. It must in some way connect the defendant with the criminal act. As this court held in Altman v. State, 5 Ga. App. 833, 68 S. E. 928: "The rule is well settled that the testimony of an accomplice in a felony case must be corroborated by some independent fact or circumstance which, taken by itself, leads to the inference, not only that a crime has been committed, but that the defendant is implicated in its commission. Proof of the corpus delicti, independently of the evidence of the accomplice, is corroborative of the guilt of the accomplice, but does not at all corroborate his testimony as to the guilt of another." In the present case the accomplice was corroborated by the fact that the tracks of more than one man were seen near the window through which the store was opened. But there was no marks of identity indicating that the tracks were made by either of these defendants; indeed, no evidence by whom they were made. For this reason the tracks failed to connect the defendants with the crime.

In the next place, while it is a suspicious circumstance that the defendants stayed out all night in the woods, and did not go home the night the burglary was committed, this does not in any way connect them with the burglary, and is not inconsistent with the innocence of the accused. The fact that these defendants stayed out all night, and that a portion of the time Ad O'Rear was with them, does not prove, or even necessarily lead to the inference, that the defendants were with him at the time of the burglary, because the evidence shows that the defendants left him at Genie's house before they went to the woods, and it is probable that time enough elapsed for him to have committed the burglary before he returned to them in the woods. Nor does the fact that certain cans were found in the path which the defendants took in going to the woods, which had probably been contained in the store burglarized, necessarily raise the inference that the defendants participated in the burglary, or even that they were guilty of the offense of receiving stolen goods, by reason of the fact that they knew they had been taken out of the store. The case at bar is quite similar to that of Childers v. State, 52 Ga. 106, in which it was held that in a case of felony, where the only witness implicating the prisoners is himself avowedly guilty, the corroborating circumstances necessary to dispense with another witness must be such as go to connect the prisoner with the offense.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the corroborating circumstances in this case were insufficient in their nature to authorize the conviction of the defendants. The law does not fix the amount of corroboration necessary in such a case, but it does require that the nature of the corroborative evidence shall be such as to connect the accused with the criminal act, and such as necessarily to lead to that inference.

HUDGINS v. STATE. (No. 2,461.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

While a witness may be impeached by disproving the facts testified to by him, the attempted impeachment is a failure, no matter how many witnesses may deny the facts testified to by such witnesses, if the jury at last believes the witness sought to be impeached. Although only one witness testified in behalf of the state, and two witnesses gave testimony in behalf of the defendant directly contrary to the testimony of the state's single witness, yet, the credibility of the witnesses being exclusively with the jury, the inference that the state's witness was not impeached is conclusive, and there was no error in refusing to disturb the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Mrs. Richard Hudgins was convicted of an illegal sale of liquor, and brings error. Affirmed.

B. P. Gaillard, Jr., for plaintiff in error. W. A. Charters, Sol. Gen., and F. M. Johnson, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was convicted of a violation of the prohibition law; one witness testifying that he bought whisky from her upon a designated occasion and paid 60 cents for it. He named several persons who were present at the time. Two witnesses testified for the defendant, identifying the same time and place and the same persons as being present, and swore positively that the witness did not purchase any whisky from her. The jury found the defendant guilty, and it is now insisted by her counsel that the presumption of law is that these witnesses were worthy of belief, and therefore their evidence had the effect of impeaching Cain, the only witness for the state, who swore to the sale of liquor.

It is insisted (we assume, seriously) that Cain is impeached, because, under the provisions of section 1025 of the Penal Code, the facts testified to by him were disproved. The only trouble with the argument is that the whole question of impeachment in all of its phases is exclusively for the jury; and while the disproving of facts testified to by the witness is one of the methods of impeachment provided by law, still, inasmuch as the jury are the sole judges of the credibility of every witness, under this method one witness might impeach 25 who swore directly to the contrary of the testimony of the single witness. It is not a question of numbers, but a question of which witness or which testimony the jury believes. The fact that in this case the jury found the defendant guilty on the testimony of Cain alone, although two witnesses swore that what he testified was not true, is proof conclusive, from a legal standpoint, that the jury did not consider that what he had testified had been disproved. Measured by the rule of impeachment and the right and duty of the jury in the premises, the verdict, under the circumstances, affords conclusive evidence that the attempt to impeach was a failure, if the testimony of the witnesses for the defendant is considered as being used only for that purpose.

There is a wide difference between impeachment and an effort to impeach. The credibility of witnesses is a matter so exclusively within the province of the jury that an attempt to impeach (no matter which of the three statutory methods of impeachment is attempted) does not amount to an actual impeachment, unless the result shows that the faith of the jury in the testimony of the witness sought to be impeached was destroyed. There is no unusual feature about this case. It is but an exemplification of the general rule, which wisely permits the jury to pass upon the credibility of witnesses. We held in Jolly's Case, 5 Ga. App. 454, 63 S. E. 520: "The determination of the credibility of the witnesses is so exclusively within the province of the jury that the verdict finding a defendant guilty is not affected by the fact that that verdict is supported by the testimony of only one witness, whose testimony is directly in conflict with a large number of witnesses, who had equal opportunity of knowing the facts, and who, so far as appears from the record, are worthy of credit. In the absence of any error on the part of the court, or any irregularity which may have prejudiced the defendant, such a verdict, approved by the trial judge, is absolutely conclusive, because this court is without jurisdiction to review a finding upon the facts, which is supported by sufficient evidence."

Judgment affirmed.

WASHINGTON POST CO. v. SORRELLS.
(No. 2,312.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SALES (§ 38*)—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—FRAUD.

The law applicable to the undisputed facts demanded the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

Error from Superior Court, Clarke County; C. H. Brand, Judge.

Action by the Washington Post Company against R. P. Sorrells. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Washington Post Company sued Sorrells in a justice's court on a written contract, by which the defendant agreed to pay $58 for a copy of the "Executive Edition of the White House Gallery of Official Portraits of the Presidents." The judgment in the justice's court was adverse to the plaintiff, and it sued out a writ of certiorari to the superior court. The certiorari was overruled, and to this judgment plaintiff excepted. The undisputed facts are as follows:

The defendant entered into a contract to buy the portraits in question, induced to do so by a statement of the agent of the plaintiff that he had shown the work to the defendant's wife and daughter, and that they were well pleased with the portraits and had authorized the agent to tell him to purchase them. Relying upon the truth of this statement, he signed the contract. Upon his return home on the night of the day on which he signed the contract, he discovered that the agent had not had a conversation with any member of his family on the subject of purchasing the portraits, and the agent admitted to him next morning that the entire statement was untrue. The defendant immediately demanded a surrender of the contract or order, which was still in the possession of the agent. The agent refused to surrender it, and thereupon the defendant stated to him that, the contract having been procured by falsehood and fraud, he was not bound by it, and that he would under no circumstances accept the portraits if they were shipped; and he immediately wrote to the plaintiff, insisting on a rescission of the contract, and stating as his reasons the fraud that had been practiced upon him, that neither his wife nor daughter wanted the work, that it was absolutely worthless to him, and that he had been induced to order the portraits solely by the false statements made to him by the agent. The plaintiff, however, refused to consent to a rescission.

As stated, the foregoing facts were not disputed. The plaintiff contended that the defendant was bound, because the contract provided that it was "not subject to cancellation," and that the motive with which the defendant made the contract was no part of the consideration, and that, even admitting the fraud, the defendant was not damaged or injured thereby, and the case was one of damnum absque injuria.

Stephen C. Upson, for plaintiff in error.
Henry C. Tuck, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). It is not to be doubted that there is a clear distinction sometimes between the motive that may induce one to enter into a contract and the consideration of the contract, and ordinarily the motive with which one party enters into a contract is no part of the consideration, and, as Judge Nisbet expresses it, in Austell v. Rice, 5 Ga. 472, "a disappointment of the motive by the fraudulent misrepresentations of the plaintiff, is not a fraud upon the contract, and is not available as a defense." Motive "does not enter into the contract at all. The contract is to be viewed as it would be had there been no such motive. The conclusion is therefore irresistible that, if there was a fraud upon that motive, it is not a fraud upon the contract, and cannot be set up in avoidance of it." We do not think, however, that this principle controls this case. Here it was admitted that the contract was procured by a deliberate falsehood. The plaintiff, through its agent, was therefore guilty of moral as well as legal fraud. It is a universal principle of law that fraud voids all contracts. As happily expressed: "Fraud is a cause of nullity of the agreement, when the stratagems practiced by one of the parties are such that it is evident that without such stratagems the other party would not have contracted." 2 Chitty on Contracts, p. 1043, note "i." The defendant, in making the contract, did so relying upon the truth of the statement made by the agent to him that his wife and daughter had seen the work and desired him to make the purchase. The agent of the plaintiff adopted this stratagem of deception to induce the defendant to make the contract. Surely the law will not compel one to keep a contract which has been induced by both moral and legal fraud, evidenced by admittedly false representations made for the sole purpose of accomplishing the fraud, because belief in the truth of such false representations was the motive for the making of the contract. Of course, it is well settled that both fraud and injury must co-exist to invalidate a written contract. But, if the fraud produces any injury at all as a result, it will be sufficient.

In this case it is not controverted that the portraits of the Presidents were entirely useless to the defendant. If they were useless to him, this affected the consideration of the contract. It was not shown by the evidence that they were useful to anybody, or had any market value. If they had a market value, and the defendant could have sold them for what he paid for them, he would still have been put to some trouble and inconvenience in making a sale. It is probable that the portraits did not have any market value; for the assumption that they did is somewhat inconsistent with the extreme and unreasonable conduct of the plaintiff in attempting to hold the defendant to the contract which was admittedly induced by false representations. It seems to us that the defendant, under the admitted facts of the case, was entitled, in equity and good conscience, to a rescission of the contract. Before the contract had been forwarded by the agent to the principal, the agent was charged with his fraud and admitted it, and was requested to rescind. Upon his refusal to do so he was notified that the defendant would not pay for the portraits. Before any expense had been incurred by the plaintiff, or any steps taken for the performance by it of the contract, it was also notified by the defendant, in writing, of the fraud perpetrated on him by the agent. While the contract provided that it was not subject to cancellation, yet we think, for the reasons stated, it was subject to rescission at the instance of the party defrauded.

Judgment affirmed.

ISAACS v. STATE. (No. 2,583.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 202*)—
WAIVER OF DEFECTS—INSUFFICIENCY OF ACCUSATION.

The accusation was sufficient to withstand a general demurrer. Even if a further amendment had been required, a special demurrer, pointing out the defect insisted upon should have been filed. One who waives his right to be tried upon an accusation perfect in form as well as in substance, and takes his chances of acquittal, will not be heard, after conviction, to urge defects in the accusation unless those defects are so great that the accusation, by reason of its failure to charge any offense, is absolutely void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 640, 645; Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

2. FALSE PRETENSES (§§ 5, 27*)—ACCUSATION—SUFFICIENCY—"FRAUDULENTLY."

While it is essential that an accusation charging a violation of section 870 of the Penal Code shall state that the representations by means of which another was defrauded or cheated were made with intent to defraud, an averment that the representations were fraudulently made meets the requirement in this particular. A representation "fraudulently" made is one made both with intent to deceive and to defraud. To defraud necessarily includes to deceive. One cannot be defrauded, unless he is deceived in some respect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 32; Dec. Dig. §§ 5, 27.*]

For other definitions see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2955-2957.]

3. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 49*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

Error from City Court of Ashburn; R. L. Tipton, Judge.

A. Isaacs was convicted of cheating and swindling, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. T. Williams and Jno. B. Hutcheson, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Comer, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant in the court below was convicted of the offense of cheating and swindling. According to the allegations of the accusation he "did then and there commit the offense of cheating and swindling by means of certain false and fraudulent representations then and there knowingly made by the said A. Isaacs to the said G. R. Luke, to wit, by knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently representing to the said G. R. Luke that a certain imitation diamond stud, then and there in the possession of the said A. Isaacs, was in point of fact a genuine diamond stud, and did then and there by said false and fraudulent representation, then and there knowingly made by the said A. Isaacs, defraud and cheat the said G. R. Luke, and damage the said G. R. Luke in the sum of $135, for that, by said false and fraudulent representation then and there knowingly made by the said A. Isaacs to the said G. R. Luke, the said G. R. Luke was then and there induced and persuaded to exchange and trade to the said A. Isaacs, for the said imitation diamond stud, one certain genuine diamond ring, then and there the property of the said G. R. Luke, and of the value of $135." The defendant demurred generally to this accusation upon the ground that it charged no offense against the laws of the state of Georgia, and because the facts charged constitute no violation of any penal law of the state. The trial judge overruled this demurrer, after the accusation had been amended so as to charge the offense in the language above quoted, and the accused, by exceptions preserved pendente lite, complains that the judge erred in not quashing the accusation.

1. The special point now insisted upon is that the court erred in overruling the demurrer, because the accusation did not contain a statement of all the facts essential to charge the offense of cheating and swindling by false representations, as penalized by section 670 of the Penal Code, and especially because the accusation fails to charge that the statements made by the defendant were made with intent to deceive and defraud. The cases of Goddard v. State, 2 Ga. App. 154, 58 S. E. 304, and Jacobs v. State, 4 Ga. App. 509 (2), 61 S. E. 924, are cited in support of this proposition. We are of the opinion that there was no merit in the demurrer, and that the cases cited above are not apposite. The statement in regard to the representation is also qualified by the allegation that the representation was made for the purpose of cheating and swindling the prosecutor, because it is averred that the representation charged to have been made by the defendant was all false and fraudulent, and was made for the purpose of defrauding said G. R. Luke.

2. There is no merit in the point that the accusation fails to charge that the statements made by the defendant were made with intent to deceive and defraud. As appears from the wording of the accusation, it is expressly alleged that the representations made by Isaacs were knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently made, that the cheating was accomplished by the fraudulent representations referred to, and that the damage which Luke sustained was due to these fraudulent representations, in that by reason thereof the prosecutor was induced to make the exchange by which he gave a diamond worth $135 for a glass stud pin worth $1.50 at wholesale. It is essential, in any case of cheating and swindling which comes under the provisions of section 670 of the Penal Code, that it shall be alleged that the statements by which another was defrauded were made with intent to deceive. But it is not at all necessary that any particular verbiage shall be used, provided the idea is clearly and definitely conveyed by the language which is employed. In the accusation now before us it is distinctly stated more than once that the representations made by the defendant were knowingly false and fraudulent. If the statements made were fraudulent, they must have been made with intent to deceive and defraud. Any statement made fraudulently is made with the intention that it shall both deceive and defraud. One cannot be defrauded who acts with absolutely perfect knowledge of all the facts relating to the transaction, even though he may happen to sustain loss. In such a case he may use bad judgment, but he acts upon a knowledge of the truth. One must be deceived in order to be defrauded. "To defraud" includes to deceive. While the accusation in the present case does not in terms charge that the representations were made by the defendant with intent to deceive, it states it even more strongly by alleging that the representations made by the defendant were fraudulent. In the case of Wood v. State, 48 Ga. 192, on page 297 of the opinion, 15 Am. Rep. 664, "fraudulent" is defined as something that will deceive, cheat, and mislead; inducing belief in what is not true and causing one to act upon such belief. In West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 339, it was held that the allegation that lands were knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently represented to be clear of incumbrance was equivalent to the charge that the representations were made with intent to deceive. Inasmuch as accusations in the several city courts are amendable, the defendant, if he thought best to have the accusation fuller in any respect, should have specially demurred, and called the attention of the lower court, as he has called the attention of this court, to the specific defect insisted upon. Even if the accusation had not been full enough in some of the essentials pointed out in the Goddard and Jacobs Cases, supra, it was full enough to withstand a general demurrer, and the ruling in the case of Lanier v. State, 5 Ga. App. 472, 63 S. E. 586, applies. There was no error in overruling the general demurrer.

3. The evidence authorized the conviction of the defendant. The case turned upon whether the defendant knowingly represented that an imitation stud pin of very insignificant value was a diamond. He stated it was an heirloom in his family. Its size indicated that, if it was a diamond, it was very valuable. Another question in the case fairly submitted by the judge was whether or not the prosecutor had such opportunity for investigating the spurious diamond, before the exchange, as that his loss could not be attributed to representations. Both these issues the jury settled adversely to the contentions of the defendant. It cannot be said that the judge erred in refusing a new trial. Judgment affirmed.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v.
BLACKMAN. (No. 2,303.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. QUESTION NOT DECIDED.

It is a close and doubtful question as to whether a losing party in a jury trial can by direct bill of exceptions (and without the intervention of a motion for a new trial) bring up for review alleged errors committed on the trial, where it does not appear that the verdict was necessarily controlled by the alleged errors. The point is not decided.

2. TRIAL (§ 260*)—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

A reversal will not be granted because the trial judge refused certain requests to charge, where the same matters are fully and fairly presented in the general charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—GENERAL LEGAL PRINCIPLE.

Though the issue in the trial may present only a particular phase of a general legal principle which involves some things not directly pertinent to the case on trial, it is not improper for the court to state the general principle to the jury, provided he instructs them as to its particular application and limits their investigation accordingly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 587; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 291*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action by a railroad employé for injuries received through the alleged negligent act of a fellow servant, while it is true that the plaintiff must recover upon the particular negligence alleged, it is not error for the judge to charge the jury, in accordance with the statutes of this state as construed by the courts, that if the plaintiff shows that he was free from fault, and that he was injured by the alleged act of the fellow servant, it is to be presumed, until the contrary appears, that the defendant was negligent, and that upon such a state of facts the plaintiff is prima facie entitled to recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1136, 1137, 1140; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 121*)—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

It is not error, in a negligence case, to instruct the jury (if the facts make the instruction appropriate) that the plaintiff may show the defendant's negligence from the very happening of the injurious act in question, provided that the most reasonable inference to be drawn from the fact of the thing's having happened as it did is that, if the defendant had not been negligent in the particulars alleged in the declaration, the thing would not so have happened.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 218, 225; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

6. NEGLIGENCE (§ 119*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE—PLEADING AND PROOF.

If a plaintiff in a negligence case alleges a single specific act of negligence as the cause of his injury, he cannot recover without showing that that act was negligent and proximately contributed to the injury; but if he shows that act, and shows that it was not only negligent, but also that it materially and proximately contributed to his injury, he is not precluded from a recovery because other unalleged acts of the defendant (whether negligent or not) may have concurred with the act alleged in bringing about the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 200-216; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

Error from City Court of Savannah; Davis Freeman, Judge.

Action by R. C. Blackman against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Lawton & Cunningham, for plaintiff in error. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Blackman sued the railroad company for personal injuries. He was a boiler maker in the defendant's shops. A Pintsch gas tank, such as is used to supply gas on passenger cars, had become dented in a wreck. The foreman ordered Blackman to repair it by a process which he prescribed, and recommended as being safe, though it was a new process so far as the shop in question was concerned. Blackman had no special information on the subject. He had never had any previous experience in the repair of such tanks. The process he was directed to use was that he should couple the tank to the compressed air pipes in use in the shops, and then heat the dented portion, with the view that, as the heat softened the metal in the dent, the pressure of the air would cause this part of the tank to come back into symmetry with the rest of its contour. The plaintiff coupled the tank to the air hose, built his fire under the dent, and turned on the compressed air till the gauge which he had placed in the pipe line showed a pressure of 20 pounds. The foreman came up, and, seeing that the plaintiff was using only 20 pounds' pressure, opened wider the valve, which turned on the air, telling the plaintiff not to be afraid, that the tank would stand a pressure of 250 pounds. When the foreman thus opened the valve, the pressure, as shown on the gauge, rose rapidly to 60 pounds. The indicator showed about this figure when the plaintiff last looked at the gauge, and a moment later the tank burst with a violent explosion. The plaintiff was injured; but the extent of his injuries need not be set forth, as there is no complaint as to the amount of the verdict.

The petition charged that the defendant knew (actually or constructively) that the tank was likely to explode when a high pressure of air was put upon it; that the plaintiff was free from fault, was inexperienced in the particular kind of work, was excusably ignorant of the dangers attendant on doing the work, and was relying upon the express assurances and directions of the foreman that the work could be safely done; and that he could not have avoided the injury by any reasonable degree of care. He made four allegations of negligence: "(a) In putting plaintiff to work on said gas tank without giving him proper warning and instruction as to the danger of said work and the proper means of carrying it on; (b) in misinforming him as to the amount of pressure said gas tank would bear; (c) in turning on said compressed air, and thereby increasing the pressure to a highly dangerous point, thereby causing said explosion; (d) in causing the explosion of said tank without warning or notifying plaintiff that it was likely to explode." The defendant brings the case to this court by direct bill of exceptions, having filed no motion for new trial. No point is made as to the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. There is a general exception to the final judgment, but no assignment of error thereon. The plaintiff in error relies solely on seven exceptions to the charge of the court, which will be discussed in order.

The defendant in error has moved to dismiss the writ of error, on the ground that a direct bill of exceptions will not lie in such a case, that the alleged errors were not such as necessarily to have controlled the verdict, and that a motion for new trial was essential to the raising of the points complained of. The plaintiff in error says that the alleged errors are properly for consideration, though they do not control the verdict, and that there should be a reversal if the errors were prejudicial, though not necessarily controlling within the purview of the act of 1898 (Acts 1898, p. 92). Logically speaking, this point ought to be decided at the outset, and if we were at all sure that we knew how to decide it correctly, we would shape this opinion accordingly; but we have decided not to decide it, for, upon looking at the exceptions, we find that, though they present several right difficult questions, it is easier to decide them than it is to decide the point of practice, and the result we are reaching makes a decision on the practice question immaterial from a practical standpoint. The profession will probably be willing to pardon this confessed judicial "dodging," if they will only undertake to form an opinion on the question of practice involved, in the light of the following decisions: Ocean Steamship Co. v. Hamilton, 112 Ga. 901, 38 S. E. 204; Smith v. Smith, 112 Ga. 351, 37 S. E. 407; Ray v. Morgan, 112 Ga. 923, 38 S. E. 335; Darien Bank v. Clarke L. Co., 112 Ga. 947, 38 S. E. 363; Cable Co. v. Parantha, 118 Ga. 913, 45 S. E. 787; Henderson v. State, 123 Ga. 739, 51 S. E. 764; Anderson v. Wyche, 126 Ga. 398, 55 S. E. 19; Cox v. Macon Ry. Co., 126 Ga. 398, 55 S. E. 232; Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 48 S. E. 897; Lyndon v. Ga. Ry. & Elec. Co., 129 Ga. 353, 58 S. E. 1047; Taylor v. Reese, 108 Ga. 379, 33 S. E. 917; Taylor v. State, 108 Ga. 384, 34 S. E. 2. The statement just made is not intended as a reflection on the Supreme Court, and involves no such reflection. The general question involved is one upon which the judges of that court have, from time to time, honestly differed, and it is out of these differences that the doubt arises. The Lyndon Case, supra, has effected a partial reconciliation of the conflicting views; but a study of the question makes it palpable that the reconciliation is still yet partial only.

2. The first exception is to the effect that the court erred in not giving to the jury certain requested charges, instructing them that the petition did not allege certain acts as negligence, and that no verdict in the plaintiff's favor could be rendered on account of these unalleged things. The judge stated to the jury the four acts of negligence relied on by the plaintiff, and explicitly informed them that the plaintiff could not recover for any other acts. Indeed, throughout the whole charge the judge was extremely careful in reiterating to the jury from time to time that the plaintiff was to be strictly confined to the acts of negligence he had alleged. Instead of excluding the few things mentioned in the requests to charge, he excluded everything not included in the petition. We have no hesitancy in saying that the requested instructions were fully covered by the general charge.

3. The next exception is that the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "The defendant is not an insurer against injury to its employes. Its duty is to exercise ordinary and reasonable care with reference to places to work and things upon which the servant was required to work, and to furnish reasonably safe appliances for the use of its employes. If you find from the evidence that the defendant did this in respect to the matters involved in this case, you will find in favor of the defendant. If there was a failure on its part to use that sort of care, and if an injury occurred by reason of any negligence alleged and relied upon in the declaration, and if you should further find that the plaintiff in the case is free from fault, he would be entitled to recover." (The italics are ours.) This and the fifth exception, in which complaint is made that the judge stated to the jury, in the language of section 2611 of the Civil Code of 1895, the reciprocal duties and liabilities of masters and servants, may be considered together. The point made is that the judge should have confined the jury strictly to the particular theory charged in the petition, and that all reference to general duties and liabilities was immaterial and prejudicial surplusage. We cannot concur in this view. Not only do the general doctrines constitute the foundations upon which the specific instance rests, but a statement of them also tends to illustrate and to make clearer the conditions upon which a liability would attach in relation to the particular matter alleged. There is certainly no prejudicial error in the court's stating the general doctrine to the jury, where, by his further instructions, he so carefully limits their investigation to the particular delinquency in issue as did the judge in the present case.

4. The next exception is to the following charge: "In this case, if you find that the plaintiff was without fault on his part, and was injured by an explosion caused by the act of the defendant's foreman in turning on or directing the plaintiff to turn on an air pressure of 60 or 65 pounds into the tank under the conditions then existing, defendant would be presumed to be negligent, and would be liable to the plaintiff for such injury, unless you should find that the presumption has been removed in the manner hereinbefore set forth." The complaint is that this instruction authorized the jury to hold the company liable for negligence generally, and did not confine them to the particular acts alleged. The instruction was not erroneous. It related to the subject of burden of proof.

The act in question was that of a fellow servant. Under the statutes in this state, where a plaintiff employed by a railroad company is injured by the alleged negligent act of a fellow servant, he raises a presumption of negligence, adequate (unless rebutted) to sustain a recovery, where he shows that he was injured by an act of a fellow servant, and that he himself was free from fault.

5. The next exception is to the following charge: "Negligence may be shown by circumstances, as well as by direct testimony, and a jury may in some instances presume negligence from the mere happening of the event. In such a case, all of the circumstances and surroundings accompanying the event, or the happening of the event, should be considered by them; and, if it is such an event as in ordinary course of things would not have occurred if the defendant company had used ordinary care, they would be authorized to presume that the company was negligent, and to place upon it the burden of explaining the cause of the occurrence; and, in the absence of such explanation by it, they would be authorized to presume that the occurrence was caused by the negligence of the defendant or its agents. That applies, of course, gentlemen of the jury (as everything I shall say with reference to what constitutes negligence or not), to the allegations of negligence set up in the declaration, because you cannot go out of the borders of the declaration for negligence upon which to find the defendant liable. If it is to be found liable at all, it is because it was negligent in some one or more of the ways in which the declaration declares it was negligent. Now, this rule I have just given you must be applied with caution, and the jury should consider all the surrounding circumstances of the case, and then determine whether the rule applies in view of those circumstances." The instruction, fairly construed, means that, if the circumstances surrounding the happening of the thing that caused the injury were such as to make the inference that the occurrence was proximately brought about by one or more of the particular acts of negligence alleged more reasonable than any other inference that could be drawn under the circumstances, the jury would be authorized to conclude that the defendant was negligent in the respects alleged. We understand this to be the rule of circumstantial evidence applicable in civil actions. It is sometimes called by the sonorous designation of "res ipsa loquitur"; but the name is not material. It is only the principle that is important.

6. What has been said above practically controls the remaining exceptions; but, to cover all the points raised, we will say a little more on the subject. Carefully analyzed, the burden of the complaint presented by all the other exceptions is that, while the plaintiff was probably injured by an act for which the defendant was responsible, he ought not to hold his recovery, because he did not name that act in his petition. To make this plainer: The state of the evidence was such that the jury might have found that the explosion resulted from one of several causes: That some gas had been left in the tank, and that upon its becoming mixed with the air it exploded under the influence of the heat; or that by some chemical process the Pintsch gas had turned back into the original oil from which it is manufactured, and that, from the application of the air and heat, this oil had been vaporized into gas and had exploded; or that the compressed air, which is moister than the ordinary air, being forced against the hot metal under pressure, was converted into free hydrogen and oxygen, which, in combination with air, makes a dangerous explosive; or that the pressure of the air itself caused the explosion. The plaintiff's allegation was that the negligent cause of the injury consisted in the defendant's agent's "turning on said compressed air, and thereby increasing the pressure to a highly dangerous point." Under this allegation, if the turning on of the compressed air was a negligent and materially contributing cause of the explosion, the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover under his petition, though other negligent acts not alleged, such as leaving the gas or the gas-forming oil in the tank, may also have concurred in bringing about the result. In other words, if the tank would not have exploded, notwithstanding there was some of the gas or of the oil in it, if the compressed air had not been negligently forced into it, the plaintiff had the right to treat the act of turning in the air as the proximate cause of the injury, especially when the defendant had not, by special demurrer or otherwise, caused the plaintiff to make his allegation more specific as to details. Hence the insistence of the defendant that the court should have taken up the theories as to there having been gas in the tank, and as to there having been gas-forming oil in it, and should have told the jury that, if they found one of these theories to be true, the plaintiff could not recover, is not well founded. Whether it was negligent to turn on the compressed air depended on the surrounding circumstances. We think, therefore, that the trial judge gave the jury the proper legal aspect of the case, as made by the pleadings and the evidence, when he instructed them in substance that the plaintiff would be confined to the allegations of his petition, but that, if the thing alleged was a proximate cause of the injury, and was negligent, the plaintiff, if without fault, could recover. By shaping his instructions thus, he avoided the judicial quicksands which would have beset him if he had undertaken to explain to the jury how far the presence of gas or oil in the tank might or might not have affected the plaintiff's right to recover. He chose the simpler route—that of telling the jury directly on what sole theory the plaintiff might recover, instead of attempting to define this same theory by a process of exclusion—and, when it comes to charging a jury, simplicity, coupled with accuracy, is a thing much to be commended.

CAUDLE v. STATE (No. 2,614.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910.
Rehearing Denied July 5, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 292*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INSTRUCTIONS.

On the trial of an indictment for assault with intent to murder, the court charged the jury in effect that to make out the crime, all the ingredients of murder must exist except the killing, but failed to define the crime of murder. Held no error, where in the same connection the court charged that, to make a case of assault with intent to murder the evidence must show the use of a deadly weapon in a manner likely to produce death, with the specific intent to kill, and also fully charged the law of shooting at another, and of justification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 607-608; Dec. Dig. § 292.*]

2. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

The evidence for the state demanded the verdict, and neither the evidence for the defendant nor his statement to the jury showed any fact or circumstance of legal mitigation or justification, and the errors of law, if any were committed, were immaterial. Fallon v. State, 5 Ga. App. 659, 63 S. E. 806; Malone v. State, 49 Ga. 217; Spence v. State (decided May 14, 1910) 7 Ga. App. 825, 68 S. E. 443.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL PROPERLY GRANTED.

The court did not err in sustaining the certiorari and in granting a new trial. Fagan v. Jackson, 1 Ga. App. 24, 57 S. E. 1052.

2. GARNISHMENT (§ 164*)—EVIDENCE—ALLEGATIONS IN PLEADING.

Allegations in a party's pleadings are not ordinarily evidence in his favor. Although the suit between the plaintiff and the garnishee is described in the garnishment proceedings as being based on a judgment against the main defendant, and although the parties in a statement of facts agree that this is so—that is, although they agree that the plaintiff's claim was a proceeding upon a judgment rather than a proceeding upon an open indebtedness—this does not dispense with the necessity of the plaintiff's introducing the judgment in evidence before the final judgment can be lawfully entered against the garnishee; it being manifest that the agreement related to what the plaintiff claimed, and not to the truthfulness or untruthfulness of these contentions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

3. CERTIORARI (§ 37*)—PROPER PARTIES.

The defendant is usually not a proper party to a petition for certiorari brought by the garnishee to review a judgment against him (the garnishee) in favor of the plaintiff, and the joinder of the defendant in the application for certiorari is to be regarded as mere surplusage. While, in such a case, perhaps it is technically irregular for the judge upon the hearing of the certiorari to cause the petition to be amended by striking the name of the defendant as a party (as petitions for certiorari are not amendable), yet it is a matter in no wise affecting the merits of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 196*)—CERTIORARI—RIGHT TO REMEDY.

Under Toole v. Edmondson, 104 Ga. 783, 31 S. E. 25, certiorari lay from the judgment of the magistrate; the evidence being undisputed.

STATE v. RODMAN.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. June 13, 1910.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 159*)—OBSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAY—INDICTMENT—AMENDMENT.

Cr. Code 1902, § 56, makes indictments sufficient which, in addition to allegations as to time and place, now required, charge the crime substantially in the language of the common law or statute, or so plainly that the nature of the offense may be easily understood. Section 58 permits amendment before trial in case of a defect in form and amendments for variance between allegations and proof, if the amendment does not change the nature of the offense. The indictment in a prosecution for obstructing a public highway alleged that accused unlawfully closed up and obstructed a certain highway and public road leading from the [public highway by the] plantation of R. into the main public road from a certain church to another place, the bracketed words having been added by amendment after the state had closed. Held, that the amendment was properly allowed, since it was merely a detailed description of the offense, and the amended indictment charged the same offense as the original.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 505-514; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 133*)—OBJECTIONS—MODE OF OBJECTIONS.

The defect was apparent upon the face of the original indictment so that any objection thereto should have been taken by demurrer or motion to quash before the jury was sworn; Cr. Code 1902, § 57, requiring every objection to any indictment for any defect apparent on its face to be taken by demurrer or on motion to quash before the jury shall be sworn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 454-468; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

3. HIGHWAYS (§ 164*)—EVIDENCE—OBSTRUCTION—PROSECUTION—JURY QUESTION—DEDICATION OF HIGHWAY.

In a prosecution for obstructing an alleged public highway over uninclosed wood land belonging to defendant, evidence held to make it a jury question whether the public had acquired a right of way through defendant's land by continuous and adverse user for 20 years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 453; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

4. HIGHWAYS (§ 7*)—ESTABLISHMENT—PRESCRIPTION—ADVERSE USER—NECESSITY.

A prescriptive right arises in favor of the public after the continuous use of a way for 20 years if it runs through cultivated land, but it must also be shown that the user was adverse to the owner if the way is over uninclosed wood land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 10-18; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

5. HIGHWAYS (§ 17*)—ESTABLISHMENT—ADVERSE POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.

Where the same person owns both arable and wood land, that the public has acquired a prescriptive right over the cultivated land as a public highway is a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining whether the use of the way over the wood land was adverse so as to make it a public highway by prescription.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

6. HIGHWAYS (§ 164*)—OFFENSES—PROSECUTION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for obstructing a highway, in which it was claimed that the road obstructed had never been established as a public highway, a question whether the road, if open, would be of use to any one except persons of a certain farm and as to which road it would be best for such persons to take, was properly excluded; it being immaterial which road was the most convenient if the road obstructed was a public highway.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 451; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Chester County; Ernest Moore, Special Judge.

John Rodman was convicted of obstructing a public highway, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Gaston & Hamilton, for appellant. J. K. Henry, Sol., for the State.

GARY, A. J. This is an appeal from the sentence imposed upon the defendant for obstructing a public highway. The indictment under which the defendant was tried charged that he did willfully and unlawfully close up and obstruct a certain highway and public road, leading from the (public highway by the) plantation of James F. Reid into the main public road from Fishing Creek Church, to market at Smith's Turnout. The record contains the following statement: "It is hereby agreed that the words in the indictment inclosed in parenthesis, 'public highway by the,' were added to the indictment, as an amendment thereto, by the state, after it had closed, under order of the presiding judge permitting the amendment, over defendant's objection."

The first question that will be considered is whether there was error on the part of his honor, the presiding judge, in permitting the said amendment. Section 56 of the Criminal Code contains this provision: "Every indictment shall be deemed and judged sufficient in law which, in addition to allegations as to time and place, as now required by law, charges the crime substantially in the language of the common law or of the statute prohibiting the same, or so plainly that the nature of the offense charged, may be easily understood." Section 57 is as follows: "Every objection to any indictment, for any defect apparent on the face thereof, shall be taken by demurrer, or on motion to quash such indictment, before the jury shall be sworn, and not afterwards." Section 58 is as follows: "That if there be any defect in form, in any indictment, it shall be competent for the court, before which the case is tried, to amend the said indictment: Provided, such amendment does not change the nature of the offense charged; that if on the trial of any case, there shall appear to be any variance, between the allegations of the indictment, and the evidence offered in proof thereof, it shall be competent for the court, before which the trial shall be had, to amend the said indictment according to the proof: Provided, such amendment, does not change the nature of the offense charged; and after such amendment the trial shall proceed in all respects and with the same consequences, as if no variance had occurred, unless such amendment shall operate as a surprise to the defendant, in which case the defendant shall be entitled, upon demand, to a continuance of the cause." The exceptions raising this question cannot be sustained for the following reasons: (1) The indictment as originally drawn charged the obstruction of a highway or public road by building a wire fence across the same, and the offense was set out so plainly that the nature thereof might be easily understood. The amendment related to the detailed description of the offense, and, after the indictment was amended, it still charged the same offense, to wit, the obstruction of a highway or public road. (2) The defect was apparent upon the face of the indictment, and the objection should have been taken by demurrer or on motion to quash before the jury was sworn. State v. Gilchrist, 54 S. C. 159, 31 S. E. 866; State v. Phillips, 73 S. C. 236, 53 S. E. 370; State v. Weaver, 74 S. C. 417.

54 S. E. 615; State v. Hamilton, 77 S. C. 333, 57 S. E. 1098; State v. Means, 80 S. C. 401, 61 S. E. 898. (3) It was competent for the court to amend the indictment so as to conform to the proof when there was a variance between the allegations and the evidence offered in proof thereof, as it was not made to appear that the amendment changed the nature of the offense, or that it operated as a surprise to the defendant.

The next question that will be considered is whether the circuit judge erred in refusing to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant on the ground that there was no testimony whatever tending to prove that the public had acquired a right of way through the defendant's uninclosed wood land by continuous and adverse user for the period of 20 years.

We quote from the testimony of the following witnesses:

J. F. Reid: "Q. When Mr. Rodman bought that land, all this land in here was in original forest? A. Most of it. Q. And he has cleared it up, and put it in cultivation since he got hold of it? A. Yes, sir. Q. And the roadway where people traveled in there, before he bought the land, was not inclosed by any fence or anything of that kind? A. I don't think so. Part of it was, and part of it was not. Q. How much? A. I can't remember. I remember there was a big fence through there when I was a boy. Q. When he bought it, was it all in woods? A. I think so. The biggest part of it. Q. And there was no fence there then? A. No, sir. Q. Which one of these roads was it, you say, had been shifted after Mr. Rodman bought the place? A. This road has been shifted (indicating). The whole travel used to go down here, somewhere (indicating), and went through the woods; and he has cut that out and moved it over."

Hugh Jennings: "Q. You say you didn't know anything about this situation until seven years ago? You were a stranger in that community until then? A. Yes, sir. Seven years this fall. Q. Was this land cleared up or was it still in woods (indicating)? A. Yes, sir; it was cleared up. On the road it was cleared up."

I. C. McFadden: "Q. It has been 14 or 15 years since you went through that road? A. Yes, sir. It used to be in woods, but it is cleared up now. Q. It was in woods, almost all of it, up to the time Mr. Rodman bought it? A. Yes, sir."

W. H. Simpson: "Mr. Glenn: You traveled principally that one (indicating)? A. Yes, sir. Q. And this one here went through the woods? A. Well, both were principally through the woods."

John Rodman (defendant): "Q. Mr. Rodman, you live on this place, where they claim you stopped up a public road? A. Yes, sir. Q. Will you state now when you first saw that road? That place where they say this road is going down towards Mr. Reid's place? A. It was in the spring of 1902, I think it was. Q. Well, what was the condition of it, or was there any road there, or what was there? A. Well, it seemed like a path that they worked on each side of, about half as wide as a wagon road. Q. You say worked on either side. You mean they cultivated the land? A. Yes, sir."

There was also testimony to the effect that the road had been used by the public for 70 years, and that Crawford, a former owner of the land, had placed a causeway over the road at a point where it was necessary.

The rule in this state is that a prescriptive right arises in favor of the public after the continuous use of a road for 20 years, when it runs through cultivated land, but that, when it passes over uninclosed wood land, it must also be shown that the user was adverse. State v. Sartor, 2 Stro. 60; State v. Floyd, 39 S. C. 23, 17 S. E. 505; State v. Tyler, 54 S. C. 294, 32 S. E. 422; Earle v. Poat, 63 S. C. 439, 41 S. E. 525; Kirby v. Railway, 63 S. C. 494, 41 S. E. 765; State v. Toale, 74 S. C. 425, 54 S. E. 608; Commonwealth v. Mfg. Co., 76 S. C. 382, 57 S. E. 201; Moragne v. Railway, 77 S. C. 437, 58 S. E. 150; State v. Washington, 80 S. C. 376, 61 S. E. 896. When, however, the same person is owner, both of the arable land and the wood land, and the public has acquired a prescriptive right over the cultivated land, this is a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining whether the use of the road through the wood land was adverse.

There is another reason why the exceptions raising this question cannot be sustained. Even if there is not a single circumstance standing alone tending to prove adverse user, nevertheless, when the facts and circumstances are considered in connection with each other, it might reasonably be inferred by the jury that the user was adverse. Dantzler v. Cox, 75 S. C. 334, 55 S. E. 774; Wertz v. Railway, 76 S. C. 388, 57 S. E. 194.

We will consider lastly whether there was error in refusing to allow the defendant's witness J. M. Saye to testify in answer to the following questions: "Q. Now, this disputed road, Mr. Saye, would that, if open, be of any use to anybody, except those on Mr. Reid's place? Q. Which road would they naturally follow? Which road would be the best for them to take?" The exception raising this question is disposed of by the case of State v. Harden, 11 S. C. 360, in which it was held that the refusal of the circuit judge to charge the jury that the defendant should be acquitted of obstructing a public road, if he had opened a new road, and one equally as convenient, in place of the old road, was not erroneous.

These views practically dispose of all other exceptions.

Judgment affirmed.

NORFOLK & O. V. RY. CO. v. CONSOLIDATED TURNPIKE CO. et al.†

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 9, 1910.)

1. ESTOPPEL (§ 68*)—CHANGE OF POSITION IN SUBSEQUENT JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

A litigant cannot in a subsequent proceeding take a position in conflict with that taken by him in a former proceeding, which latter position is to the prejudice of the adverse party, where the parties are the same and the same questions are involved; and hence, where the purchaser at a receivers' sale of land subject to a trust deed, which lands the receivers had sought to condemn, claimed under the condemnation proceedings brought by the receivers, and enjoined the trustee and another from enforcing the trust deed until there was a decision in such proceedings, such purchaser could not subsequently, in the condemnation suit, deny that the receivers who brought such proceeding had authority to institute it, or that their petition therein was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 165-169; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. APPEARANCE (§ 9*)—"GENERAL APPEARANCE."

An appearance for any other purpose than questioning jurisdiction for want of process, defect of process, defective service thereof, or because the action was commenced in the wrong county, etc., is general, and not special, though accompanied by the claim that the appearance is special; and hence an appearance to move to vacate a cause, or to dismiss or discontinue it, because plaintiffs' pleading does not state a cause of action, which is equivalent or analogous to a demurrer, amounts to a general appearance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-52; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3061, 3062.]

3. ESTOPPEL (§ 68*)—CHANGE OF POSITION IN SUBSEQUENT JUDICIAL PROCEEDING.

Where the purchaser at a receivers' sale of land subject to a trust deed, which land the receivers had sought to condemn, claimed under the condemnation proceedings brought by the receivers, and by alleging the pendency thereof long after the expiration of three months from the date of filing of the commissioners' report obtained an injunction restraining the trustee and another from subjecting the property sought to be condemned to the trust deed, such purchaser was estopped from subsequently contending that the condemnation suit should ipso facto be vacated and dismissed on the ground that the report of the condemnation commissioners had been filed more than three months without payment of the damages either to the owner or into court, as expressly required by Code 1904, § 1105f, subsec. 27.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 165-169; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 133*)—CONDEMNATION—COMPENSATION—IMPROVEMENTS BY CONDEMNING PARTY.

Where a corporation, with power of eminent domain, takes possession of land for its purposes under a warranty deed, and makes improvements, and afterwards institutes condemnation proceedings to extinguish a trust deed, the value of the improvements should not be considered in ascertaining compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 361½; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 241*)—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

Under Code 1904, § 1105f, subsecs. 9-13, relating to the method of payment for land taken, if the condemning company is not in possession when the report of commissioners is confirmed, it can acquire title and right of possession only by paying such sum into court, or to the party entitled; and if such company is in possession at such time, as it may be where there has been a prior report not confirmed, and the confirmed report increases the compensation, the condemning company has no right to possession until full payment into court, or to the party entitled, and the statute confers no authority to enter a personal judgment. Held, that a personal judgment is improper and hence a judgment requiring the condemning company to pay the sum ascertained into some national bank in a specified city within three months was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 621, 624; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 167*)—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Though the words of a statute are broad enough in their literal extent to comprehend existing cases, they must be construed as applicable only to cases that may thereafter arise, unless a contrary intention is unequivocally expressed therein; and there being nothing in Code 1904, § 1105f, subsec. 27, as amended by Acts 1906, c. 257, providing that if, in a condemnation proceeding, the amount ascertained by the commissioners be not paid either to the party entitled or into court within three months from the filing of the report, the proceedings shall, on defendant's motion, be vacated as to him, and not otherwise, to show that it was intended to have a retroactive effect, it cannot be deemed to have such effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 451; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

7. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 255*)—WRIT OF ERROR—NECESSITY FOR OBJECTIONS IN LOWER COURT.

Where no objection was made in the lower court in condemnation proceedings that the commissioners' report was not in accord with the order appointing them, the question cannot be raised on writ of error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 666; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Norfolk County.

BUCHANAN, J. This is a condemnation proceeding instituted in the circuit court of Norfolk county by the receivers of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia in the cause of Fink v. Bay Shore Terminal Company and Others. Before a consummation of the proceedings for condemnation, the property sought to be condemned, together with other property, was sold under a decree in the cause in which the receivers were appointed, the sale confirmed, and the purchaser, the Norfolk & Ocean View Railway Company, the plaintiff in error, received a conveyance of the property purchased, "with the benefit of and subject to all suits or proceedings which have been or may be instituted by the said receivers."

At the time of the institution of the proceedings to condemn, the predecessor in title of the plaintiff in error was in possession of the property sought to be condemned, under a conveyance from the Consolidated Turnpike Company which purported to convey, with covenants of general warranty, the land sought to be condemned, but which at that time was subject to a lien created by a deed of trust properly recorded.

When the report of the commissioners appointed in this proceeding to ascertain the compensation and damages for the property to be condemned was filed, it was excepted to by appellee Arthur W. Depue, one of the holders of the bonds secured by the said deed of trust. Before any action by the court upon the said report and the exceptions thereto, the grantor company in the deed of trust having defaulted in the payment of interest on the bonds secured by it, a judgment was rendered against that company, and a bill filed to subject the trust property to the payment of the debts secured upon it. Thereupon the appellant filed a pleading in the Circuit Court of the United States in the cause in which the property had been sold, for the purpose, among others, of enjoining and prohibiting Walter H. Taylor, the trustee in the said deed of trust, and Depue, one of the beneficiaries therein, from enforcing the same against the property sought to be condemned until there had been a decision of the state court in this condemnation proceeding. That court granted the relief, and the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, upon appeal, affirmed the lower court.

After Taylor, trustee, and Depue, appellees, had been enjoined from enforcing the lien of the said deed of trust until there had been a decision of the state court in the condemnation proceeding, Depue abandoned certain of his exceptions to the report of the commissioners of condemnation, in which abandonment Taylor, trustee, united, and they moved the court to confirm said report in so far as it ascertained compensation, etc., for the land taken, including the improvements placed thereon by the appellant or its predecessor in title. At the same time the appellant, which had never been made a party to the condemnation proceeding, appeared specially, as it claimed, and moved the court to dismiss and vacate the proceedings had in the cause, and to discontinue it. The court overruled the appellant's motion, held that its appearance was general, entered an order sustaining the motion of the appellees allowing compensation for the land taken, including the value of the improvements placed thereon by the appellant or its predecessor in title, directed that the appellant within three months deposit that sum, with interest, in some national bank of the city of Norfolk, to the credit of the court, and subject to its further order. To that order this writ of error was awarded.

The first error assigned is to the action of the trial court in appointing commissioners in the cause, based upon the following grounds:

(1) The petition was filed and the motion made by receivers of the Circuit Court of the United States, who had no authority under the statute law of Virginia to institute such proceedings.
